Mr. Speaker, not so long ago, at the cost of billions of dollars, untold suffering, and the death of more than 130,000 men, this Nation fought a war to make the world safe for democracy.

Again the warmongers, who seldom fight and never pay, the money changers, who squeeze their fool's gold out of the blood and the suffering of the common people, are raising the cry that, for the preservation of civilization and our own freedom, we must again join the war-mad nations of Europe in their bloody, senseless, wholesale slaughter of enslaved men, innocent women, helpless children.

It is well, it is good, to be generous; to be helpful to others. It may be expedient for us in our own interest to aid those others, upon whose success, so many would have us believe, our own freedom depends.

One thing is sure. One thing is certain. It is futile to talk, to act, to expend treasure, to waste lives, if, at the end of the road, we find this Nation either unable or unwilling to protect the liberty of its citizens.

"For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" has been ofttimes repeated. What have we gained by fighting to protect the democracies of the world, the freedom of the common man of Europe, if, when the day of battle has ended, when the sun has gone down into a sea of blood, when its light no longer makes visible the graves of the millions of men who have died in vain, our own citizens are deprived of the freedom which for so long has been theirs?

When, because of his sins, God drove Adam from the Garden of Eden, He said, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." From that day to this, man, if he would live, has been forced to work. The right to work is a God-given right. The right to work is a right guaranteed by our Constitution. The right to work is a necessity to man's existence.

Yet here in so-called free America today, men—thousands of them—are denied the right to earn a livelihood for themselves, for their families; to provide for their old age, to render their future secure.

This Government of ours exists only because it can levy taxes upon its citizens. It can levy taxes only when its citizens are profitably employed. Denied the right to work, men cannot pay taxes for the support of their government. How foolish the government which denies protection to the man who earns the wage out of which comes the tax which enables that government to exist. How stupid the government which permits another to share its power to tax. How utterly devoid of political morality is the government which joins hands in partnership with those who by might, without semblance of right, prey upon the man who must earn his daily bread by his toil.

Never, no, never in all history, has a greater shame come to any nation than that which is with us today because of our cowardice, our failure to deal with this situation. The fate of a nation whose boast it is that it is the richest, the greatest, the most powerful Nation in all the world; which loudly proclaims that it is the last outpost of civilization; from whose Statue of Liberty there flames the torch of liberty, rests in the hands of those who are either so thoughtless, so ignorant, or so cowardly that they will not protect the right of the man who but desires to earn the food which sustains life, the clothing which keeps him from freezing, the shelter which protects him from the elements.

The right to work is an absolute right. It is not a qualified right. No man, no organization, no municipality, no government has the right to deny to man the means of sustaining himself—the right to exist.

That this Government of ours is doing that very thing—that is, permitting the levying of tribute, the qualifying of a man's right to keep body and soul together—is shown by the communications which have been placed by me in the RECORD. It is shown by excerpts of a letter attached hereto, and this letter is but one of many.

For almost a year this Congress has been in session. For an equal length of time we have known that democracy no longer prevails in these United States of America. We have known that an essential, constitutional, moral right has been, and is being, denied to thousands of our citizens. For more than a month we have known that the cost of our whole program of national defense has been and now is being increased; that its scope has been and is being limited.

Is it because we fear the voting power of organized minorities that we refuse to take action, to give relief? The most damning thing that can be said against democracy is that when it sees its very existence threatened by unlawful activities—when it knows that its citizens are being deprived of the rights given them under their form of government and which they must have the privilege of exercising, unhampered and untrammeled, if they and the Nation are to endure—it neglects or refuses to take adequate measures for its own protection.

Preserve the democracies of the Old World is the cry. My plea to you is preserve democracy here in America by restoring to the individual the opportunity to work, to labor for the defense of his country, which has so long been denied him.

Aid to preserve the democracies of Europe; yes. But first the restoration of democracy here at home.

To those who insist that we fight the dictators abroad, restore democracy to the people of the Old World, let me quote the words of Saint Matthew, who wrote:

And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?

Or how wilt thou say to thy brother: Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye?

Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye.

As a preliminary to casting out the dictators of Europe, restoring democracy to the people of Europe, let us here in Congress cast out the dictators, the collectors of tribute, and restore to the American workingman his right to work.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I should like to make this observation in connection with the measure which the gentleman from Michigan has introduced and his speech of the present moment. Yesterday there came to my office a man who has been given a job at Fort Belvoir in a carpenter position in the construction program.

When he went to report for that job he found he could not go to work, even though the Government had a job for him and he had been called, if he was not a member of the carpenters' union. He had a conference with the union here and was told that he would have to pay $75 to work, but that the union officials would accept one-half of that $75, and after he had received his first month's pay the second installment of $37.50 could be paid.

I was told by this man that he had been without employment and that he did not have the money necessary to pay the union. There were tears in his eyes—he was confronted with a very real problem.

I have fought for labor legislation and know organized labor has done much to right many wrongs for those who toil. We do stop and wonder, however, as we meet situations such as the one I have described.

Mr. HOFFMAN. It is to obtain relief from situations similar to that which the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] has just mentioned that I dropped in the hopper today a bill which extends to the national-defense program the provisions of sections 276 (b) and (c), title 40, Code in force January 3, 1935, which were enacted to prevent a kick-back or a reduction of Federal wages on Government work, and which bill would add a new provision, making it unlawful to demand or receive any sum of money as a condition precedent to obtaining work or furnishing materials, or continuing to work or furnish materials, in connection with the national-defense program. This bill seeks to end the racketeering now prevalent on so many Government jobs.

Let me read excerpts from a letter which throw more light on what is happening at Fort Belvoir—within 25 miles of where Congress is in session. Let me quote excerpts from a letter received Tuesday, December 3:

This letter is signed, and the gentleman who sent it to me enclosed his social-security card. He enclosed three work permits, one given him, one for which he paid $5, both of these from a Washington union; a third one, for which he paid $5, purporting to be issued by a union at 25 School Street, Quincy, Mass., but which, as a matter of fact, was obtained at Quantico.

The writer of this letter suggested that I should not use his name, although he did state that I might do so if it would be helpful. He writes:

EAST FALLS CHURCH, VA.,
December 2, 1940.

HONORABLE SIR: The following statements and enclosures are absolutely true and correct in every detail, dealing with the national-defense project at Fort Belvoir, Va.

On Monday * * * I went to Fort Belvoir, Va., seeking work as a laborer. I was asked by the superintendent if I had a union card. I told him no; he advised me I would have to join the union in Washington, D. C., before he could put me to work.

It being late in the afternoon, I went to the laborers' union hall, 523 New Jersey Avenue NW., the next morning. * * * There was a colored man in the office. I told him I would like to have a permit to work at Fort Belvoir, Va. He told me a union card would cost me $58—$25 down and the balance of $33 to be paid within 60 days. This included 3 months' dues. I told him I did not have $25. He told me that was the union rules.

On Monday * * * I went to Fort Belvoir again with a man by name of * * *, a neighbor of mine, but we soon learned we had to pay $25 down for a card before we could go to work. * * * has a family and was in the some predicament as myself.

On Tuesday * * * I heard they were giving permits to laborers for $10. I borrowed $10 and went to Fort Belvoir on Wednesday. I stood in line at office in the rain about an hour. When my turn came I was told that I would have to get a work permit from the union before they could sign me up, but the young man told me that the union representative was out front in his car. I at once went to him with $10. He told me he could not take any money from me but would give me a permit if I would go to the union in Washington, D. C., by * * * and pay $5. I agreed to do this, and he gave me permit signed * * *, good until November 17, 1940. I went to the job on November 14, 1940. However, it was raining, and the superintendent told me to come back and start to work on Monday, November 18, 1940. This I did. So did my neighbor * * *, and we have been working at Fort Belvoir since then.

On Tuesday * * * one of the men I was working with asked me where I had gotten my card. I told him I had paid $5 for permit in Washington, D. C. He then told me there was a laborers' union at Quantico, Va., and that I could get a card for $12, $5 down and balance of $7 in 30 days.

On * * * I found a laborer who lived at Quantico, Va. I gave him my Social Security card and $5, and asked him to get me a permit, and on * * * he brought me this permit issued by Robert Bates, good for 30 days, and issued by Local Union 801, Quantico, Va.

However, when my neighbor * * * went to Quantico to get a permit, Robert Bates, a colored man, advised him the initiation fee had been raised to $23, 2 weeks ago.

No one will ever know what my family and myself have gone through these past 4½ years, but, sir, they have been more bitter than all of my past 55 years. And for my family's sake, I am asking that you protect my name if possible.

My work number at Fort Belvoir is * * *. I am working on section * * * and can furnish the names of any number of reputable men who are working on this same job, who have paid $5, $10, $15, and $25 for permits to work on this job and paid it in advance.

The Local Union, 801, in Quantico, Va., was chartered 6 or 7 months ago. At first, the initiation fee was $5. I have been told there are about 150 laborers working at Fort Belvoir from this Local 801 in Quantico.

There is also a laborers' union of the same type in Alexandria, Va., Local Union No. 1079. But for some untold reason the big shots from Washington, D. C., moved in on this job.

* * * * * * *

Will you kindly have these enclosures returned to me by last of this week. I have to show this permit to steward each Monday.

It's grand to be an American citizen, but, sir, it's hell to have to pay tribute to racketeers and crooks as a condition to work.

If I can help you in any way, though it may cost me my life in this fight, I'll be glad to help. You will note that I lost about 3 weeks' work before I went to work on this job, and should this complaint become known, I am sure I will be done for.

The profit in labor is too great and the choice whether to pay or not to pay should rest with the worker, not the labor faker. If you keep up the fight, you are sure to make this a decent place to work in.

Phoned in yesterday morning December 4—by a man who gave his name, who said that he was 63 years old; that he held a union card and had handled labor for many years—was the following information: He said that the contractors at Indian Head were Harwood & Nebbel, who had an office in the fifteen or sixteen hundred block on K Street NW.; that these contractors were putting up houses; that they were not employing carpenters' helpers for the reason that if they did the helpers would be forced to join a union.

He stated that instead of employing carpenters' helpers they were employing common labor at 80 cents per hour on a 40-hour week with overtime at time and a half.

He further stated that if one of these laborers aided in taking lumber from a truck he must at once join a union.

He further stated that a union representative on the ground whenever a truck drove in, at once inquired as to whether the driver was a union man; and if he was not, demanded that he join a union.

The same gentleman gave me further information, which was in substance that a young college graduate who had never had a day's experience as a carpenter was working on a Government job now as carpenter, within a few miles of Washington; that he earned or was paid $120 a week, the wage rate being $10 per day, but the young man getting in enough time and a half and double time to run the weekly wage to $120.

The gentleman phoning in the information said that he knew what he was talking about as he had relatives on Government work and he was himself a Government employee and a union man. He declined to permit me to use his name, stating that the reason was obvious—that he did not want trouble with union men.

Statements like the foregoing, whether they be true or false, create discontent and unrest, and the House should appoint a committee as I asked it to some days ago, to ascertain the facts as to the many very serious charges which have been made and many of which are not denied.

I am today introducing privileged resolutions in an effort to secure some of this information. Previously I have introduced resolutions seeking similar information, but the information, for some reason or another, has not been given. It is quite evident that the only effective way to uncover and put an end to this racketeering is through an investigating committee of the House.

Whether the Department of Justice is too busy to investigate this condition, whether it has investigated it, or whether it lacks authority to stop this sort of racketeering through prosecuting for conspiracy is all beside the point. The racketeering exists, extortion is being practiced upon the workingman. The cost of the defense program is being unjustly enhanced, the defense program is being delayed.

Sooner or later, unlawful interference with our national-defense program, with the right of a man to work, must be brought to an end. We might just as well do it now as to let it continue.

December 3, a retired major who stated his business was causing him to visit various camps, giving his name and rank, phoned the following information:

He said that at Camp Dix, 14 miles out of Trenton, N. J., the fee that must be paid by carpenters before they can work at the camp is $100; that the wage is $21 a day; that that was not the prevailing wage in that locality; and that when he asked as to why that wage was paid he was advised it was the wage in New York City, from which the carpenters came.

Another man, a resident of Washington, who gave his name and who is listed in the telephone directory but who did not wish to be quoted directly, said that he was studying carpentry in connection with the defense program in one of the Washington high schools.

He then said, "You were correct in your statement yesterday about the necessity of paying in order to get a job at Fort Belvoir. They are using 2,000 carpenters, and each one is required to pay $50—$25 down and the rest at the end of 3 days." He then asked, "Is that not a rake-off of $100,000?"

He further said that nearly 200 carpenters were fired because they were incompetent but that they did not get back the $25 fee paid.

One of the purposes for the introduction of the resolution for an appointment of a committee to investigate is to determine the accuracy of such statements as the foregoing. Some of these statements we know to be true; as to others, there is a dispute. The taxpayers are entitled to know the truth.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in connection with the bill S. 3729, which the House considered today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] is recognized for 10 minutes.

WAGES IN THE AIRCRAFT INDUSTRY

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, the entire aircraft industry is being threatened at the present moment with an outbreak of strikes, which promise to bring the whole aviation defense program to a standstill. The production of planes, so vital to this Nation as well as to Great Britain, is in danger of being stopped at any moment. The demands now being made for wage increases are not an outgrowth of the Vultee strike, since in many cases the demand for increases was made at about the same time at many aircraft plants. However, the demands have been altered to conform with the Vultee scale of wages, being reduced from the 75-cent minimum originally asked to 62½ cents.

The ink was not dry on the Vultee agreement before it was announced that higher wages would be sought from Ryan Aeronautical Co. at San Diego, North American Aviation, Menasco Manufacturing Co., and the Harvill Aircraft Die Casting Corporation of Los Angeles. Nor are the demands confined to the west coast, since the New York Times of yesterday reports that wage demands and organization efforts are being made at Farmingdale, Long Island, where the Ranger Aircraft Engineering Co., Republic Aviation Corporation, Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corporation, and Liberty Aircraft Corporation are the primary objects of the eastern attack. Workers at the Ranger Aircraft plant voted last month to go on strike, but so far have not done so.

The pretext for these increased wage demands is based upon the difference between the hourly wage rates paid in the automobile industry and the rates paid in the aircraft industry. The average hourly wage scale in the automobile industry is 94.9 cents as of July 1940. That of the aircraft industry for July is 73.8 cents. However, the aircraft industry provides steady annual employment for 52 weeks in the year, while that of the automobile industry is seasonal. In 1938 the average annual earnings of the automobile worker were only $1,184; and in 1939 were $1,440; whereas the annual average earnings for the aircraft worker, even at 73.8 cents an hour, will be $1,584. In the aircraft industry at the present time nearly half of the employees have been working for less than a year, whereas more than half of the automobile employees have worked for more than 5 years in the industry. Aircraft employees after their first year of work receive substantial increases of pay, so that for the older workers the average annual pay exceeds $2,000. The present annual wage of the aircraft industry now far exceeds the average of the automobile worker.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Would the gentleman care to insert here the average wage of the agricultural worker, which is less than $500 a year?

Mr. COSTELLO. I might state to the gentleman that if we go into the nonmanufacturing field we will find it is very much lower than either the automobile or aircraft industry, and likewise the average wage for all manufacturing industries is considerably lower than either of the two I have mentioned.

It is a significant fact that where wages are increased the number of hours worked are usually reduced, so that the annual income of the worker is less than under the lower wage. The automobile industry is a mass-production industry, demanding less of the precision and technique of the aircraft industry. With assembly lines and conveyor belts, quantity is produced in the automobile industry, while the skill of the individual workman is required in the aircraft, so that the two cannot rightly be compared.

Mr. Speaker, the Vultee strike is ended, but the price of the settlement has not been mentioned. The labor cost in aircraft manufacturing is 40 percent of the cost of the finished product. If the Vultee standard of wages is to be forced upon the industry, then the added cost of airplane production will be $250,000,000. This cost is going to be passed on to the Government in the purchase price of the planes now under construction. In a word, the taxpayer will be charged an additional $250,000,000 without receiving the benefit of even one additional plane.

The Vultee scale of wages cannot be forced upon every aircraft manufacturer in the country without completely disrupting the whole economy of many communities in which the plants are located. The Vultee scale of wages cannot be adopted in the aircraft industry without causing a similar increase in wages in all industries throughout the Nation. These increases are the first step in a period of inflation which threatens to make the silk-shirt days of the World War period look like shreds of cotton. Something must be done to prevent this wild inflationary movement which is now budding. It is up to the Federal Government itself to determine whether it is willing to pay the added cost made necessary by reason of these wage increases. The Government must decide now what policy it will pursue before the movement shall go too far.

Mr. Speaker, I recommend an editorial which appears in this morning's Washington Post, calling upon the Government to appoint some single head as a coordinator of the entire defense program because without such a head no real action can be had.

The Government must decide now whether the taxpayer is going to be called upon to pay the piper $250,000,000 but receive not one additional airplane.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I hope the gentleman will agree with me that there has not been a period in our history, at least certainly not in recent years, when there was greater need for the Congress of the United States to be in session and to have been in session, with its committees functioning and with its Members giving attention to these problems, than at the present time. [Applause.]

Mr. COSTELLO. I think the gentleman is quite correct in that respect. If legislation is required to solve this particular problem, the gentleman knows full well it is a very difficult thing to try to write legislation that will really cover the situation, and unless the committees are functioning, no consideration can be given to this matter until next January, and by that time it may be far too late to attempt to remedy the situation.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COSTELLO. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman spoke about the editorial in this morning's Post calling for a coordinator.

Mr. COSTELLO. That is correct.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I wonder if the gentleman is aware of the fact that something like 2 weeks ago I dropped a bill in the hopper calling for the appointment of representatives from departments of the Government to ascertain and fix, or rather stabilize where they now are, prices of services and commodities during the period that this emergency may exist; that is, while we are preparing for war, the purpose being not to cut down wages, but to keep everything on an even keel; the cost of living to be kept down and wages to stay where they are and everything to stay right where it is now, so that neither the Wall Street fellow nor the banker nor the labor racketeer can profit.

Mr. COSTELLO. I may state to the gentleman that the Committee on Military Affairs, of which I am a member, has for several years attempted to enact legislation of that character. Numerous hearings have been held on trying to prevent profits from being created in wartimes, and likewise to stabilize prices at the very outbreak of such an emergency as the country is now facing, and I believe something along that line must be done if we are to avoid this period of inflation which is definitely headed our way. Frankly, it does the laborer no good to increase his wages to an exorbitant figure if the prices of all commodities are going to be increased in like manner or in excess of the wage increase. [Applause.]

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I propose to discuss a subject here which, to me, is not at all pleasant, which Members from the cotton section of the United States do not dare discuss in the manner in which I am going to present it, but as a Member of this House and as a Representative of the Eighth District of Michigan, with my constituents holding an interest in 6,300,000 bales of cotton, I feel that it is time for some very plain statements to be made. Some things have occurred in the city of Washington in the last few days which have to do with this great basic crop which we call cotton.

In my opinion, there is rank collusion among certain warehouse operators who store cotton belonging to the United States, and also cotton in which the cotton growers of this country have an equity under commodity-credit loans.

Furthermore, I am convinced that these cotton-warehouse operators have been in Washington for the specific purpose of influencing Members of the Congress of the United States, not only to circumvent the law, but to prevent the Commodity Credit Corporation from carrying out its responsibilities to the taxpayers of the United States.

On October 31, the commodity-inventory sheet of the Commodity Credit Corporation shows commodities owned by the Commodity Credit Corporation to include 6,347,787 bales of cotton. The last cotton-information sheet which I am able to obtain from the Department of Agriculture, dated December 4, 1940, shows that 2,239,979 bales of the crop of 1940–41 of cotton have moved into Commodity Credit Corporation loans, as completed and reported to the corporation by States, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert this sheet in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. KERR). Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The statement is as follows:

COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION REPORTS ON 1940 COTTON LOANS

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 4, 1940.

Commodity Credit Corporation announced today that through December 2, 1940, loans made on 1940-crop cotton by the Corporation and lending agencies aggregate $107,967,056.98 on 2,239,979 bales.

Cotton loans completed and reported to the Corporation by States are as follows:

State	Number of bales	Amount
Alabama	86,861	$4,167,764.59
Arizona	26,702	1,286,022.98
Arkansas	82,121	3,911,556.37
California	74,459	3,779,813.48
Florida	151	7,320.73
Georgia	141,167	6,771,864.47
Louisiana	80,504	3,898,484.50
Mississippi	58,316	2,682,020.64
Missouri	6,090	284,254.72
New Mexico	1,615	76,511.94
North Carolina	24,219	1,159,809.48
Oklahoma	110,444	5,221,111.94
South Carolina	99,225	5,047,123.39
Tennessee	8,082	397,415.76
Texas	1,171,334	56,349,083.24
Virginia	237	11,465.10
Total	1,971,527	95,051,623.33
Loans by cooperatives	268,452	12,915,433.65
Total	2,239,979	107,967,056.98

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, the Government of the United States and its taxpayers operating through the Commodity Credit Corporation must pay warehouse charges covering storage and insurance on the cotton while stored, and the Commodity Credit Corporation has up to date, in my opinion, acted in accordance with the law in trying to have this cotton stored and insured at as reasonable a rate as open competitive bids will obtain that service for the United States Government and for farmers who have equities in the cotton stored. For this the Commodity Credit Corporation is to be commended.

When Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives give their assistance to warehouse companies to prevent open competitive bids, in my opinion, we are striking at the very heart and the very bloodstream of honest Government administration on the part of our Government agencies.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 2, 1940, pages 13796–13800, the Members of the House will find certain information. They will find a resolution which reads:

Resolved, That the Commodity Credit Corporation and the Department of Agriculture be, and they are hereby, requested not to ask more or, if already asked for, not to receive bids or make contracts for the reconcentration or rewarehousing of cotton in the Southern Cotton States until the matter can be taken up and considered by the Congress at its ensuing January session.

Now, what was that all about?

Mr. HOFFMAN. It looks like a monopoly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is worse than a monopoly. The Commodity Credit Corporation called for open bids under date of November 8, for the purpose of obtaining rates under which to store this Government-owned cotton; not just the farmer-owned cotton, as the debate would lead the unsuspecting public to believe and as certain warehouse operators would lead Members of Congress to believe. I am talking about the rates on Government-owned cotton, as shown by these inventory sheets, 6,300,000 bales.

On November 8, 1940, the Commodity Credit Corporation sent out sheets similar to this I hold in my hand, inviting warehousemen to submit bids for the storage of all cotton, except that from the 1940 crop which is now being harvested, either owned or held as security for loans by the Corporation.

Bids must be submitted prior to noon November 22, 1940, and the rates offered in bids accepted will be effective from December 1, 1940.

The invitations for bids are limited to warehouses located in the cotton-producing areas and ports adjacent thereto.

Why was not New England included in this statement? Apparently, because as stated by Commodity Credit Corporation:

> Cotton stored in these areas is readily available for distribution to all domestic consuming centers and export markets without the loss of transportation expenses.

Following the release of that press notice and the sending out of the invitation to bid and contract forms attached, there are three different types, one where you would bid on storage charges on cotton to be continued in storage; another, where you would bid on storage charges on cotton to be continued in storage and additional cotton to be shipped by Commodity Credit Corporation which you might wish to store in your warehouse; and another type of contract covering reconcentrated cotton or cotton transferred from one warehouse to your warehouse. These bids were to be back not later than November 22, 1940, and they state here, "The bids will be opened on November 22. Each bidder will be notified by a letter postmarked not later than December 16, 1940."

What happened after these requests were mailed out? This group of warehousemen came up here in a flock and began their nefarious work here on this hill.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Maybe those warehousemen thought they had formed a union and were entitled to the sole privilege of storing cotton for the Government.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the gentleman will read this debate in the RECORD he will come to the conclusion that they thought perhaps they had greater power than that, because if there ever was a scandal spread over this hill I contend this is one. I do not propose to let it go by without branding it exactly what I think it is.

I think we can get plenty of support to break this thing so that it will not revive this question in the next session of Congress because about a year ago this thing came up on the floor of the House and it was completely licked for the time being. This time, however, it was carried to the other body and the Warehouse "Gang" got away with it the second time by having the Senate resolution passed.

You must keep in mind that this Government owns over 6,300,000 bales of cotton outright. This cotton does not belong to the farmers of this country in any way, shape, form, or fashion. It has been taken over lock, stock, and barrel. The cotton in that situation is cotton in which the farmer could not have any equity later on. The United States Government is the largest holder of cotton in the world today. One of these warehouse companies I understand holds over 2,500,000 bales of cotton in its various plants in the Mississippi Valley and it apparently objects to the building of warehouses for storing cotton by any other warehouse company in its territory.

I refer you to the Federal Trade Commission Complaint Docket No. 4090. It has protested against the United States Government agency, the Commodity Credit Corporation, seeking competitive bids for the warehousing of this cotton; and in many cases we have probably paid that outfit enough storage on cotton to pay for the warehouses, lock, stock, and barrel, in which the cotton is stored. At the present time we have some cotton in these warehouses that has been stored since 1935 and on which we have paid perhaps $10 per bale storage. I happen to know enough about contracting and building to know that I could build a warehouse to store cotton at a considerably less cost than $10 per bale.

Mr. SHERIDAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I shall be pleased to yield because I want this to be a wide-open discussion, if we can get it.

Mr. SHERIDAN. Will the gentleman relate the procedure in detail by which the cotton is placed in these warehouses, the manner in which it is stored? In other words, will he trace the cotton from the farmer to the warehouse? I understood the gentleman to say that the farmer has no interest whatsoever in this cotton.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The farmer has no interest in certain of this cotton. Do not misunderstand me. The farmer has no interest in the 6,300,000 bales which is held by the Commodity Credit Corporation. The farmer does not have an equity in that cotton.

Mr. SHERIDAN. Does he not still have a contingent equity?

Mr. CRAWFORD. None at all, not in that particular balage. There are 4,000,000 or more other bales in which he has an equity.

Mr. SHERIDAN. In whom does the title to this cotton repose?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It rests in the Commodity Credit Corporation, the United States Government. I now refer to the more than 6,300,000 bales.

Mr. SHERIDAN. Is it not there as collateral against loans to farmers?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is not.

There are about 2,000,000 bales, in round figures, of the 1938 crop in which the farmer has an equity. There are about 20,000 bales of the 1939 crop and 2,239,979 bales of the 1940–41 balage in which the farmer has an equity, but this cotton is in addition to the 6,300,000-some-odd bales.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman said the storage charge already amounted to $10 per bale.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do not misunderstand me. This is a technical subject. I say we have paid as much as $10 a bale on some cotton which is now in storage.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What is cotton worth in the open market?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am not sure whether it is 9 or 9.5 cents a pound.

Mr. HOFFMAN. How many pounds in a bale?

Mr. CRAWFORD. There are 478 pounds of lint cotton to a bale.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I was just wondering whether it would not be cheaper to give the cotton away than to continue to store it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. You will find that as a result of what we did on this floor last fall we thought we had this combination broken up.

The Commodity Credit Corporation has already indicated that over $10,000,000 per year is being saved on the cost of warehousing the cotton stocks already on hand as a result of those reductions we brought about by what happened some months ago on the floor of the House. The Commodity Credit Corporation was at that time criticized for some of the excess charges that were being made prior to that, wherein we were paying as high as 25 cents per bale per month, or $3 a year. Certain Members of the House from the cotton-growing South criticized the Commodity Credit Corporation for having done that; and now the Commodity Credit Corporation comes along in an attempt to bring about a further saving, and lo and behold all of this situation develops here within the last few days and this resolution is enacted in the other body of this Congress.

I have here the November 1940 report on the cotton situation.

This shows, for instance, in the 1929–38 period you were exporting about 6.3 million bales of cotton per annum. In 1939 you exported 6,192,000 bales. In August to October 1939 you dropped to 1,744,000 bales, and in August to October 1940 you dropped to 350,000 running bales.

Your cotton exports are disappearing. The cotton is piling up in the warehouses, and yet this crowd comes up here and says, "You must not ask for competitive bids on the storing of this cotton." Who is running the United States? Is it this combination of warehousemen, some of whom the Federal Trade Commission has had to file complaints against?

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at this point I may insert in the RECORD comments from Docket 4090 of the Federal Trade Commission, which is a case of the Federal Trade Commission against some of this group I am referring to. These will be brief excerpts covering perhaps two and a half pages of single-space typewritten matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD]?

There was no objection.

PAR. 5. Said respondent, Federal Compress & Warehouse Co., and said respondent, R. L. Taylor, acting in cooperation with each other and through and in cooperation with the other respondents herein named, for more than 4 years last past, and particularly since February 27, 1936, have entered into and carried out and continued and are now engaged in an understanding, agreement, combination, or conspiracy among themselves and with and through the other respondents herein named to restrict, restrain, and suppress competition in the compressing and storing of cotton and in the sale of jute or burlap bagging and steel bands or ties sold and used in connection with the compressing of cotton, and to create and maintain a monopoly in the compressing of cotton and the sale of jute or burlap bagging and steel bands or ties sold and used in connection therewith, in the respondent, Federal Compress & Warehouse Co.

PAR. 6. Pursuant to said understanding, agreement, combination or conspiracy, and in furtherance thereof, the said respondents have done and performed and still do and perform the following acts and things:

(1) Respondents, Federal Compress & Warehouse Co., and R. L. Taylor, have caused to be erected and have operated and do now operate cotton gins, charging fees for ginning which are below the prevailing fees of competitors in the same territory and are below the actual cost of operation, for the purpose of and with the effect of driving competitors out of business and of securing the cotton so ginned for respondents' various compress plants, and to enable respondent, Federal Compress & Warehouse Co., at its compress plants to sell the jute or burlap bagging and steel bands or ties sold and used in connection with the compressing of said cotton;

(2) Have attempted to induce and have induced customers of competitive compress plants to transfer their cotton to the compress plants of respondent, Federal Compress & Warehouse Co., by means of rebates in the form of drayage allowances granted to said customers;

(3) Have, at cotton gins owned or controlled by said respondent, Federal Compress & Warehouse Co., directly or indirectly through respondent, R. L. Taylor, refused to transfer or forward cotton ginned at said gins to compress plants other than compress plants owned or controlled by said respondent, Federal Compress & Warehouse Co.;

(4) Have transferred from cotton gins owned or controlled by said respondent, Federal Compress & Warehouse Co., directly or indirectly through respondent, R. L. Taylor, cotton which has been ginned to compress plants owned by said respondent, Federal Compress & Warehouse Co., without regard to, and against the direction and orders of the owners of said cotton;

(5) Have sought to obtain control of competing compress plants through the purchase from its stockholders of their holdings in the corporations operating said plants for the purpose of driving said competitive compress plants out of business;

(6) Have, through the individual respondents, Binford Hester, E. F. Wade, and Winston E. Cheairs, all of whom are officers of respondent, Federal Compress & Warehouse Co., and through the individual respondents, W. Dennis Brown and Fred Schneider, all acting as agents of said respondent, Federal Compress & Warehouse Co., attempted to acquire the stock of competing compress plants by means of threats and statements made to the owners of such stock in competing compress plants to the effect that the stock of said competitive compress plants which are generally owned by cotton growers and independent gin operators, will decline in value and be made worthless as a result of the activities of the Federal Compress & Warehouse Co. in erecting competitive gins and ginning cotton at figures below cost of operation, or free of charge, if such a course shall prove necessary to secure the cotton, and by the allowance of drayage and other rebates. By means of said threats and statements, the respondents have caused great concern, anxiety, mental stress and worry to stockholders in said competitive compress plants, and have caused cotton ginners and cotton growers to send their cotton to the compress plants of Federal Compress & Warehouse Co. for the purpose of compressing, and having added thereto bagging and ties as hereinbefore described, rather than to competitive compress plants in which said ginners and independent cotton growers are stockholders;

(7) Have made threats to owners of cotton gins that they would erect cotton gins and gin cotton below cost or free of charge in competition with said independent cotton gins unless the owners thereof shipped the cotton so ginned by them to compress plants owned by the Federal Compress & Warehouse Co. in preference to competing compress plants;

(8) Have, by threats to erect cotton gins and operate the same below cost or free of charge, caused the owners of cotton gins who were also stockholders in compress plants owned by competitors of Federal Compress & Warehouse Co., to ship the cotton ginned by said gins and owned or controlled by the ginners to compress plants of Federal Compress & Warehouse Co. in preference to compress plants in which ginners were financially interested.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, this is to let you see what is going on in connection with this combination I am talking about.

This report on cotton also shows approximately half of our exports of cotton formerly went to the continent of Europe. This year, were it not for Russia taking 54,000 bales, our exports to the Continent would be less than 1 percent of the total. Exports of cotton to the Orient have greatly declined in size and relative importance. Exports for the first 3 months of the 1940–41 season were only one-fifth as large as in the same period of last season, and that condition prevails at a time when we have more cotton in storage, insofar as I know, than at any previous time in the history of the world.

This firm to which I refer has a special write-up in what is known as Warehouse Flashes, published November 16, 1940, "for members only." I suppose that is members of the Warehouse Association.

It goes ahead and points out that this firm was organized in the year 1887 by one R. L. Taylor and the late Joe Newberger. From this humble beginning, with a single plant, the Federal Compress & Warehouse Co. has grown until it boasts of 88 plants. The organization is not only the largest of its kind in the world, but also owns the largest single plant in the world, the West Memphis plant, which covers 175 acres of ground and will accommodate about a half million bales.

I put this in for you to read in connection with the debates that occurred on the floor of the other body, and I ask you to read that debate along with this data which I am inserting and arrive at your own conclusions, because the debate proceeds in such a way that would lead the unsuspecting public to believe that this whole case hinges around some 92,000 bales of cotton that happened to find itself down in west Texas without a warehouse into which to crawl, and the presentation is made as if all of the people on earth were being crucified by these competitive bids that are being asked for. The debate would also lead you to believe that the only people affected are the small owners of certain warehouses located in the producing areas. This 88-plant octopus is the real force behind this protest against asking for competitive bids.

When the bids on February 10, 1940, were called for the purpose of storing approximately 300,000 bales of cotton up in the New England area, not a single Member of this Congress made a protest. Where were all of these people who are now so vociferously protesting when these bids were sent out for the 300,000 bales? They did not show up. I am serving notice on the cotton section of the South that it is time for them to clean house in this respect, because no longer does the South only hold cotton. I repeat that the Eighth District of Michigan has an interest in at least 6,300,000 bales, and I do not propose to add my approval to a racket in cotton, sugar, or any other basic commodity, as the Government corporations acquire these vast holdings and, in my opinion, we have just started into the woods.

The debate indicates there was a great delegation of farmers up here that sat in on these conferences that have been held in the last few days. "There was no difference of opinion expressed at the meeting held the other day at the Department of Agriculture," the debate says. There were 10 Senators from the Southern States present at the meeting; there were 15 or 20 Representatives present and there were most impressive delegations of farmers present.

Do you know how many farmers were present? Three.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am informed there were three farmers present, and that two of those three were among the 10 largest cotton producers in the world. I am also informed that those producers were put in the sweat box by the warehouse gang and led to believe that unless somebody speaking in the name of a farmer or farmers came up here and added their support to kill the asking for these competitive bids the warehouse gang would raise the storage charges on the farmers' cotton. That is going just a little bit too far, and I think when you look into the record you will find those three particular farmers, so-called, very much regret that they got hooked in on this proposal. I think you will also find that there is a general protest in the area for which those three so-called farmers spoke against their ever appearing here as protestants against reducing the cost of carrying cotton. So that might be worth looking into. And, furthermore, why should there have been a difference of opinion in the particular group that turned on the heat? The opposition was not invited into the conference, and by the opposition I mean those warehousemen who are willing to reduce the costs of warehousing and insurance to farmers, the taxpayers, and the Government. Oh, no; the warehouse gang would not have this group sitting in on their conference. Why was this important phase of the discussion overlooked by the honorable gentlemen of another body of this Congress? Well, the record speaks for itself. This was the same old warehouse gang that put through the 25 cents per bale per month charge when they know very well new warehouses are being built on basis of profitable operations charging only 12½ cents per bale per month for warehousing and insurance instead of the 25 cents previously charged.

Is this Congress going to take the position with Government agencies that they shall not ask for competitive bids on these services and goods the Government buys? Is this Congress going to take the position that every time a Government agency has sense and judgment and administrative ability enough to go out and ask for competitive bids we are going to come in here and pass resolutions condemning them and say, "Oh, no; you must not go ahead with this until Congress has a chance to act separately the 1st of January"?

In my opinion, that is one of the most vicious steps ever taken by a body of the Congress of the United States. I do not like it a little bit. The people of my district do not like it a little bit. There is not a straight-shooting businessman in the United States who deals with his cards above the table who likes that kind of procedure, because if Government is to do its trading in the absence of competitive bids there is no foundation on which to stand. Such a system would become a cutthroat, knock-down and drag-out proposition, and the man gets the business who can pay the biggest price for it instead of one who can give the best service at the least money.

I have satisfied myself that the Members of the other body did not inform themselves on this question, and I will leave that to your good judgment after you look into it yourself. I hope the Members from the cotton section will take this floor this afternoon and try to unfold this thing or try to dispute what I have said, if it is subject to being disputed, so that we may proceed to smoke this thing out once and for all.

The chances are that instead of the Commodity Credit Corporation going ahead now with this open, competitive bid procedure, and notifying these warehouses who have divulged their information and submitted their bids, and accepting the lowest bid, the situation will work out about like this. After the Secretary of Agriculture gets back into the city and a few of the other officials get back into the city, I believe if you watch the doors down there you will find that several Members of the House and Senate will run to the Secretary of Agriculture and will attempt to fix this thing up in such a way that those contracts will not be closed under date of December 16. If that occurs, certainly this thing will become a disgraceful act on the part of the Congress and the administrative machinery of this great Nation. That is no way to do business. That is bucket-shop operation if there ever was any. We have no business letting a practice like that start. I hope and trust that the Congress—House and Senate—will permit the Department of Agriculture, along with the decent fellows in the cotton industry—because there are decent fellows in all these big, basic commodities; I know a lot of them, and I know just enough of them to know that they are not in favor of this kind of bucket-shop operation—to clean this situation up before the 1st of January, so that the Committees on Agriculture of the House and the other body and the Committe on Banking and Currency, that handles this situation in connection with the Commodity Credit Corporation, will not have to deal with it. [Applause.]

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. RABAUT (at the request of Mr. LESINSKI), for 2 weeks, on account of official business.

To Mr. POWERS, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. CAMP, for several days, on account of illness in his family.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Monday next it adjourn to meet the following Thursday.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, there may be some developments in the foreign situation, and I object for the present.

SENATE

MONDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, November 19, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, who hast made all things for man and hast created man in Thine own image: Do Thou sanctify our souls and bodies, our thoughts and our intentions, that whatsoever we do may by us be designed for Thy glory and for the welfare of this Nation, which, with high and true devotion, we desire to serve. Forbid it, Lord, that any pride or self-seeking, impure motive, unworthy purpose, or low imagination should stain our spirits or unhallow our words and actions.

Breathe upon us, we beseech Thee, and keep alive in us that holy flame which the blessed Christ came to kindle upon earth among men, that, being anointed with the spirit of peace, holiness, and true obedience, we may find the consummation of our service in true fellowship with Thee and Thy children everywhere. In our Saviour's name we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. MINTON and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Thursday, December 5, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, informed the Senate that Hon. JOHN W. MCCORMACK, a Representative from the State of Massachusetts, had been elected Speaker pro tempore of the House during the absence of the Speaker.

The message announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills and joint resolution of the Senate:

S. 3765. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg., and for other purposes;

S. 3934. An act authorizing the State of Michigan acting through the International Bridge Authority of Michigan, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the St. Marys River, from a point in or near the city of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., to a point in the Province of Ontario, Canada;

S. 4135. An act to legalize the construction by the State Highway Board of Georgia of a free highway bridge across the Withlacoochee River, between Valdosta, Ga., and Madison, Fla., at Horns Ferry; and

S. J. Res. 306. Joint resolution extending the time for submitting the final report of the Temporary National Economic Committee.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House No. 2 to the bill (S. 4370) authorizing the President to appoint an Under Secretary of War during national emergencies, fixing the compensation of the Under Secretary of War, and authorizing the Secretary of War to prescribe duties.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3729) for the relief of Hjalmar M. Seby, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 56) authorizing an increase in the seating capacity for the inaugural ceremonies on January 20, 1941.

CREDENTIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the credentials of HIRAM W. JOHNSON, duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of California a Senator from that State for the term beginning January 3, 1941, which were read and ordered to be filed.

LOCATION OF INAUGURAL PARADE STANDS

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I introduce a joint resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 307) vesting the chairman of the Inaugural Committee with authority to determine the location of stands along the inaugural parade route, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the chairman of the Inaugural Committee, or such person as he may designate, be, and he hereby is, vested with exclusive authority to determine the location of stands along the route of the inaugural parade, either on public or private property, and the issuance of permits therefor.

The erection of any such stand without a duly authorized permit shall be deemed a misdemeanor and punishable by fine not to exceed $1,000.

Prosecution shall be in the Police Court of the District of Columbia in the name of the corporation counsel or one of his assistants.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HJALMAR M. SEBY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3729) for the relief of Hjalmar M. Seby, which were on page 1, line 8, to strike out all after "him" down to and including "for" in line 11 and insert "as the result of his entering into a Government contract, numbered TLSA-4646, dated November 28, 1933, in connection with the"; on page 1, line 12, after "remodeling", to insert "of"; and on page 2, line 2, to strike out all after "41" down to and including "Seby" in line 9.

Mr. MINTON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED TRANSFER OF ADDITIONAL DESTROYERS

[Mr. CLARK of Missouri asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the St. Louis Post Dispatch of December 8, 1940, entitled "Should Our Navy Be Weakened?" which appears in the Appendix.]

BRITISH INTERESTS IN AMERICAN BUSINESS

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, when Lord Cornwallis surrendered at Yorktown in October 1781, we are told in the history books that that ended British control of the United States. By a peculiar coincidence, I find that another Lord Cornwallis, of twentieth century England, still has some control over the United States of America. I say that because I find that Lord Conwallis—the present Lord Cornwallis, not the general who surrendered during the Revolutionary War, which some people want to forget, but the present Lord Cornwallis—is a director of the Royal Insurance Co., Ltd., of England, and a director of the Liverpool & London & Globe Insurance Co., Ltd. You may wonder what that has to do with the United States. Well, Mr. President, those companies control a considerable number of American insurance companies, owning some of them outright. Here is a list of some of them:

American & Foreign Insurance Co.;
Capital Fire Insurance Co. of California;
Eagle Indemnity Co.,
Newark Fire Insurance Co.;

Queen Insurance Co.;
Royal Indemnity Co.;
Seaboard Insurance Co.;
Federal Union Insurance Co.;
Globe Indemnity Co.; and Star Insurance Co. of America.

How I found that out was in this way: I have been checking and double-checking those individuals who are in pro-war organizations as to their financial background, and I found very interesting ramifications of foreign control of United States business. The study of those backing the formation of the conscription drive caused me to check the financial holdings and directorships of certain individuals who wanted conscription. Some were in this group of insurance directors. That is how I ascertained that Lord Cornwallis, of twentieth-century England, had power over American finance.

INTERLOCKING DIRECTORS OF BANKS

It may be said that such control of those insurance companies does not mean anything. Well, I took those insurance companies, ascertained their directors, and checked which of their directors were also directors of other corporations, thus constituting interlocking directorships. What did I find? I found that these insurance companies which were controlled by the two insurance companies I just mentioned, as well as such other English insurance companies as North British & Mercantile Insurance Co., Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society, Ocean Accident & Guarantee Corporation, and others, have on their subsidiary American insurance companies directors of banks in the United States—not small banks but banks of over a hundred million dollars each in resources—with total resources aggregating over $17,000,000,000. That is, these banks have directors who are also represented on British-controlled insurance companies' director lists. If we add to that the other British financial control, what do we find? It is vast, but I shall confine my remarks to insurance alone today. Let me read a few of the names of the banks that have directors in English-controlled insurance companies in America. Here are a few of the banks:

The Chase National Bank;
The Guaranty Trust Co.;
The National City Bank;
The Bankers Trust Co.;
The Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co.;
The Manufacturers Trust Co.;
The Irving Trust Co.;
The Chemical Bank & Trust Co.;
The Bank of Manhattan;
J. P. Morgan & Co.; and
The New York Trust Co.

Of the 12 largest banks in New York City 10 have directors who are also directors of English-controlled insurance companies. Did the Members of the Senate realize that?

When I gave the figure $17,000,000,000 I did not include the small banks that have resources of less than $100,000,000, not even those of fifty or sixty million dollars. I merely included those having over a hundred million dollars in resources, and particularly those in the city of New York. If the smaller ones were added, you would see a much larger figure. When I use the word "small," it is not an accurate term, because these banks are large as compared to most of the banks of our country. Few towns or cities in America have banks that have assets of twenty-five million or more. Outside of New York this interlocking can be found.

In Cleveland, Ohio, the Cleveland Trust Co. has a director who is also a director of an English-controlled insurance corporation. Other cities will be discussed later. I intend to put in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a list of these men and a list of their interlocking directorships, because I want the American people to know that this drive to get us into war has a financial tinge. Many of these individuals who are working to get us in war are directly connected with interests in Great Britain; and besides the banks what do I find? I find that directors of many of our large corporations are also directors of British-controlled insurance companies.

INTERLOCKED WITH INDUSTRIAL CORPORATIONS

What are some of these large corporations? Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Fisk Rubber Co., Steel Car Co., Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., Flintkote Co., Texas Corporation.

You recall the much ado about the official of the Texas corporation who talked to Dr. Westrick, the German consular agent; yet a director of that same corporation is director of an English-controlled insurance company in our country, but nothing is said about that. I do not comment upon the Westrick case except to say that the people are given only one side of the story.

Let us see what other corporations there are:

Union Carbide & Carbon Co.
Western Pacific Railroad Co.
Western Union Telegraph Co.
Detroit & Mackinac Co.
Commercial Pacific Cable Co.
Union Pacific Railroad.
Union Sulphur Co.
Underwood Elliott Fisher Co.
American Hardware Corporation.
New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.
Remington Rand.
Consolidated Edison (New York).
Anaconda Copper Co.
R. H. Macy & Co.
Consolidation Coal Co.
General Foods Corporation.
American Smelting & Refining Co.
Pan-American Airways.
United States Steel Corporation.
Cunard Steamship, Ltd.
All-American Cables.
American Waterworks & Electric Co.
New York Transit Corporation.
General Electric Co.
Kennecott Copper Corporation.
Pullman Standard Car Co.
American Brake Shoe & Foundry Co.
Niagara Hudson Power Corporation.
Pittsburgh Tube Co.
International Baking Corporation.
Montgomery Ward.
Standard Brands.
American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Directors of all these corporations are interlocked with directors British insurance companies in America; and some of these individuals who are presidents of subsidiaries in America have left out of Who's Who the fact that they were born in England. That was the case with Harold Warner, who is president of the American & Foreign Insurance Co., vice president of the Capital Fire Insurance Co. of California, president of the Newark Fire Insurance Co., president of the Queen Insurance Co. of America, chairman of the board of the Royal Indemnity Co., president of the Seaboard Insurance Co., president of the Federal Union Insurance Co., president of the Globe Indemnity Co., and president of the Star Insurance Co. of America. You may check Who's Who, and you will not find that Mr. Warner was born in Bootle, England, December 12, 1883.

BISHOP WILLIAM T. MANNING

Incidentally, the same thing applies to Bishop Manning. Before the World War he cut out of Who's Who the fact that he was born in England; and it was not until almost 10 years after the war that the fact was put back into Who's Who. Bishop William T. Manning, one of the war hawks of America, was an English subject and has never forgotten his English nativity, except for Who's Who.

Also, many did not know that Dr. Frank Kingdon, of New York University, and active in the war drive in this country, was born in London.

But getting back to the subject, let me say that many of these American subsidiary insurance companies were English citizens who came to this country to look after the interests of the parent companies.

In passing, it is worth noting that Cecil Shallcross was born in Cheshire, England. He is president of Commonwealth Insurance Co., Homeland Insurance Co., and the Mercantile Insurance Co. of America, with its powerful financial directors such as Morgan, Vanderbilt, Porter, Gates, and others.

J. D. Simpson, of Liverpool, England, and one of the active insurance figures of Great Britain is director of American Foreign Insurance Co., Globe Indemnity Co., Star Insurance Co., Federal Union Insurance Co., Royal Indemnity Co., Eagle Indemnity Co. He sits on the board with men who are very active in American industry and finance.

When we realize that these individuals whom we find in banks alone that have assets of over $100,000,000 have a director's voice in control of over $17,000,000,000 worth of banks centralized in New York City, is it any wonder that we are going toward war? Is it any wonder, when they have interlocking directors who exert control in at least six and perhaps more large industrial and utility corporations that have over a billion dollars of assets each in America? Corporate directorships of businesses totaling in the billions are found to be closely identified with British interests.

Lord Cornwallis, in 1781, did fight the last battle of the Revolution; but his descendant, the present Lord Cornwallis, is back to get us into the British Empire once again. Is it "union now"?

CARNEGIE FOUNDATION

We find mixed in also in the individuals who are demanding a return to the British Empire individuals who are connected with the Carnegie Foundation. It will be remembered that Andrew Carnegie said it was a pity that we had a Revolutionary War; that the English people should have gotten along together. The Carnegie Foundation have their ramifications throughout the schools. We find that they are not forgotten among the directors of the British insurance companies. You remember Sir Cecil Rhodes' first will, in which he declared that he wanted America once again to be under British control. Well, you will find plenty of Rhodes interests right here, too. Rhodes has not been forgotten, and Carnegie has not been forgotten; but the distressing thing is that their views are being advocated by native American volunteers who are enlisting to put us once again in the orbit and under the complete control of Great Britain.

I do not want to detain the Senate. I could go into the details of the ramifications of British finance in this country, particularly now, since the British want to borrow money. I do not want to detain the Senate; but I shall ask, Mr. President, permission to insert in the RECORD, after my remarks, the exhibits which I have available to show that British finance exerts an almost unknown pressure on American finance, on American industry, and on American life. It is there that we first have to expose it if we are going to keep out of war. It is there that the interlocking power toward war is being exerted; it is through Americans who have interlocked themselves with British capital.

This is but a small part of the entire story of interlocking control. I shall add more at a later time, including the tie-up between some of our large American life-insurance companies with English finance, as well as a discussion of the intertwining of interests in other cities, although most of this interlocking is found in New York City.

I realize the reference to Lord Cornwallis may be a little facetious, but it does seem an interesting side light on this story of the financial tie-up. Neither Cornwallis is fictitious. The present Cornwallis is the Right Honorable Lord Cornwallis, of Linton, Plovers, Horsmonden, and Kent.

THE NEW YORK TIMES

Mr. President, before taking my seat I also want to make this comment about the very interesting topic of freedom of the press:

The New York Times prints "all the news that is fit to print"—that is, all that the New York Times believes in. Cardinal O'Connell, the dean of the Catholic hierarchy in America, a beloved Catholic prelate, came out on his eighty-first birthday with a very, very important statement about the propaganda to get America into the war. How do you think that rated in the New York Times? It rated 7¾ inches on page 43 of the New York Times—7¾ inches. Certainly the Washington Post is not known for its anti-English attitude, but it had enough interest to give the same statement 18 column-inches on page 3. But here—I wish it could be shown in the RECORD—is the size of the head in the New York Times:

O'Connell condemns war propaganda.

No; that was not worth anything. Also, what did they do? The New York Times cut out this significant paragraph of Cardinal O'Connell's statement:

We can't have a permanent peace without justice. That was the trouble with the Versailles Treaty. It was not just. Power politics in Europe is not a basis of justice. It's a basis of imperialism, which is a cause of all their troubles.

That was not "news fit to print" in the New York Times, from the dean of the Catholic hierarchy of America—No!

I have explained to the Senate, and I will not repeat, the New York Times tie-up. I will not tell how much pressure was put on the New York Times when I exposed Governor Lehman and his war stocks because the Lehman Corporation had directors on concerns which were big advertisers in the New York Times. I will not repeat that, but you know it. I exposed the fact of Governor Lehman's interest and his family's interest in war stocks, and it was almost completely ignored in the newspaper; and I have been told directly from inside the New York Times that there was pressure, of course, from advertisers who knew that members of the Lehman family were also directors of the stores that had advertising in the New York Times. I refer to this just to show what America is going through in the way of complete censorship of anything against war. If Cardinal O'Connell had come out for war, it would have been up on the front page.

"PLAYING DOWN" STORIES

What else did the New York Times do? When General Pershing—with whom I have disagreed many times—came out for feeding the hungry people of Europe, where did the New York Times play it? On page 45. When he came out in favor of sending the 50 destroyers to Great Britain, where did they play it? They played it all over the front page. It all depends upon what General Pershing has said whether the New York Times is interested in printing it or not; and so it is with much of the press of the country. So it is with the Chicago Daily News, which I intend to expose as to its Kuhn-Loeb connections later, if I have time, on the floor of the Senate, but not today. But I say to you, it is there that we are having the censorship and control of the press of America—not all of them, but such newspapers as the conservative New York Times.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that following my remarks I be permitted to place in the RECORD the matter of which I have spoken this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, permission will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

EXHIBIT A

OMITTED FROM NEW YORK TIMES

The New York Times, which prints "all the news that's fit to print," did not print this part of the Associated Press story of Cardinal O'Connell's statement:

"He said that it was 'still a mystery' to him that the voices of people 'who haven't found this country good enough to live in, although they got their incomes here,' should be 'allowed to be praised and even applauded.'

"The cardinal would not say for quotation whom he meant by the 'expatriates.'

"Declaring the United States needs 'the greatest unity and defense,' and that 'we should not fritter away our energies on these useless chimeras,' he said the Nation should strive to weld all its races and religions 'in the strongest bond of brotherly love in the defense of our own country.'"

Then the Times printed the next sentence, but omitted this paragraph:

"We can't have a permanent peace without justice. That was the trouble with the Versailles Treaty. It was not just. Power politics in Europe is not a basis of justice. It's a basis of imperialism, which is the cause of all their troubles."

The Associated Press story of Cardinal O'Connell's statement:

CARDINAL O'CONNELL APPEALS FOR PEACE—BOSTON PRELATE DECRIES "EXPATRIATES" WHO PROPAGANDIZE FOR WAR—CALLS FOR UNITY, DEFENSE, AND EXAMPLE OF "RELIGIOUS JUSTICE"

(By the Associated Press)

BOSTON, December 7.—William Cardinal O'Connell, declaring this Nation should keep out of war and work for a permanent peace, today denounced "propagandists for war" at home and "certain expatriates" he said were seeking to have America "become a sort of tail-end of a foreign empire."

"Not only should we keep out of war as the best thing for America and Americans," said the dean of the Nation's Roman Catholic hierarchy in an interview on the eve of his eighty-first birthday, "but we might well be turning our thoughts toward a speedy and permanent peace among the nations.

"Notwithstanding the too-prevalent propaganda from all sides, the hope and prayer of the American people today is that we shall be spared the horrors of war. They have taken for granted that the authorities at Washington meant what they said and said what they meant when they promised to keep us out of war."

Alternately raising his right hand in a gesture of blessing as he called for peace "based on justice" instead of on the "power politics in Europe," and pounding his great fist on the arm of his chair as he scored "propagandists," the archbishop of more than 1,000,000 Catholics in 300 parishes said:

"It's hard for me to understand why some of these propagandists are allowed to cry down the normal wish of the American people for peace. What is their purpose? They cannot be real Americans, because real Americans think of their own country first.

"There are certain expatriates—I think you know whom I mean—" he added, "who are raising their voices in loud accents with the preposterous proposition that America sink her individuality and become a sort of tail end of a foreign empire. If this is not an example of exalted hysteria, I don't know what could be."

He said it was "still a mystery" to him that the voices of people "who haven't found this country good enough to live in, although they got their incomes here," should be "allowed to be raised and even applauded."

(The Cardinal would not say for quotation whom he meant by the "expatriates.")

Declaring the United States needs "the greatest unity and defense" and that "we should not frit away our energies on these useless chimeras," he said the Nation should strive to weld all its races and religions "into the strongest bond of brotherly love in the defense of our country." He said we should help provide "an oasis, an island of peace" to which the warring nations could turn for an example of "religious justice" when they have laid down their arms; and he added:

"We can't have a permanent peace without justice. That was the trouble with the Versailles Treaty. It was not just. Power politics in Europe is not a basis of justice. It's a basis of imperialism, which is the cause of all their troubles."

EXHIBIT D

Interlocking directorships of directors of English-controlled and affiliated insurance companies with American industrial companies.

The corporations listed below have directors who are interlocked in the directorships of the various named insurance companies controlled by the parent companies in Great Britain.

They do not include the banking and financial corporations which appear in another exhibit.

These industrial, railway, and utility corporations have assets of approximately $20,000,000,000.

In presenting this list I do not state that these corporations and companies are controlled by British finance. Nevertheless, they have on their board of directors men who are interlocked as directors of British owned, controlled, and affiliated insurance companies. Some of these men are individuals who have been and are active in prowar drives, such as the William Allen White committee (Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies). It was traced after noting that some of the ardent advocates of conscription and those favoring acts of war were directors of these

British-controlled insurance companies. It shows how far the ramifications of interlocking directorships go in using influence for foreign interests.

The list only includes those with assets over $1,000,000. Many have more than one hundred million in property and some over a billion.

EXHIBIT E

Interlocking directorships of directors of English-controlled and affiliated insurance companies with American financial institutions.

The corporations listed below have directors who are interlocked in the directorships of the various-named insurance companies controlled by the parent companies in Great Britain. They do not include the industrial corporations shown in exhibit D with assets of approximately $20,000,000,000.

As noted in exhibit D, it is not stated that these directors are English controlled, but it does show the ramification of British finance in the United States and the power of that influence in the pro-war drive in this country.

Many of these individuals are active in the William Allen White committee and other prowar organizations. The people are not advised of the financial tie-up.

The list below only includes those with assets of more than $1,000,000. Some have more than a billion in assets.

The banking institutions which have more than $100,000,000 in assets each have total assets of more than $15,000,000,000. The insurance companies which have more than $100,000,000 in assets have total assets of more than $11,000,000,000.

EXHIBIT F

Records and facts of English interests in American business.

ALBERT PURVIS—A BRIEF STORY OF ENGLISH INTEREST IN AMERICAN BUSINESS

British investments in the United States total in the billions. They are very effective in their pressure on the economic and political life of the country.

It is far too large a story to note briefly as an exhibit to the record.

Arthur B. Purvis heads the British Purchasing Mission in the United States. It is interesting to note his connections.

The Poor's Register of Directors shows that Mr. Purvis is a director of General Motors Corporation. Mr. William Knudsen, before accepting the position on the National Defense Commission, was president of General Motors. Serving with him on the board of directors, the volume notes the name of Rt. Hon. Lord Harry McGowan of Ardeer, K. B. E., of London, England. Lord McGowan is chairman of Imperial Chemical Industries, Ltd., one of the important chemical corporations of the British Empire. Not only that, but McGowan is an official of other munition and chemical companies.

Mr. Purvis is chairman of the board of Canadian Industries, Ltd. With him on the board are Americans, Canadians, and Englishmen who are directors of American corporations. C. C. Ballantyne is director of Bordens, Ltd., a subsidiary of Borden Co.; a director of Montreal Locomotive Works, a subsidiary of American Locomotive Co. Sir Edward Beatty is a director of the Waldorf Astoria Hotel and other affiliated corporations. Ross McMaster is director of the Canadian subsidiary of Pratt & Whitney. He is also director of International Nickel and a member of the American Iron and Steel Institute. Serving on the board of which Purvis is director one notes the names of J. Thompson Brown, vice president of E. I. du Pont de Nemours and director of Remington Arms. Also one notes H. G. Haskell, vice president of E. I. du Pont de Nemours and director of General Motors Securities Co. The Dunlop Tire & Rubber Co. is connected with the Dunlop Tire & Rubber Goods Co., Ltd. This company directorate shows E. B. Germain, of Buffalo.

Purvis is also an official of Bell Telephone Co., of Canada. On that board, one notes the name of Walter S. Gifford, president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., and William H. Harrison, vice president of American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

The head of the Purchasing Mission is an official of Canadian Investment Fund, Ltd. Other officials of this investing firm show Calvin Bullock, John M. Hincks, and Hugh Bullock, bankers of New York.

He is also an official of Liverpool & London & Globe Insurance Co., the record of its connections being shown in other exhibits.

Purvis is also an official of British American Oil Co., Ltd. One of the officials of that company is Charles L. Suhr, chairman of the board of Pennzoil Co.

He is also an official of Northern Electric Co., Ltd., and on that board one finds R. H. Gregory, E. S. Bloom, C. G. Stoll, of Western Electric.

This is just one example of the interlocking of business connections as it affects Albert Purvis, British purchasing director and close personal friend of the President.

Many American firms that have received large war orders have on their board of directors English citizens. The metal industry has many examples of this tie-up.

USE OF STABILIZATION FUND FOR MAKING LOANS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the able junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] made a very important statement at the last session of the Senate regarding the use of the stabilization fund for purposes of international credit. Inasmuch as he was discussing a rather unusual procedure, namely, that of administrative departments coming to a committee of the Congress for approval of their policy, on the theory that that apparently gave the approval of Congress, I do not wish to let the occasion pass without associating myself with the observations offered by the Senator from Ohio, and I wish to submit a supplemental comment. I am not discussing the question of whether loans should or should not be made to belligerent nations; I am discussing the question of the method.

Mr. President, the stabilization fund was never intended to be an international "kitty," if I may use the language of the street, for the purpose of making international loans indiscriminately at the option of the executive departments of the Government. Again I say I am not commenting on the merit of the loans; I am commenting on the method.

When the stabilization fund was established I sought in vain to obtain a very simple amendment to the act which would require reports to Congress at least once a year regarding the details of the transactions. By roll call the Senate twice refused to order even that much publicity regarding the use of this tremendous $2,000,000,000 fund.

When the stabilization fund was finally extended, in 1939, a very poor concession was made to the point of view that Congress and the people were entitled to some information regarding the stabilization fund, and an annual audit was ordered reported to both the President and the Congress. But it still remains in the fundamental law governing the stabilization fund that this $2,000,000,000 may be used by the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, "whose decisions shall be final and not be subject to review by any other officer of the United States."

Mr. President, that is the most complete immunity ever given an administrative officer in respect to the expenditure of public funds. I respectfully submit to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, if it is making any further explorations into the use of the stabilization fund for international loans, never remotely contemplated when the act was originally passed, that at least the fundamental law itself be rewritten so that, if the occasion requires, Congress and the American people may question the use of $2,000,000,000 of their money.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senate briefly to the fact that the other day, after Mr. Morgenthau had made the announcement with respect to the new use of the stabilization fund, which amounted to the setting up of a new lending agency of the United States, which I insist is contrary to the whole spirit and purpose of the stabilization fund as enunciated by Mr. Morgenthau himself a year and a half ago before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, and later before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee—I say that after Mr. Morgenthau had announced the policy of converting the stabilization fund into a lending agency, Mr. Warren Lee Pierson, the president of the Export-Import Bank, made a statement in which he said, "I would hate to see the Treasury do better than we," and announced that the Export-Import Bank had also loaned or was about to loan $50,000,000, which, unless it is for the sole purpose of increasing exports of the United States to foreign countries, also violates the statute setting up the Export-Import Bank.

Of course, Mr. Pierson could afford to be very, very generous in these matters. It does not cost him a cent. The money belongs to the taxpayers of the United States. This noble spirit of emulation between rival Government lending agencies in disposing of other people's money may be a spectacle to delight foreign countries which are getting the money, but it is certainly not calculated to be very encouraging toward the hard-pressed American taxpayer whose money is being handed out and who has to foot the bill. Mr. Pierson should remember, however, that he cannot very well afford to play table stakes against the stabilization fund, because there is a statutory limit on the lending of the Export-Import Bank, while the stabilization fund still has about $2,000,000,000.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. MINTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are in order. If there be none, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Joseph Warren Madden to be judge of the United States Court of Claims.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask that the nomination go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On objection, the nomination will be passed over.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Abner H. Ferguson to be Federal Housing Administrator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. MINTON. I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Ferguson.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I report favorably the nominations of 21 postmasters in several States, none of them objected to by the Senators from the States affected, and I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be confirmed en bloc, along with those appearing on the calendar, and that the President be immediately notified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc, and the President will be immediately notified.

COAST GUARD

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William C. Hart to be chief boatswain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

IN THE ARMY

The Chief Clerk read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. MINTON. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Army be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

RECESS TO THURSDAY

Mr. MINTON. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Thursday, December 12, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCCORMACK.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou who art the alpha and omega, the first and the last, the bright and the morning star, hear our prayer. We pray Thee to make the horizon of our lives broader, remembering that over all, through all, and in all Thou art working. To those whose better natures tremble and are afraid, to those who struggle with poverty and whose labor brings so little comfort and warmth, be Thou a providence unto them. Grant that we may have a deeper conception of the riches of Thy grace. As all creation is yearning and longing to see the manifestation of the sons of God, oh, become a power and a comfort to all those whose noonday is threatened with sunset. Heavenly Father, in this day, with its broken glimpses of light, while the tragical life of the world goes on, grant that the grasping hand of plunder may soon be cut off and the world know that the Christ and not Caesar speaks the final word by which men and nations are to live. Encourage all churches, all schools, and all teachers in their efforts to spread abroad a more vigorous desire for the reformation of morals. We rejoice that Thy mercy is from everlasting to everlasting, and beyond all discordant voices there is true peace and unwearying toil. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Baldridge, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 307. Joint resolution vesting the chairman of the inaugural committee with authority to determine the location of stands along the inaugural parade route.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 3729. An act for the relief of Hjalmar M. Seby.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

Mr. COOPER administered the oath of office to the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. MCCORMACK].

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in connection with civil-service legislation as it applies to Capitol Hill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in connection with the book written by our colleague the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. BURDICK], Tales From Buffalo Land.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in connection with the St. Lawrence Seaway Conference at Detroit on December 5, and to include therein a letter or an address read by Mr. Berle, which was written by President Roosevelt, and also to include an address by Mr. Berle, Assistant Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

THE DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I have heard much adverse criticism during the last few days on the floor of the House concerning the statement of the chairman of the Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities that he proposed to ask for a 2-year extension of life for the committee and an appropriation of $1,000,000. As a member of that committee, I am concerned over this criticism and want to make my position clear as to the future of our committee and the appropriation that should be requested for the continuation of its work.

I agree with the chairman that in view of conditions that obtain in this Nation today the committee should be continued on the basis of a 2-year program. In my opinion, however, our committee will not authorize its chairman to ask for an appropriation of $1,000,000, but will, instead, instruct him to ask for a reasonably adequate appropriation to carry on the work. I believe necessary expenditures of the committee can and will be granted by the House from time to time as the need arises. To illustrate: I expect to oppose raising the debt limit to sixty or sixty-five billion dollars at one jump, because I believe it is unwise to make this vast sum available for spending at one time. I prefer to support a program of increasing the debt limit two or three billion dollars at a time as the need arises, so that the Congress can exercise its particular function of keeping a tight hold upon the public purse strings. This, in my opinion, would also be a safe and sane procedure to apply to future appropriations for the Dies committee. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including President Woodrow Wilson's call to sea for the benefit of the World War veterans of the United States merchant marine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

THE LATE GLENN R. GRISWOLD

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOEHNE. Mr. Speaker, it is with a very heavy heart that I come to you this morning advising you of the death of a former Member of this House, one of the very best friends

I had in Indiana, the Honorable Glenn Griswold, of Peru, Ind., who died very suddenly last Thursday evening.

Mr. Griswold was known by most of the Members of this body, having served from the Seventy-second to the Seventy-fifth Congresses, inclusive. Indiana has lost a very distinguished son, a man who believed in the rights of all American citizens, and I know that you have likewise lost a very good friend.

Mr. Griswold came to Congress well equipped, having practiced law for a number of years in Peru, Ind., where he later became its city attorney in the years 1922 to 1925. Later he was prosecuting attorney of Miami County and was a member of the Indiana Railroad Commission.

During his service in this body he was a very valuable member of important committees, particularly the Labor Committee and the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation. His firm conviction that every person held inalienable rights as free men prompted him to take an important part in the development of legislation affecting both the man who toils and former members of the service establishments.

Mr. Griswold was admired for his forthrightness, his ability as a debater, and for the sincere conviction which he always expressed on matters of moment. His voice has now been stilled, but his memory and his spirit will live long after him. I know that I bespeak the sentiments of all of his former colleagues when I publicly offer to his gracious widow our heartfelt sympathy.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, it was with profound sorrow and regret that I learned of the death of Hon. Glenn R. Griswold, late of Indiana, who served with me in the Congress of the United States during the Seventy-second to the Seventy-fifth terms, inclusive.

Former Congressman Griswold was an earnest, sincere gentleman, very capable, and a man who looked after the interests of his district in a painstaking, untiring way.

Mr. Griswold entered life in humble circumstances. It was through diligence and work that he arose finally to the position of a good attorney with a good, lucrative practice in Peru, Ind., from which place he was elected to the Congress of the United States. Having followed various occupations from cowpuncher to railroader, he continued during his life and through his terms in Congress to hold his union labor cards. Among his many fine traits, he had one splendid trait which was outstanding. He never forgot the people in the lowly walks of life. His ear was ever open to them and he continued to the end to earnestly work for the uplift and the well-being and the welfare of those who toil and those who earn their living by their toil and their labor. The man who can walk in low estate and who can continue to implement and help those in low estate after he has risen above their standards and who can continue to have the well-being of those at heart whom he once trod with while in lower estate is a man and a man worth while.

In the death of Mr. Griswold his district and State and the Nation have lost a valued public servant.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include in connection therewith certain excerpts from newspapers and letters.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Thursday I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes following any other special order that may have been granted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a poem written by Horace C. Carlisle, of Alabama, who has just achieved the distinction of threescore years and ten and has prepared a salutatory to that event.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

ENTRY OF UNITED STATES INTO WAR

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, coming to Washington, I had the good fortune to read the Chicago Daily Tribune, and also early this morning, when I could not sleep, I read the Ohio State Journal. In each of those papers were startling statements concerning our getting into war. One was by the eminent Cardinal O'Connell, of the city of Boston, in which he sounded a note of alarm. Likewise, in the Ohio State Journal was an article by William E. Barrett. I ask unanimous consent that those two articles may be placed in the RECORD, so that America may be informed. Everyone should know what those great men have to say on this subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a statement from the Reader's Digest, December 1940, entitled "Hitler's Branch Offices in the U. S. A."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

HITLER'S BRANCH OFFICES IN THE U. S. A.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw every Member's attention to an article appearing in the Reader's Digest, in the December 1940 number, entitled "Hitler's Branch Offices in the U. S. A." I would draw it to the particular attention of the members of the Foreign Relations Committee and ask that they read this and see if what appears to be this overgenerous agreement with Adolph Hitler's government may not be canceled or modified in accordance with safety for this country.

I ask every Member to read this in order that he may know how diplomatic immunity is being exploited. How they send their secret Nazi messages, which are exempt and free from inspection. Whenever any of these spies or saboteurs or subversive agents are caught they are always able to plead diplomatic immunity, in which they are valiantly supported by the German diplomatic service.

This is indicated and proven in the case of the Nazi courier, Herbert Hoehne, at Los Angeles, wherein a trunk, the contents of which were said to have been suspected to include military secrets. This man was caught with no diplomatic pass, but the trunk had upon it a diplomatic seal. This trunk was taken away from our officials when a member of Fritz Wiedemann's staff rushed up with diplomatic credentials and demanded the trunk, flying it on to Mexico, and Hoehne was finally released.

Automobile numbers were checked at the bund camp in Andover, N. J. When their drills were over, five members returned to jobs at the Picatinny Arsenal, largest in the Nation; twelve to the National Guard; three to the Hercules Powder Plant in Kenville; and three to jobs as engineers in New Jersey's biggest powder plant. The Kenville plant was blown up 2 months later, killing 52. In the same week, Picatinny Arsenal was blown up, killing two more. I am taking this up with the State Department, and I ask that every Member of this House read this and take what he considers appropriate action. Here are some facts you cannot overlook.

[From Reader's Digest for December 1940—Condensed from Current History and Forum]

HITLER'S BRANCH OFFICES, U. S. A.

(By Albert Grzesinski, with Charles E. Hewitt, Jr.)

Amid all the excited discussion of Hitler's "fifth column" in the United States, the mainspring of his sabotage machine, gigantic as it is, and in plain sight of everyone, is overlooked.

I refer to his quite brazen exploitation of the international courtesy known as diplomatic immunity. Under this century-old tradition, diplomats enjoy unique privileges. Their baggage and mail are exempt from inspection. They may not even be tried for murder, nor their houses searched with warrants. In return, diplomats have traditionally behaved with great circumspection.

Then came Hitler, and turned the convenient tradition to his own uses. He sent secret agents abroad with diplomatic immunity to mask their operations. This perversion of international decency put his chief spies, saboteurs, and their files beyond interference.

In America Hitler is particularly fortunate. Under a special treaty with Germany—the most generous in the State Department's library—scores of Nazi officials here enjoy honors no less exceptional than ambassadors. Diplomatic immunity is extended to families of the embassy staffs and to all consular subordinates right down to the janitor—even to "as yet unlisted workers" at the 29 consulates.

The State Department, clinging to the old honorable diplomacy tradition, does not even possess a list of all Germans and their families and servants benefiting from immunities. It has no central file of diplomatic passports. So Nazi propagandists, spies, and troublemakers are swarming over the United States under United States protection.

In the 3 years I have been in America I have seen Nazi diplomatic representation trebled here. Consuls' duties are supposedly confined to aiding their nationals in traveling and business; and German-American trade is now almost nonexistent. Yet in New York the number of officials in the German consulate has risen from 38 to 116. This office has the further frank impertinence to maintain a political department—a thing unheard of in pre-Hitler consular services. The roster of San Francisco's consulate, headed by Hitler's friend, Fritz Wiedemann, has jumped from 8 to 28.

In Philadelphia German consular work was formerly done by an American lawyer in his spare time. But since the war Philadelphia has a new consul, no less than Erich Windels, previously chief Nazi diplomat in Canada. In the spring of 1938 a Dr. Gerhard arrived from Germany to unite all Fascist organizations in Canada under Nazi leadership. He began lavish distribution of cash and literature to that end. The first circulars exhorted all Fascist-minded Canadians to communicate with Gerhard—at Windels' office. Gerhard finally got out of Canada ahead of the police; diplomatic immunity prevented action against Windels. Now the City of Brotherly Love is honored by the presence of Windels in charge of the consulate there—assisted by two other Germans of consular rank.

And what are these consuls with their enlarged staffs up to? Consider the notorious case of Fritz Wiedemann in San Francisco, with his unique powers over all German diplomats in Central and South America. In April last year, when a would-be dictator named Busch seized power for a time in Bolivia, Wiedemann was hailed in the Reich press for "this first glorious result of his work in America." His formal assignment, beyond nazification of weak nations, is to foment all possible friction between the United States and Latin America. Hitler himself wired Wiedemann congratulations "on your fine work in defeating repeal of the Neutrality Act," which is close to an all-time high in effrontery.

Baron Edgar von Spiegel, a naval officer who is consul at New Orleans, has brazenly offered American universities subsidies to remove anti-Nazi professors. He recently warned American businessmen that they would see no contracts from Germany after the war if they continued to aid England now. The State Department did not even administer a personal rebuke, and throughout South America his unpunished insolence was highlighted as evidence of inability to cope with the Nazis.

As recently as January 4, 1939, the present vice consul in New York City, Dr. Friedhelm Draeger, was signing letters as "National Leader of the Nazi Party in America." This meant that he was actual führer of the bund, the storm troop camps, and the seditious newspapers in the United States at the same time that he was an accredited diplomat.

Now, the bund in America is part of a better mass machine of spies, saboteurs, and cash contributors than the Nazis have had in any country in Europe. Its membership list has never been surrendered despite Government subpenas and energetic F. B. I. investigation. The bund claims it has no roster or financial records. This is true; both are kept at the consulates.

Every one of the bund's 40,000 members is, by regulation, an American citizen who nevertheless renews an oath of loyalty to Hitler and the greater German Reich each year on April 20, the führer's birthday. The founder of the bund, Dr. Ignatz Griebl, was convicted of espionage in Federal court in 1938. The court declared in pronouncing sentence that Griebl was "chief of the biggest spy ring ever found in the United States in peacetime." The ring had delivered to Germany, among other data, the plans of America's newest destroyers, a coding machine just purchased by the Navy, and the blueprints of 12 new airplane types. One of the bund spies sent to Leavenworth was in active United States Army service; two of those convicted had been officers. Griebl himself escaped to Germany. He was at that time a lieutenant in the United States Army Reserve.

License plates were checked at the bund camp in Andover, N. J., this summer. When their Nazi drills were over 5 members were found to be returning to jobs at Picatinny Arsenal, largest in the Nation; 12 to positions in the National Guard; 3 to the Hercules Powder plant in Kenvil; and 3 to jobs as engineers in New Jersey's biggest power plant. Two months later New Jersey rocked beneath one of the greatest explosions in America's industrial history when the Kenvil plant went up. Fifty-two died there. Within the same week a blast at the Picatinny Arsenal killed 2 more. The F. B. I. is still investigating.

How the abuse of diplomatic immunity works may be seen from the recent incident when the F. B. I. swooped on a Nazi courier, Herbert Hoehne, as he boarded a plane in Los Angeles with a trunkload of secret documents. He carried no diplomat's pass, but the trunk had a diplomatic seal. The contents were suspected to include American military secrets. The State Department in Washington, notified by phone, was still hesitating to violate the sacred seals when a member of Wiedemann's staff rushed up. Warned from the airport, he arrived with diplomatic credentials, and, demanding the trunk, flew it on to Mexico. The United States released Hoehne. In return the German Embassy was kind enough not to make formal protest about interference with its mail.

American branches of all German businesses have enlarged as mysteriously as the consulates despite complete throttling of their trade by the blockade. The Hapag-Lloyd steamship lines have increased their staff in New York and taken over a whole new floor in Chicago. The German Railways information office (what Americans travel in Germany these days?) still spends its prewar budget of $160,000 a year. Amerop Travel Service has moved from a modest office to a complete floor on Madison Avenue with 60 employees. Public records last year showed it had 20 branches in New York State alone. The confidential files of German business houses are carefully kept out of harm's way—on the sacrosanct grounds of the nearest consulate.

And Hitler is also sheltering his outright propagandists over here under diplomatic immunity. Prince Kurt zur Lippe, de luxe propagandist lecturer, who officially records his address as "care of German consul, San Francisco," carries a diplomatic passport issued back in 1926 in Berlin. The new Nazi commissar of Hitler's public propaganda center in the United States, the German library of information, has a visa issued normally to "educators of repute, from whose teachings America will benefit."

On September 14 this German library of information, with a mailing record of over 3,000,000 items since the war began, was haled into court in New York for failure to register as a business. It had repeatedly disclaimed any connection with Hitler's government. But now that it was in danger, the German Embassy in Washington hurriedly certified that "the library's staff (over 30 men) are all employees of the Embassy and thus immune to American law."

And this branch office of Hitler-Germany, as crucial as the bund, remains unknown to the American public—the Arbeitsfront (labor front). It has still more members and collects more important dues; its membership list and books are also nonexistent.

The Arbeitsfront is a perfect sabotage switchboard in time of war or crisis. In 3 years of industrious research it has located every reliable worker of German descent—from engineer to chemist to laborer—in American industry. With German thoroughness and Nazi ruthlessness the Arbeitsfront has applied the pressure necessary to insure reliability.

The essence of secret policing and the backbone of any large-scale treason organization is voluminous and accurate reports. The 300 crack Gestapo agents here know more about many American companies than their executives know themselves. These huge files are, perforce, kept in the consulates, locked against the F. B. I. by immunity.

The use of diplomatic privilege as a prelude to sabotage and treachery was an essential part of Hitler's technique in his lightning conquest of Europe. The same tactics have been going on in half a dozen South American countries. Plans for armed revolution were seized in Montevideo this June. The local bund chief confessed they were in his own handwriting. The Reich did not apologize. Instead, the German Minister promptly dissolved the bund and took over its properties in trust—barring police from seizing records, cash, or membership lists by virtue of the Legation's diplomatic immunity.

German sabotage in the United States during the last war was run by two gentlemen amateurs, von Papen and von Rintelen, with no previous organization and with meager funds. Yet 34 factories were bombed, 6 railroad terminals and utilities knocked out, and 36 freight ships blown up.

From my experience in German police work and my close study of "fifth column" activities in Europe I know that Hitler's abuse of diplomatic immunity is a vital part of his aim to paralyze America. He isn't trusting to amateurs this time. When der Tag comes again to the United States it will bring, as in so many unsuspecting European nations, wholesale bombings and confusing broadcasts, destruction of factories and disruption of railroads, stalling of battleships, and break-down of army equipment. That is the way the Nazi high command has planned it, with the world's finest organizing brains to prepare each detail. Hitler means it when he says repeatedly, "America cannot count in this war." One bund chief recently boasted, "America is the easiest country Hitler has tackled yet. We will never have to outfight the Americans; we have outsmarted them already."

Yet it may not be too late for America to defend herself against this undeclared war which Hitler is waging through his diplomats. A few Americans are alive to the peril. A vigorous campaign conducted by the New York Post against Consul Friedrich Ried, promoted to New York City after flagrant "fifth column" work in Brazil, led to his recall. Other newspapers have helped expose the danger. Dorothy Thompson's all-out campaign to "send the Nazi consuls home now" is the most hopeful sign of all. But it will take a concerted drive rather than occasional exposures to make the unsuspecting American public realize the extent and determination of the disguised forces pitted against the United States today.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a speech entitled "What Are We Fighting For?"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix by inserting a compilation of information concerning veterans of the World War.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Most Important Problem Now Confronting America, and to include certain clippings and quotations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

COMMERCE WITH GREAT BRITAIN

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, in connection with all the press reports we have these days pertaining to purchases by Great Britain and her need of financial assistance from the people of the United States, I find from the Department of State Press Release No. 500, dated November 28, 1940, that the actual exports of arms and ammunition and implements of war to the entire British Empire during the first 10 months of this year amounted to only $165,580,960; and from the Treasury statement of July 31, 1940, the British war debt in default to the people of the United States of America is $5,651,792,000; that the total exports of all categories to Great Britain alone in the first 10 months was $134,960,000; and that the total export licenses issued in the first 10 months of 1940 amounted to only $591,341,000.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks to expand on the facts in connection with these purchases and shipments and to include two very brief tables.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Actual exports of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to Great Britain and the British Empire during the 10 months ending Oct. 31, 1940—Total exports 10 months

Australia	$9,605,022
Bermuda	10,638
British Guiana	5,418
British Honduras	270
Canada	18,508,159
Great Britain and Ireland	134,962,563
India	89,462
Kenya Colony	618
New Zealand	189,898
Southern Rhodesia	112,316
Union of South Africa	2,095,696
Total	165,580,060

Total licenses issued 10 months of 1940 amount to $591,341,000 worth of arms, ammunition, and implements of war for the British Isles.

Canadian licenses were $44,500,000 in the same period, of which only $18,508,159 were delivered.

Exports of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to Great Britain, first 10 months of 1940, by categories

Total exports, all categories	$134,962,563
Category I (2) machine guns	10,307,054
Category I (4) ammunition	16,390,561
Category III (1) airplanes assembled, unassembled	60,601,794
Category V (3) aircraft engines	19,768,679
Category VII (1) propellant powders	8,198,976
Category V (2) propellers, air screws, etc	5,628,996

All other categories make up the balance of $134,962,563. Great Britain has not purchased any war vessels or tanks in the 10 months in which deliveries were made.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I would not lead anyone to believe that what Great Britain or the British Empire has done heretofore in the way of placing orders with us for goods is any yardstick for what those countries may find necessary to do in the future. At the same time, until I saw these figures I was working under the wrong impression, and I personally feel that millions of our people are thoroughly uninformed on these matters. In talking with a British subject only last week I pointed out to him that I felt we should require security on such loans as the United States might make to any foreign country, whether it be Great Britain or some other belligerent or country at peace with other nations. It is very clear that the way the situation is now shaping up the people of the United States and the Members of Congress will have to make some very far-reaching decisions on this question within the near future. I believe that it is reasonable to say that the United States will be forced, by events now shaping themselves, to decide between becoming an economic colony of Great Britain again or the official receiver of probably a bankrupt British Empire. I say this for several reasons, and among them I would point out that England is laboring under a terrific first World War debt, in addition to being forced to carry the burden of the present great conflict while her opponents have long ago repudiated or canceled out, through inflation, the war debts created in 1914 to 1920. It is not reasonable to assume that Britain can work out from under her old war debt and the burdens of the present conflict and retain a whole economic fabric and do it unaided. Appeals are now being made to the United States in a most unusual manner, and the Bank of England, with its powerful forces of education and propaganda, along with its friends and connections in the United States, will go a very long way to have our fiscal policies shaped toward tremendous assistance for the British Empire in all of its undertakings. Speaking very plainly and bluntly—and matters of this scope are subject to such words—I have no hesitancy in saying that those in charge of British propaganda will compliment, cajole, and praise us to the skies until we are thoroughly in, or even perhaps until the conflict has been won or lost, and then, having passed that point, we will be the scum of the international crowd. We should do one of two things if we are to go along with financing these operations—either make our contributions in the form of a gift with our eyes wide open or make loans with full security in the way of investments Britain holds in our industries, against our units of government, or, by giving us collateral represented by empire holdings like, for instance, the British West Indies. Then when the war is over and the settlements are to be made, we do the best we can under the circumstances. Every student of this question is well aware of the fact that the administration is lining up every force of government toward the support of the administration's policy covering international affairs and our attitude toward the present war in Europe. It will be a very easy matter for our people to overlook the importance of our retaining foreign trade which operates independent of war orders. If our industries are to be geared to the wartime demands of England, and if we are to build our economy on that demand, permitting British colonies to largely maintain export peacetime trade for the benefit of the Empire, we can rest assured that when orders for armaments, ammunitions, and implements of war cease to flow to our factories there will be a financial and economic collapse in the United States that will tax every thread in our democratic fabric. It will then remain to be seen whether or not our democracy can survive—and there is little reason for us to assume that it can under the stress that will then be with us. England and every totalitarian country in the world knows this to be true. Let me ask, What world power now operating will worry about our economic and social troubles? What world power has worried about us the last 50 years insofar as helping us was concerned? What country came to our rescue in the so-called dark days of 1929–33 which we hear so much about? What country will support our tottering economic structure if we forfeit our peacetime export trade, lend our substance to other countries, build our debt, double and treble our taxes, regiment our people, and attempt to assume the burdens of all the world when we have such a deplorable mess here at home? Only the other day one of the administration officials appeared before a committee here in Washington and pointed out that 45,000,000 of our people were undernourished. The farm people know very well what has happened to their export markets, what is taking place in the way of advancing prices on the goods they must purchase, and the white-collar class of workers know that they are being caught between increasing local and Federal taxes and a potential collapse in our economy which will again wipe out their equities. We can well afford, Mr. Speaker, to weigh well the blandishments of other nations at this particular moment. After all, there is an internal economy of our people that has not yet been placed on a firm foundation, and it is with such we shall have to deal in the years to come.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a short editorial from the New York Times and a statement by Dr. McCracken, president of Vassar College, on the war situation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD three times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a short table discussed in the remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include a statement by the city editor of the Lima News.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

DR. B. L. PURSIFULL ET AL.

Mr. EBERHARTER, from the Committee on Claims, submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 658), for the relief of the estate of Dr. B. L. Pursifull, Grace Pursifull, Eugene Pursifull, Ralph Pursifull, Bobby Pursifull, and Dora Little, for printing in the RECORD.

CONFERENCE REPORT—DR. B. L. PURSIFULL ET AL.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the conference report on the bill, H. R. 658, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a unanimous report of the conferees, as I understand.

Mr. EBERHARTER. It is a unanimous report of the conferees; yes.

Mr. MICHENER. In view of the fact there are a few here, will the gentleman explain in a brief way what the bill is and what it does?

Mr. EBERHARTER. For that purpose I should like to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION] who introduced the measure, and who knows more about it than I really do myself.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I believe it was in June 1937, that Dr. Pursifull, his wife, three small sons, and a Mrs. Little, were in an automobile driving on a public highway in Jackson County, Ky., near McKee, when a C. C. C. truck crossed the road and demolished Dr. Pursifull's car. The occupants of the car, whom I have named, were badly injured. It turned out later that the driver of the C. C. C. truck admitted to being drunk when he was driving the truck; and information of his condition was brought to the attention of the foreman before the driver left the C. C. C. camp. It is one of those cases of clear and willful negligence.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. I now recall the case; it comes back to me. The bill was given careful consideration by the House and passed unanimously.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. What was done to the bill in the Senate that caused it to go to conference?

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. These people, as I say, were badly injured, and Dr. Pursifull died within a year. Dr. Pursifull was a young physician making from $6,000 to $10,000 a year. The hospital bills alone for these people amounted to $2,000. The House allowed $8,300. The Senate cut it down to $5,100, and the conference committee agreed on $6,025.

Mr. EBERHARTER. It allows about $2,100 or $2,200 less.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 658) entitled "An Act for the relief of the estate of Doctor B. L. Pursifull, Grace Pursifull, Eugene Pursifull, Ralph Pursifull, Bobby Pursifull, and Dora Little", having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the figures "$1,681.84" insert "$2,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the figures "$1,138.65" insert "$1,500"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 3: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the figures "$182" insert "$200"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figures "$106" insert "$125"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figures "$1,096" insert "$1,200"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the figures "$961" insert "$1,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 658) for the relief of the estate of Dr. B. L. Pursifull, Grace Pursifull, Eugene Pursifull, Ralph Pursifull, Bobby Pursifull, and Dora Little, submit the following statement in explanation to the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

This bill as it passed the House provided for the payment of $2,500 to the estate of Dr. B. L. Pursifull, $2,245 to Grace Pursifull, $250 to the legal representative of Ralph Pursifull, $250 to the legal representative of Eugene Pursifull, and $1,850 to the legal representative of Bobby Pursifull, each of whom are infants under the age of 21 years, and $1,200 to Dora Little, all residing at McKee, Jackson County, Ky., for damages sustained on account of bodily injuries received by them on June 6, 1937, when the car in which they were riding was struck by a Civilian Conservation Corps truck assigned to the Forest Service.

When the bill was considered by the Senate and passed they reduced the amount payable to $1,681.84 to the estate of Dr. B. L. Pursifull, $1,138.65 to Grace Pursifull, $182 to the legal representative of Ralph Pursifull, $106 to the legal representative of Eugene Pursifull, and $1,096 to the legal representative of Bobby Pursifull, each of whom are infants under the age of 21 years, and $961 to Dora Little.

At the conference the conferees agreed to the amounts as follows: $2,000 to the estate of Dr. B. L. Pursifull, $1,500 to Grace Pursifull, $200 to the legal representative of Ralph Pursifull, $125 to the legal representative of Eugene Pursifull, and $1,200 to the legal representative of Bobby Pursifull, each of whom are infants under the age of 21 years, and $1,000 to Dora Little.

AMBROSE J. KENNEDY,
ROBERT RAMSPECK,
J. PARNELL THOMAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

THANKSGIVING DAY

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I realize there is a big war going on and that we are studying a great many other things, but our plans are to live and get along right here in the United States of America. Today there is something I want to bring to your attention.

Last year a little matter came up about which the people got somewhat exercised. It concerned our Thanksgiving. The President issued a proclamation fixing Thanksgiving on a date different from that on which it is usually observed, and some people reported actual hardships—slight, to be sure. It occurred to me, Mr. Speaker, that if we could adopt a resolution—and I have one I expect to introduce next Thursday; I should like to talk with you about it awhile first, however—if we could get a resolution fixing Thanksgiving in the District of Columbia the first Thursday following the third Sunday in each November, that that would put it far enough back and far enough forward and fix it close enough to operate and not leave anything to fly up and hit us in the face any more. I believe, if we could do that in the District of Columbia, that it would follow through all over the country. For example, let us see: November 19 would then be the earliest day on which Thanksgiving could fall, and Thursday, November 25, the latest date on which it could fall. So I think action on such a resolution would solve the little problem that we have been rocking backward and forward on, and maybe it is of enough importance to bring to the attention of the Congress.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. If I have any unexpired time.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I may say to the gentleman that a resolution touching that subject has already been introduced.

Mr. PATRICK. I am much obliged; if I like it better than mine, I shall support it.

[Here the gavel fell.]

FOREIGN LANGUAGE PUBLICATIONS IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, there are at the present time in the United States published 1,047 newspapers, periodicals, and magazines which are printed in foreign languages.

I do not accuse the majority of these publications of being against the constituted Government of the United States, but information which I have been studying leads me to believe that far too many of these publications printed in foreign languages are being used for the purpose of an attempted overthrow of the Government of the United States.

We have created a committee which I believe by and large is doing good work, the Dies committee, and I am today asking the committee of this House on un-American activities thoroughly to investigate the publication of these periodicals with a view to perhaps stopping what might become a dangerous situation. [Applause.]

PAN AMERICAN COTTON CONGRESS

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, after a conference with the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], the acting minority leader, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate Joint Resolution 302 for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 302

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and requested by proclamation or in such manner as he may deem proper to invite all foreign countries and nations to the Pan American Cotton Congress to be held at Memphis, Tenn., during the year 1941, with a request that they participate therein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER]?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I objected to this bill when it was before the House the other day for the reason that I understood that this was what would amount in the end to another world's fair, or something of that type, where foreign nations would be requested to present exhibits. I cited the fact at that time that in all past instances the Congress had later been confronted with a follow-up resolution appropriating money to carry out the purposes of the original resolution. However, I now understand that the instant resolution only provides for an invitation to attend a convention or a conference, and that this resolution in no sense contemplates a world's fair or anything that approaches it. If this resolution is enacted, it simply means that the President of the United States is authorized to invite these southern republics to attend a cotton convention or conference to be held in Memphis. If this is true, certainly there should be no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan to the fact that when we passed a resolution inviting foreign countries to attend a similar—you might even call it an exhibition or a fair at Sacramento, Calif., in 1939, commemorating the one hundredth anniversary of the founding of Sutter's Fort at that place—there was no appropriation asked thereafter from the United States Government; consequently, the gentleman is in error when he says that in all cases appropriations have been asked.

Mr. MICHENER. There are exceptions, of course, to all rules. Maybe I have covered too much territory. I was here when that resolution passed. The gentleman did keep faith with the Congress, as he always does, and for that he is to be complimented. No appropriation was asked for.

Mr. BUCK. I kept faith with the Congress, and that is what I rose to say.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I only regret that this conference is not to be held in Washington where every Member of Congress could attend, especially southern Members.

I want to call attention to the fact that I was one of the Members who opposed what was known as the original Bankhead bill to limit cotton production by law in 1933. The State of Sao Paulo, one of the large cotton-growing States in Brazil, produced only about 100,000 bales of cotton in 1932, the year before the Bankhead law was passed. Since that law was passed the cotton grown in Sao Paulo alone rose to 1,200,000 bales in 1939. The State of Sao Paulo now produces more cotton than does the State of Mississippi, which is the second largest cotton-growing State in the American Union. I simply want to emphasize the fact that the philosophy of scarcity will not work in a free economy. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER]?

There was no objection.

The Senate resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes today immediately following the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the other special orders for today I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is recognized for 20 minutes.

STRIKES IN INDUSTRIES PRODUCING WAR MATERIALS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the Members of the House will recall that recently we had some discussion on the floor of the House with reference to strikes in industries producing war materials and I made the statement then that the Committee on the Judiciary was taking notice of the situation. I am not authorized in what I am about to say to state the judgment or indicate definitely the attitude of the Committee on the Judiciary, but most of the Members of the House I am sure will be interested in the statement which I am about to make.

It is appreciated by the Committee on the Judiciary that the situation is serious. The Committee on the Judiciary earnestly wants to be of practical service in this situation. I believe that all members of the committee agree, and I think the Members of the House agree, that our situation is serious and that now, depending upon how we proceed with reference to this matter, we may unite our people or drive some deep lines of cleavage among our people. We want to avoid the latter. Everyone in this country, however they may feel with regard to it, is conscious of the fact that day by day we appear to be drawing closer to actual contact with the World War.

The House and Senate, supported by the country, voted to subject the young manhood of this country to compulsory military service, taking them away from their homes and their business and to interpose possibly their bodies between this country and those who may become this Government's enemies.

I should like to make this statement, and I am stating that which all the world knows. We are not now adequately prepared to supply these young men with those things necessary for their own protection and for the defense of this country. That is a very serious situation. It is a situation so serious and so far reaching in its possibilities that no person in this country who has any intelligence can fail to recognize, speaking generally, that this people have but one business in America that is relatively of any importance, and that is to make this country secure as far as it is possible to do it.

We do not want to repeat in America the mistakes of France, where manufacturers were concerned for a profit and the operatives were concerned for what they called social gains, slowing up defense preparation while Germany unitedly was preparing for their destruction. When we look across to the situation in France now we wonder what those manufacturers and their operatives would now give if they had stood together in those hours of great opportunity and made the frontier of France impregnable. What would they now give if they had done that? We do not want to repeat that mistake.

I speak with assurance with regard to the laboring people of my part of the country when I say they are just as patriotic as the people in the offices of the factories, speaking generally. It is my observation, and I have studied people all my life, that people of the same blood and the same environment are the same sort of people, whether they are in the factories or in the offices of the factories. The quicker we learn that and attempt to deal with our problems on that basis the quicker we will get somewhere.

It is unfortunate in America that each group now is looking at its own perfections and looking to see what is wrong with the other fellow. If we would turn the spotlight on ourselves a little bit, it would help solve this situation. That is the first thing for us to try to find out—"What is wrong with me? What is my attitude?" I believe there is some disposition now to do that. I am certain that if we will develop the right sort of leadership here the American people will present to the world as great and as effective a unity as any people have presented in the periods of our history.

I want to make an additional statement. It is my conviction, and I believe you will agree, that unless we do this we cannot win through the difficulties which now confront us. That is all there is to it.

It is a remarkable thing, when we really look at the situation as it is, that an American citizen in this tragic hour in the history of all time will be considering "What advantage can I personally get out of this situation?"—making merchandise out of the deepest interests and vital necessities of a great republic. We have but one business in America today, and that is to save this country as a place where men may remain free. We have just one business that is worth anything. What business do they have now in England and in many other parts of the world? Just one business. If we will attend to that business now, we may not have to go through what they are going through on the other side.

I want to repeat a statement, and I am going to keep on saying it until somebody will agree with me. It is not a matter of mysticism; I do not profess to be psychic, but I believe the facts justify the conclusion that we will be a foolish people if we imagine that we are going to escape the necessity of meeting the test which the other nations of the earth are now being compelled to meet.

The Committee on the Judiciary wants to cooperate with the administrative agencies of the Government. I have here some letters, Mr. Speaker, which I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk now read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

NOVEMBER 26, 1940.

The Honorable ROBERT H. JACKSON,
Attorney General of the United States.

MY DEAR MR. ATTORNEY GENERAL: I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary of the House respectfully to inquire if there is any additional legislation necessary and, if so, what, to make as certain as may be that the Government's preparedness program be not interfered with, and particularly that the operation of the manufacturing plants engaged in the production of war materials be not interfered with by such strikes as are now tying up some of these plants. I beg to assure you that the Committee on the Judiciary is anxious to be as helpful as possible in these matters.

I am further directed to ask you to please bring this communication to the attention of the conference which we are advised is to be held at the White House this afternoon with reference to these strikes.

Very respectfully yours,

HATTON W. SUMNERS.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., November 28, 1940.

Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN SUMNERS: I greatly appreciate the cooperative attitude indicated by the Judiciary Committee of the House in soliciting our suggestions for legislation to prevent delays in the production of defense materials. It is in line with the fine cooperation from your committee this Department always has in its problems.

The particular situation which precipitated your inquiry has now been solved without additional legislation.

This Department has, as you know, no authority or responsibility in the field of general labor policy. We do not execute or approve any contracts and only become concerned when violation of law or subversive activities are involved, and then we are concerned, not because it is a labor situation but because of the specific violations or activities.

Frankly, I do not feel that our collateral relationship to these labor questions justifies us in making recommendations covering the field of labor relations, which is chiefly committed to other departments.

In view of the fact that primarily responsibility for the procurement of materials is upon the War and Navy Departments and members of the Defense Commission in charge of production and that the matter of labor relations is primarily upon the Department of Labor and the members of the Defense Commission in charge of labor relations, any suggestions from me at this time for legislative action could be nothing more than the intrusion of personal views, more likely to complicate than to solve the problem.

Certainly, in the field of law enforcement, with which this Department is concerned, the present situation in respect of strikes presents no law-enforcement problem that is either novel or out of hand. We will take the liberty of suggesting from time to time certain additional legislation which we feel would be helpful in the field of law enforcement. In this field your committee has given us constant support and where our proposals for legislation have been delayed or defeated it has usually been through no failure of your committee to understand or sympathize with our problems.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT H. JACKSON,
Attorney General.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, upon the receipt of that letter from the Attorney General I addressed a letter to the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the chairman of the Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may now read this letter and the replies thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

NOVEMBER 28, 1940.

HON. FRANCES PERKINS,
Secretary of Labor, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MME. SECRETARY: The Committee on the Judiciary is anxious to be as helpful as possible to the agencies of the Government charged with the responsibility of providing for the national defense, and especially at this time in making certain the uninterrupted operation of manufacturing plants engaged in the production of war materials.

I am, therefore, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House writing to inquire if any additional legislation is needed, and, if so, what, to aid you in the discharge of your responsibilities in the premises.

Very respectfully yours,

HATTON W. SUMNERS.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the Clerk now read the reply of the Secretary of Labor?

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., November 30, 1940.

The Honorable HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I have your letter of November 28, 1940, telling me that your committee is anxious to be as helpful as possible to the agencies of the Government charged with the responsibility of providing for the national defense, particularly with a view to making certain the uninterrupted operation of manufacturing plants engaged in the production of materials. I appreciate the considerate attitude of your committee.

This Department is keenly aware of the importance of keeping open factories handling defense orders. Until the various aspects of the situation have been studied, I am inclined to think that any proposal which I might make to Congress at the present time would be premature.

As soon as the Department has thoroughly studied the matter, I shall be glad to give you a further report.

Sincerely yours,

FRANCES PERKINS.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. There is also a reply from the secretary of the Defense Commission.

The Clerk read as follows:

THE ADVISORY COMMISSION TO THE COUNCIL OF NATIONAL DEFENSE,
FEDERAL RESERVE BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., December 5, 1940.

Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS,
Chairman, Committee on the Judiciary, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Ed Stettinius gave me your letter of November 28, in which you inquire if any additional legislation is needed by the National Defense Commission.

I discussed this matter with the Commission yesterday, and I am authorized to say that at the present time we have no specific suggestions to make for additional legislation. The Commission asked me to say to you that it would appreciate, however, an opportunity to be heard on any proposals that may be made from other sources for legislation affecting national-defense activities.

The Commission also asked me to say to you that it is deeply appreciative of the very considerate attention you have already given to matters affecting it in legislation already passed at this session.

Very sincerely yours,

WM H. MCREYNOLDS,
Secretary.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the committee has received no reply as yet from the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy.

The Committee on the Judiciary has appointed a subcommittee to get in touch with the agencies and instrumentalities and persons most interested in the keeping open of these factories and to study the whole question, both for the purpose of being immediately helpful, if possible, and for the purpose of being fully advised if it should become necessary for the committee upon its own volition to move in the situation, having in mind that if that necessity should develop the committee would probably have to move very quickly. I make these statements only in order that the House and the country may be advised as to the situation thus far developed.

I believe the Committee on the Judiciary and the Members of the House and the country as a whole are agreed on this one proposition and are willing to give proper consideration and, if possible, relief to anybody aggrieved with reference to any condition which obtains in any of these plants producing the necessities of defense or war, but I do not believe that the country will compromise one iota on the proposition that having subjected its young manhood to the possibilities of compulsory military service, having voted these billions of dollars, that it will be tolerated for one split second that anybody can paralyze the operation of these plants upon which the safety of this Nation may depend. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think the statement of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee is most timely and I do feel that he speaks the sentiments of this Congress and the country. I would just like to call attention at this time to the fact that on the west coast and in the northwest country there is a strike going on which we are told is tying up the lumber necessary in the building of the cantonments of this country and 12,000 workers are involved.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. My time is short and I would like to make this statement. The committee wants to avoid any appearance of being officious in this matter. We want to be as helpful as we can in coordinating and bringing about cooperation among all the instrumentalities of government, organized labor, and everybody else who wants to keep these plants open, but we want them kept open.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on the statement made by the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. HINSHAW. Not only does this strike in the Northwest affect the defense housing proposition, it also affects the actual defense industries themselves; for example, the several aircraft factories that are out there are needing lumber to expand their own facilities, to say nothing of lumber for crating purposes, and that is one of the sources or the prime source for this material. That is, indeed, a defense industry of the first magnitude.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, it certainly will be encouraging to the people of the country to learn of the statement of the gentleman from Texas. It is all very well, and it is very generous for the Committee on the Judiciary to ask the advice of the departments of the Government for suggestions as to what should be done; but, after all, Congress is here, and there is a presumption—however faint it may be—that we are qualified and able to deal with some of these problems ourselves.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for just 1 minute?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I make the observation that while Congress is qualified to enact laws, Congress cannot deal with this problem. It is an administrative job.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, as I understand it—and with all due deference to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS]—the Attorney General having advised us that he does not need any laws to end the trouble, it certainly cannot be an administrative or an executive problem. He says that we have law enough, and yet this thing continues. Now, we must assume that the executive department is doing everything that can be done or could be done, and that, therefore, the fault lies in a lack of legislation to meet the situation.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Does the gentleman from Michigan know that since an agency under Sydney Hillman was created to coordinate or promote harmonious relations between labor and capital in defense industries that over 200 differences of opinion between union labor and industry have been settled with very few stoppages of work, and at the present time there are far fewer strikes and dislocations due to strikes than occurred in 1917, when this country was actually at war? So the situation today——

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, may I have 5 additional minutes? I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to go ahead.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. And the situation is not as bad as has been pictured here many times. We all agree there should not be any stoppage of work due to sabotage or anything of that sort, but it is my personal opinion that labor has been very cooperative and that union labor under wise leadership has settled most of the differences that have occurred. In perhaps one or two instances there might be cause for complaint, but I think we are making a little bit too much noise over the one or two stoppages that have occurred.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Well, I thank the gentleman and I call his attention to a letter that he received a few days ago, a copy of which was sent to me, and which was inserted in the RECORD by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD]. I think it came from his district and in it attention was called to the fact that although the men up there wanted to work—and this was not on a defense project, and this was in the gentleman's district, and although the employer and the employees had agreed, a minority would not let a majority of the employees go to work.

This is all beside the point I was going to speak about, but it illustrates that all our labor troubles are not settled.

While we are gratified to know that so many have been settled, the fact still remains that there are hundreds of thousands of men who are not permitted to work for the United States Government on what the gentleman from Texas said was our most important job, the preservation of the Union, because a few individuals demand that those men seeking work, pay fees that they did not have and could not get.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman permit me to make a further observation?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that within 2 or 3 days after he received that letter that strike was settled amicably and the plant is in full operation now? So that if Congress had stepped in, probably it would have delayed the settlement.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is fine. There was no justification for one group preventing, by force, the majority from working.

RACKETEERS DELAY DEFENSE PROGRAM, ADD TO ITS COST—EVIDENCE SUPPORTING CHARGES OF WASHINGTON STAR'S REPORTER, ROBERT BRUSKIN, AVAILABLE

On November 20, the Washington Star published a story by Robert Bruskin to the effect that men seeking work as carpenters at Fort Meade, Md., were required to pay tribute to and join a union before they could go to work on a Government defense job. The reporter also stated that the union made no inquiry as to the applicant's qualifications as a carpenter.

Later, at the demand of a union official, the Star retracted the statement that no inquiry was made as to an applicant's qualifications for his job. However, several men living in the vicinity of Washington have either told me or written me to the effect that they knew of men working at Fort Belvoir and on other Government defense projects as carpenters who never had been carpenters and who could not qualify as such.

GOVERNMENT PERMITS RACKETEERING

No denial was made of that portion of the reporter's statement which alleged that men seeking to exercise their constitutional right to work were denied that right until they had crossed the palm of the union official with folding money. In fact, union officials admit the practice, although they do not cite any law or moral reason which justifies it.

The practice of the unions is just another form of racketeering. There would seem to be no reason why those extorting this money should not be indicted for conspiracy to defraud and for a conspiracy to interfere with the naitonal-defense program.

DEMOCRACY ABROAD—NOT AT HOME

While this country is preparing, through the expenditure of billions of dollars and peacetime conscription of men, to participate in a foreign war, on the theory either of making the world safe for democracy or of protecting our own freedom and civil rights, it shuts its eyes and holds its nose while right here in the shadow of the Capitol men are walking the streets seeking jobs to keep themselves and their families from threatened hunger or application to relief authorities.

The jobs are here. The men are needed. They are qualified. On one side of the street are the jobs. On the other, seeking to get to them, are the men. But in between and preventing them going to the jobs which would support them and their families and keep down the relief rolls, are these union racketeers. They deny to these men their civil rights—the right to work.

Where is the so-called Senate Civil Liberties Committee, which has held so many investigations, printed so many thousand pages of testimony, shed so many crocodile tears over the claimed denial of civil rights to strikers?

No greater hypocrisy was ever exhibited in any nation than that now shown by this administration and its agencies, which loudly and persistently boasts of social legislation and yet refuses to act when hundreds—yes, thousands—of its citizens are denied the right to work for the defense of the Government until they have complied with the demands of these conspirators, who by their demands are lessening the ability of the Government to prepare to meet the threatened invasion which the President said was imminent.

DYNAMITER AND RACKETEER

What is the difference in effect between the man who blows up a munitions factory and the man or the organization which bars the gates against the man who would operate the plant? The dynamiter is condemned on all hands, but those who accomplish the same thing by compelling the payment of tribute before one can work on the program go uncondemned, unpunished by the administration.

RACKETEERING

The whole procedure is racketeering, plain and simple.

In addition to the exploitation of the workingman, for whose interests this administration claims to have done so much, there are other aspects of the situation which are essentially vicious.

COST OF DEFENSE PROGRAM INCREASED, DELAYED

As the gentleman from California [Mr. COSTELLO] so logically and forcefully pointed out on the floor last Thursday, the procedure of some of these unions is adding enormously to the cost of the defense program and will result, if it continues, in giving us less defense for the same amount of money than we otherwise would receive. That is to say, if we have only so much money to spend for defense, we will get fewer planes, tanks, guns, ships, less munitions of war, because of the practice of these unions. The truthfulness of this charge can be easily demonstrated.

Again, the practice of these union racketeers is delaying operations having to do with national defense. When men are striking, they are not working. Saturday's press gave us the information that strikes had completely tied up lumbering operations on the west coast. What is the sense of conscripting men, sending them to camps, then letting strikers deny to workers the lumber necessary to house these conscripted men or to build the ships or the planes which we must have for defense?

MUST WE JOIN TWO UNIONS?

Our forefathers fought to establish this Union. They fought to maintain it, to make it one Union, indivisible. Must we, as members of that great Union, join another union, give to this other union of our property, before we can work to sustain this Union of the United States of America?

If a common laborer on one of these defense jobs must join the A. F. of L. to carry boards for the carpenter, must he join the C. I. O. whose teamsters are hauling the lumber to the yard, before he can unload it from the truck?

The President was very successful in creating a war hysteria prior to election. He was here, there, and all over on his so-called inspection trips, which were merely electioneering trips. Now, safely elected, he deserts the national-defense program. He lets these strikers hold up the defense program. He lets the union racketeers rob men who want to work on that program, and he, on a Government vessel, goes vacationing in comfort and in luxury.

Nero may have fiddled while Rome burned, but the President of the United States, having told us our land is threatened with invasion, having insisted upon the appropriation of billions of dollars to prepare to meet the foreign foe, upon a conscription bill in peacetime, takes his hat in his hand, bows himself out of Washington, and once again goes on a pleasure jaunt.

PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS IDLE—MEN JOBLESS

While the President fishes and vacations in the Caribbean Sea, while Congressmen sit idle in Washington or at home, this Christmas season men walk the streets of Washington, of nearby communities, jobless, their families with hunger or applications to go on the relief roll staring them in the face. Congress meets from time to time. It exerts itself and the sum total of its efforts is an adjournment for another 3-day period.

Here in Washington, although Congress is supposed to be in session, although there is legislation demanding its attention, Congress is no more effective than an old, broody hen setting on a nest full of doorknobs.

EDITOR DENOUNCES BILL WHICH WOULD PERMIT MEN TO WORK WITHOUT PAYING TRIBUTE

The morning mail brought to my desk copy of an editorial from the Detroit Free Press of December 7 last. The editor, after stating that many voices had been raised protesting against the Vultee Aircraft strike at Downey, Calif., and that a "number of so-called solutions" had been advanced, wrote:

> Thursday one of the most vicious of the latter attained the dignity of a congressional bill under the sponsorship of Representative CLARE E. HOFFMAN. HOFFMAN'S measure would outlaw the payment of money as a condition for obtaining work on defense projects. Translated, this means payment of union dues.

The bill means nothing of the kind. It means the end of the practice that only union men can work for Uncle Sam.

This editorial reveals a most amazing lack of information and illogical reasoning or a lapse in mental processes. The bill introduced by me and to which the editor refers makes it an offense for anyone to demand as a condition precedent for employment on a national-defense program the payment of a fee. It in no way prohibits the payment of union dues. It would prohibit under the guise of demanding union dues a demand for the payment of a sum of money from everyone seeking work on a Government job. No doubt the editor of the Free Press would be one of the first to condemn the man who insisted that before the Free Press could be sold on the street or be printed union dues or a fee must be paid to him.

The editor of the Detroit Free Press gives his support to the program which conscripts men regardless of membership in a union while the country is at peace. The editor gives his support to the action of our Government which compels all, whether he be union or nonunion, to pay taxes. On just what principle does the editor of the Detroit Free Press support a policy which requires a taxpayer, the father or the brother of a conscripted man, to pay tribute to a union before he can go to work for the Government for which his son or brother may be forced to fight? Unions are not governmental agencies. No one gives them the right to say who shall or who shall not work for our Nation. No one gives them the right to say that before a man can assist in building a cantonment to shelter a conscripted man he must pay the union tribute.

Does the editor of the Detroit Free Press stand back of that practice which holds that only union men can work on Government jobs? Just how does the editor of the Detroit Free Press justify himself in supporting, for example, the strikers on the west coast who refuse now to cut the timber, manufacture the lumber which is needed for the building of camps to take our influenza-infected conscripts out of the tents in which they have been living, which holds that no one but members of the union can work on the job?

The editor says that a bill which would prohibit a man in Detroit or at Fort Custer from compelling a farmer or a mechanic or a clerk from the Fourth Congressional District obtaining a job at one of those places or elsewhere on Government work is a vicious law.

The editor of the Press would be one of the first, would he not, or would he, to condemn the hold-up man who on the streets of Detroit took a $5 bill from the workingman's pocket; but my efforts to prevent a union man compelling a nonunion man to dig up $45 for the privilege of exercising the right to work as a carpenter at Fort Custer is vicious, so says the editor.

My efforts to prevent a union man demanding that a farmer or a farmer's boy or a clerk in the Third or Fourth Congressional District of Michigan pay $25 for the privilege of working at Fort Custer is a vicious one, so says the editor of the Detroit Free Press—rot and nonsense, and he ought to know it.

It is just such half-baked editorials as this which do so much to discredit the press. Let the editor of the Detroit Free Press back up this racketeering effort if he will. He will learn in time that, no matter what you call it, no matter how you dress it up, nor how you describe it, racketeering is racketeering, and that no man in this free America has the right to demand that before another man can earn his daily bread, render service to his Government, he must pay tribute.

The editorial in the Free Press gives support to an un-American device; it gives support to a practice which is adding billions of dollars to the cost of our defense program; and it encourages those who are fattening upon the blood which they suck from the veins of honest American workers.

WHILE UNION MEN QUARREL DEFENSE JOB WAITS

Mr. Speaker, I have been advised through the press that this morning 75 carpenters employed on the construction of the new building for the War Department, which will cost approximately four and a half million dollars and which, under the contract, should be completed by June 1, 1941, went on strike.

This was here in Washington. These carpenters belonged to the A. F. of L., and they struck, I am advised, because five other men are doing certain work connected with the erecting of backing for metal bases. These men who are doing this work on the metal bases are members of the wood and metal lathers' union, affiliated with the A. F. of L., and the A. F. of L. carpenters, who do not belong to the wood and metal lathers' union, are determined that members of their union shall do the work. The carpenters are getting $1.62½ per hour, the union scale; and, so far as I know, they have no complaint as to wages, hours, working conditions, or nonunion men being employed on the job.

In addition to the authority to compel all who work upon the job to pay dues to a union for the privilege of working, they have now gone one step further, and they have decided that they shall parcel out the work, distribute the jobs, tell each man what part of the work he shall do. They have assumed, in addition to the duty of carpenters, not only the power to levy tribute but to act as construction foremen.

Let the people of Washington thank the good Lord that these carpenters did not decide that this new War Department should be erected in the central part of Michigan, where men stand ready to work for half or less than the sum demanded by these men.

Here is a four and one-half million dollar Government job for the War Department held up because the union men cannot decide who of their number is to do the work. They are all union men, and they are holding up our defense while they quarrel among themselves as to which one is to do a particular job.

If the majority party, upon which rests the responsibility for ending the intolerable situation which confronts us, will not act, we of the minority should let the people know who is responsible for the inaction.

NEED FOR INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE

The need for a committee to investigate this denial of work to our citizens, this levying of tribute without legal or moral authority and to recommend remedial legislation is apparent from what has been printed in the public press, from the excerpts from letters which have heretofore been placed in the RECORD and from the statements which are appended hereto.

Let me repeat some of the statements which have been made to me and are contained in these communications.

FAIRFAX CARPENTER PROTESTS

Last Friday, December 6, Mr. L. B. Burkholder, of Fairfax, Va., who said he lived in the congressional district of the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. HOWARD SMITH, came into the office to relate his experience. He said he was a contractor and had an opportunity to build three homes but that because of the increase in price of materials, common pine framing having advanced from $28 to $47.50 per thousand, the owners were unable to go ahead with their plans.

Five of his carpenters were out of work and when he took them to Fort Belvoir seeking work, he was advised by the officer in charge that they could be given jobs only if they joined a union and was directed to the office of the union in Washington, where he was told that the men would have to pay $27.10 each in order to get a work permit and that $25 more would have to be paid within 2 weeks.

QUALIFICATION NOT REQUIRED TO GET JOB AS CARPENTER

Mr. Burkholder, referring to the statement of the union representative as printed in the Washington Star to the effect that men must have experience as carpenters, said he did not know about the situation at Fort Meade, which was the place visited by the Star reporter but that he did know personally men who were working as carpenters at Fort Belvoir who had been working there for 3 weeks and never had experience as carpenters before going on the job.

Mr. Burkholder further said that he would like to have explained to him a situation which permitted men, denying work to American citizens, until their demands for money had been met, while at the same time men were taken from the same vicinity, yes, from the same community, for services with the Army.

HEAD OF WEST VIRGINIA FAMILY OF NINE LACKS FEE SO CANNOT WORK

Friday, December 6, a man who gave his name, who said he was from Bayard, W. Va., called at the office. He said he was a carpenter; that he had belonged to the union until 1931, then dropped out because there was no union where he then lived; that on December 4 he applied for work at Fort Belvoir; was told that he must join a union. He went to the office of the carpenters' union at Tenth and K Streets NW., and asked for a permit to work. He was advised that, because he had dropped out of the union, he would have to pay a fine of $25 and that the fee for joining was $57.50, of which $37.50 must be paid before he could have a permit, although the balance might be paid later.

MUST PAY CASH FOR PERMIT TO WORK

This gentleman stated that he told the union officials that he could not pay the $37.50 or the fine because he did not have the money, but that he would agree that they might take it out of his pay check, but to this they would not consent.

This man is married. He has in his home five children, two grandchildren. He is out of work. Yet he cannot go to work, although there is a Government job which needs him, because the union will not permit him to do so until he meets its demand for money—a demand which it has no right to make.

Listen to this from a letter written December 3 by a Washington resident:

STEAM FITTER WANTS JOB

DEAR SIR: I am writing from my experience trying to secure a position on one of the defense projects.

I am a steam fitter; was employed at * * * up to * * * when we finished up there. My rate was $1.65 per hour, the Government rate. Since then I have visited three of the largest defense projects the Government is building. I find everything closed so tight it is impossible to get work unless you are a union man.

When I failed to get work at my trade, I tried to get a laboring job; was refused unless I join the union and pay $58 to get a job as a laboring man—as I have a family and owe a doctor bill and I am willing to do any kind of work I can to support my family.

I am only one of many honest men walking the streets while the unions hold a cane over us on the Government work that is needed so much at the present time.

I have worked 17 years in the Federal Government and my rating has always been high, so I have never given any attention to join the union.

I believe, if the Government should investigate, they would find cause to change things so all who are qualified could help and not give all to the unions. We are all American-born mechanics trying to make an honest living.

Please don't give out my address; might cause me to miss a job.

RACKETEERING AT FORT EDWARDS

I realize that open letters to the public often are none too accurate, though the writers have no intention of making misstatements.

The Boston Herald is a great daily of wide circulation. Because I do not believe it would print a libelous statement or a statement that had no foundation, I am going out on a limb and print here a clipping from that paper, which, so far as I know, has not been contradicted.

I am sure that the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] who has served his district and State so long and so efficiently, can and will, when opportunity offers, if the statements in this letter are not correct, give us the truth in his own entertaining and convincing manner.

The article reads as follows:

CAMP EDWARDS, AS I SAW IT

To the EDITOR OF THE HERALD:

From time to time various articles have appeared in the Boston papers dealing with the situation at Camp Edwards. To the best of my knowledge, none of the men actually employed there have "aired" their experience by means of the press. I worked there as a carpenter from October 9 to November 19, inclusive.

It is undoubtedly well known that the applicant for a carpenter's job was required by the local union (New Bedford in this case) to pay an initial fee of $25 and was allowed 30 days to pay the balance of $50, making a total of $75. There were no questions asked whether or not the applicant had ever had any previous experience as a carpenter—merely a terse question as to whether he cared to risk paying his money. It mattered not to the officials there that possibly the closest previous acquaintance a man may have had of the tools required was possibly a casual glance in their direction in some hardware shop.

My number was in the 9,000 bracket. (Three weeks later, the 20,000 number had been issued.) Is it any wonder that buildings appeared to spring up like mushrooms? Imagine, if you will, what might have been accomplished had there been in force the efficiency of the auto assembly line. Yes, I've read the recent article comparing it to such.

Seldom, if ever have I worked any harder, or more earnestly, than I did during the first 2 weeks on the job; and I've been around a bit also; the Pontiac assembly line in Michigan, the Portland Cement Co. in Dayton, Ohio; a bronze-casting company, a steel-casting company in Massachusetts; landscape architect in Florida, lumberman, farmer, soda jerker, photographer, and what have you. This was the first time our foreman had ever enjoyed his exalted position, and believe you me, he really enjoyed his superior rank.

In our original "crew" there were some 12 carpenters, two laborers, and the foreman. The first barrack was finished in 7 days, with the exception of putting in the floors, the novelty sidings, partitioning off several smaller rooms, putting in the sheet-rack, doors, windows, and several other finishing details.

All of this could have been accomplished in 7 or more days with our personnel. In other words, it required 15 men 14 days to completely finish one barrack. At this rate, it would require 10,000 men to finish the 1,200 barracks in exactly 25 days.

Work was started at the camp about the middle of September, and we are told by the latest news releases that it may extend until the middle of February, or possibly later, should the present force of 14,000 men be kept intact. True, there are a hospital site, warehouses, roads, mess halls, etc., included as part of the job, but by far the largest item was the construction of the barracks. How to account for this mathematical discrepancy?

Our second (and last) barrack was started on the 17th of October and we left it almost completely finished on the 18th, losing 4 days due to the rainy spell. The "crew" on this barrack reached as high as 30 men and, I believe, a safe daily average was in the vicinity of 20 men.

You guessed it; the last 2½ weeks we all enjoyed a beautiful vacation for which you, our generous taxpayers, were paying us a cool $60 per week. Oh, yes, should any casual reporter or observer happen to pass along, he would discern plenty of activity. Somebody was always sawing a board, driving a nail, or shouldering a plank. Apparently a hive of activity.

During this period I had several talks with some other foremen and they likewise reported that they did not know what to do with themselves or their men except to advise them to appear busy. The attic made a very convenient habitat for unknown hundreds of men.

This pathetic waste of time, and money, went hand in hand with the waste of materials. Lumber and nails were treated as though worthless. In spite of this deplorably evident loss, no reprimand or caution, or threat was audibly uttered by those whose business it was to do so. As a matter of fact, I sincerely believe that they desired it thus. Why? Well, I have my suspicions, but at present they are only suspicious.

A short time after I'd paid my union fee in full, I was handed my pink slip stating no cause for discharge. It may have been only a coincidence in my one case that I got it then, but was it also only a coincidence that the majority of the "pink slip" receivers also were handed theirs after they'd paid in full? As one old-time carpenter expressed it, "The W. P. A. wasn't even in the same class as this."

If this open letter to the public can evoke some thought and serious research as to the manner in which our money is being used in the name of national defense, I will have felt amply repaid.

ANTHONY DE LORENZO,
M. I. T., '33.

KINGSTON.

TEN THOUSAND MEN MUST PAY IF THEY WORK

The Army's new seventh corps cantonment is to be built in Pulaski County, Mo. Mr. Tom McFarland, secretary of the Central Labor Union, is quoted in the Springfield Leader and Press of December 5, as follows:

This means, McFarland explained, that any employee at the camp in any craft over which the Springfield unions have jurisdiction, must, if he is not already a union man when he is employed, either obtain a work permit from the union here or become a regular member of the union here.

"That," said McFarland, "will mean considerable financial aid to the unions here. It will let us participate in the boom which will hit the whole town as a result of the camp."

McFarland said Neuman estimated 10,000 or more men would be employed at the camp when the construction program reaches its peak.

The gentleman who sent in the foregoing wrote:

Why should we be compelled to pay a large sum of our earnings to only be benefited for such a short time and when this job is completed, we will have no jobs to pay our union dues, and then we are kicked out of the local.

The same thing has been done here various times before, and the union and contractor has worked hand in hand and discharged the men and give them no union protection and hired a new bunch and compelled them to join.

LAY IT ON THE LINE

Representative HOFFMAN (Republican, Michigan).

DEAR SIR: I am writing to you in the sense of backing up the article in the Evening Star, of Washington, D. C., as of Monday, December 2, 1940.

Subject: Unfair labor conditions in defense work.

Now this letter is not written with malice, in fact, quite the opposite, and the following is absolutely true:

First. I am a plumber and steamfitter for over 20 years, now 44 years of age, healthy, strong. For the past 6 months I have covered the eastern seaboard from New York to Washington applying for work; failed due to the fact I have not the money to lay on the line as the A. F. of L. demands.

To begin, Fort Belvoir and Fort Meade are exactly as your article in the Evening Star states, plus the fact that after you pay your union initiation fees and dues, you stand a good chance of getting laid off.

A racket—nothing more.

Second. Federal Shipyard & Dry Dock Co., Kearny, N. J.: Application filed; waited 5 days at employment gate and learned you need a letter from Mayor Hague, of Jersey City, to get to work. Well, try and get the letter.

Third. New York Shipbuilding Co., Camden, N. J.: Application filed 4 months ago; no response as yet.

Fourth. Brooklyn Navy Yard: Application filed 2 months ago; no response as yet.

Fifth. Sun Ship & Dry Dock Co., Chester, Pa.: Application filed 3 months ago; no response; appeared in person at employment office four times, and same sign in the door reads, "No help wanted," although every hour a guard steps out in the waiting crowd and asks if you have a letter; if so, you go in. The letter is from "McClure," political boss of Delaware County, Pa. Try and get the letter.

6. Three weeks ago I was given a job by contracting painter on Bendix Corporation, formerly Atwater Kent plant, in Philadelphia; had to see A. F. of L. business agent in Philadelphia. Answer—$10 down and $2 per day for permit to work; this money does not apply to initiation fees, etc. No luck.

A $300 INITIATION FEE

7. Four weeks ago, applied Cramps shipyard, Philadelphia, William M. Anderson, contracting plumber and steamfitter; had to apply to Local 420, A. F. of L., Philadelphia. Answer—$300 initiation fees, 1 year's back dues, and a fine. This due to the fact I belonged to this local and dropped out in 1920. Now where can I get this money? Result, no job.

Now, Mr. HOFFMAN, I sincerely hope you can do something in this matter. I am an American, born in this country and proud of it, and, frankly, why don't you yourself or have a trusted man check on these matters? I will cooperate with you at any time or any place you may wish; in fact, will be only too glad to do so.

If you so wish, I will take a sworn statement on this letter; but, after all, why did I learn a trade years ago to have to buck matters like this when I see men working in these various plants who can hardly speak English?

Believe me, I hope you are as sincere in this matter as I am; still, I know there are plenty of men who have met the same conditions I write of, but they feel it would do no good to complain.

However, I am a resident of Washington, D. C.

You can contact me if you so desire any time. I would appreciate your not publishing my name and address.

WASHINGTON CAB DRIVER PROTESTS

WASHINGTON, D. C., Friday afternoon.

Mr. CLARE HOFFMAN.

DEAR SIR: In regards to the working conditions at Fort Belvoir, Va. I drive a cab here in Washington. On Wednesday night, 4th, Picked up Mr. ———, supervisor of the hospital area. While talking to him on our way to Fort Belvoir I asked him for a job. He told me to be down here (Fort Belvoir) at 7:30, he would put me to work as a laborer. The next morning at 7:30 I was there, and he gave me an order (which I am enclosing) to go to union representative at Fort Belvoir to get a labor card. The representative told me they were not issuing any more labor cards. I went back to Mr. ———, told him what the representative told me. He then wrote on the left corner of the order. So I took it back to the representative, and he wrote "No good after December 5, 1940," on it. I went back to Mr. ———; I told him that they could not do anything for me unless I had $25. Mr. ——— told me to come to Washington and go to Local No. 74, at 525 New Jersey Avenue, and give them the order. Local No. 74 said that they had to have $25 on the line. Mr. ——— told me to tell them that there was others that got in for $5, and I wanted to, too. So they said they could not do anything for me; that they had to have $25 on the line. Local 74 said that they were not accepting any more $5 down; that they had some men at Fort Belvoir laid off now and were not accepting any more $5 down until these men went back to work. I went back to Fort Belvoir and told Mr. ——— what they said. To find out for my own curiosity, and asked some of the men that were laid off did they have to work hard, and he said "No; it was cinched." One said that a bunch of them were sent out to unload lumber, and three of them hid out for 3 days in an empty boxcar and got their pay just the same.

So you see why these were laid off. Why should the union make me pay $25 or wait until they put these fellows that will not work back on the pay roll before I can get in for $5?

It certainly seems to be a racket to me. Mr. ——— worked all day and goes back that night and worked all night and the next day. The reason he worked all night, they poured a lot of cement that day, so he went out to see that they kept the fires going to keep the cement from freezing so they could keep the work going, but him trying and the union won't let a person work that will work unless they pay $25 seems to be a hold-back to the national-defense program, and the union seems to me to be a bunch of racketeers.

YORK (PA.) CARPENTER DRIVES 135 MILES—IS ASKED FOR $80 FOR PERMIT TO WORK

Here is a letter from York, Pa.:

I have just heard on the air that you were looking into working conditions on defense projects, of which I have this to say:

On Sunday, December 1, the Philadelphia Inquirer carried a space ad calling for carpenters to work at Fort (camp) Dix, at space ad calling for carpenters to work at Fort (Camp) Dix, at Writestown, N. J. On Monday, December 2, I drove 135 miles to Camp Dix and found the job under contract to the Johnson Co. (three brothers) who told me to report to a Mr. McCarthy, who would fix me up with a union card; this Mr. McCarthy asked me, and many others, to pay him $80 and $3 per week dues or we could not work on the job, or to pay him $20 plus $3 and that $10 and $3 would be deducted from our pay each week.

I refused, because by the time we would have paid the $80 the job would have been completed.

I just thought you might want to know.

(Name and address given.)

HERNDON (VA.) CARPENTER PAYS SIX TAXES—BALKS AT WORK TAX

Here is another one from Herndon, Va.:

I am a carpenter with 9 years' experience and can furnish you or any other one with local references as to my ability for same. I am 36 years of age, with a wife and two children dependent. I am also a citizen, and so were my father and grandfather before me, and as such I must and do pay such taxes, as personal, property, real estate, capitation tax, dog tax, etc. I also pay my share of defense tax. But when I go out to get a job I am told that I must pay some union $57.50 for the privilege of working, of which I think is very unfair.

I worked at Camp Meade until the union moved in and demanded I pay such a fee to be a member of Local No. 101, of Baltimore, of which would be of no benefit to me after this defense work is over.

I have my application permit for Local No. 101 and a lot of other information that I think you might be interested in, such as the union setting up quarters in a Government-built office, built by defense labor out of Government material.

I would be glad, at your convenience, to come in and talk with you, and can prove everything I have said.

In the meantime, I would like to wish you luck in trying to straighten out this matter which means so much to a workingman that doesn't belong to a trade-union.

(Name given.)

TWO HUNDRED DOLLARS AT CAMP DIX

Here is another from Atlantic City, N. J.:

I think it is time to do something about this union racket. Some of the boys of long experience as mechanics could not go to work at Fort Dix unless they put two hundred on the line, and they were crying for good men and holding up the job. How about a treason clause in your bill?

MARYLAND STEAM FITTER BEHIND IN HIS DUES—NO MONEY TO BUY WORK PERMIT—NO WORK, NO MONEY FOR DUES

Here are parts of a letter from a nearby Maryland resident. This man is a steam fitter. He was hurt and was suspended by his local, whose number he gives, because being out of work he could not pay his dues. When he recovered and sought work, he was told by the business agent of his union there was plenty of work; that he was needed but that he would have to pay $124 cash before he could go back to work; that he has had a chance to go on six different jobs but could not take any of them because he could not raise the $124. He is still out of work, though he has been a union man with a card for 39 years. He writes:

When there was no work we would get behind in our dues and when things got better we could always pay back $50 cash and $20 a week until our union book was in good standing again. I have always been a good union man and have been president of the union about eight terms. I also superintended my work for about 25 years, having had charge of some of the largest jobs in this country, which I have credentials to prove same. I had charge of power house at Camp Lee during World War and also held high position with the Government, which I will gladly turn over for your information. I am also a veteran and served in the Philippines during the War with Spain. Would like to state that during the World War we worked both union and nonunion men on the same job. * * * At Fort Meade boys have quit school and are working for $5 a day; some who are only 15 years old, which I think is against the child-labor law. Don't publish my name.

The foregoing is further evidence that the Star reporter was not so far wrong. [Applause.]

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BONNER). Under the special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHANNON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHANNON. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I wish to commend the gentleman from Missouri and tell him how much I personally appreciate his putting into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the remarks of His Eminence William Cardinal O'Connell, of Boston, regarding the war. Cardinal O'Connell was born in Lowell, now a part of my district. Lowell is extremely proud of its able and illustrious native son. As the gentleman from Missouri knows, Cardinal O'Connell is a very distinguished churchman, scholar, and philosopher, and his views always command the attention of the American people. Everybody hopes for a continuance of his strength and vigor to carry on the fight for righteousness.

Mr. SHANNON. What is his age?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. He celebrated his eighty-first birthday yesterday. He has both age and great wisdom.

STUDY AMERICA FIRST

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, through the courtesy of this House, I took occasion to review historically something of what I considered would be of interest at this time, relating to the district which I have the honor to represent here and to the grand old State of Missouri and the Members it sent here from Territorial days to the present time. A few days later I supplemented that record—and it is one that Missouri takes just pride in—by a similar review of the able and honorable Members who have rendered memorable service in the senatorial Chamber from David Barton's day to the distinguished gentlemen who are representing our State in the Senate today.

I thought it eminently fitting that the records of those men, both in the House and in the Senate, should not, in these forgetful days of partisan strife and foreign tumult and disorder, be suffered to lapse into the oblivion that too often follows in the footsteps of public servants who have contributed their share to the upbuilding of the State and the Nation throughout periods and circumstances that really tried men's souls.

It was for that reason, primarily, that I sought permission to spread their names and the periods of their service upon the permanent RECORDS of this House. But let me add to that record a brief postscript, embodying a message that occurred to me as I went back over those familiar names—a message which seems to me to be singularly appropriate to many conditions of plans and policies that are engaging the attention and the consideration of the men who, from every State in the Union, are here in both Houses today seeking to solve the grave problems that are coming before us daily for solution.

It seems to me that the time has come when we should confront those problems from a fair, an honest, a frank appraisal of them from a purely national standpoint. We are today engaged in a program of defense. We are preparing to guard our ramparts and to defend our outmost borders from threats of foreign invasion as well as from evils within our own national borders. As you all know, I have never favored war as a means of settling our national or international troubles. You know my views on that subject without the necessity of my repeating them. I look upon war as purely a destructive agency of terror and human sacrifice that never yet has settled anything.

But no one can question my views upon national defense. I look upon my own State and upon every State in this Union as a monument of freedom and individual liberty that it is our duty to defend and preserve in the principles upon which the founders of our Republic stood when they wrote our Declaration of Independence and our Constitution and Bill of Rights. It is for this reason that I stand here today to give utterance to a few warnings of danger and tendencies that seem to me to be leading in the wrong direction, no matter in what words we gloss them over in the habiliments of sophistry, sympathy, or romantic tradition.

We have been straining our eyes too much at the far horizons. We have been tempting the youth of our land with too much of the glamor, the pomp and circumstance of the wars of the past, whose horrors have been forgotten. We are feeding up the pupils of our schools with tales of medieval days. We are making heroes of the Napoleons, the Wellingtons, the Swedish Charles, the Marshal Neys, the Bluchers, the Julius Caesars, and the Brutuses of far distant days. Our school children are more familiar with the banks of the Tiber, the Rhine, the Rubicon, the Marne, and even the beautiful Blue Danube than they are with the great traditions that surround the mighty rivers and plains of America—the Hudson and the Ohio, the great Missouri, the Mississippi, the far-flung Platte River, the Green River, and the Yellowstone tributaries of the West that contributed so greatly to the spread of our own Nation and to the glories of its historic past. How many of the school children of today are familiar with the histories of the 48 States of this Union, their traditions of growth and expansion, their spirit of liberty, and their principles of civic culture and development? How many have even the faintest conceptions of the great men in the history of this Nation's development from 13 colonies along the Atlantic to a Nation that won two oceans for its borders and vast domains of land for agriculture, for industries of all kinds, for the wealth that this Nation has developed for our preservation?

I said that primarily I had the idea of rescuing from oblivion the men who in this House and in the Senate of the United States contributed to the upbuilding of these 48 States, their railroads, their steamships, their broad highways, their manufactories, their mines, their roads, their cattle, and their marvelous cities stretching across the land from ocean to ocean and from the Canadian border to the Gulf coasts of the Southlands.

We talk of national defense; and we have things to defend—great institutions as well as great principles. So that is the reason that I want to say today, as supplementary to that permanent record which I reviewed a few days ago, that the time has come when we need to forget for a while those old battlegrounds of Europe and Asia, those rivers of glamorous history, and settle the minds of our youth on the glories of the Nation we are now engaged in defending from the very sources of the wars and the destruction and the savagery that those old wars bequeathed to them—the ideals that produced tyrants and serfs, races of military robots, and their deified masters.

Let us impart in our schools the inspirations of our own history. Let our American students study America as one of the noblest as well as one of the most romantic and inspiring nations that was ever evolved from that old world of outworn ideologies. Let us begin teaching our children, our boys and girls, that in these very national halls of legislation there have stood throughout the decades of the past high-minded men whose counsels and treaties and laws contributed to the eternal foundations that have come to be considered the backbone of each of these 48 States and the innermost spirit of a united Republic, pledged to freedom and a Nation one and indivisible, resolved to the end that that Nation must be preserved with unity of purpose and a wise avoidance of foreign entanglements. Let us see to it that our educational institutions, from our grade schools to our great universities, implant that spirit and that respect for the men of the past who preserved that spirit in the minds of the young men and the young women of our land. Let us study America first, last, always.

See that our school children get unlimited opportunities to study their own country's history. There is a sightseers' slogan we hear often in these days of good roads; it is "See America first." That is a good beginning, but it should be followed by another slogan, "Study America first." Let every young American be taught from childhood to love his own country, to believe in its ideals, to cherish it as the greatest Nation and the freest democracy the world has ever known.

Let them get acquainted with the men who laid the foundations of our Government and maintained it and defended it through good report and evil too, through good times and hard times, through all the evils that ever threatened its existence. Let them learn to understand the great services and the great dreams of future greatness that gave us a Washington, who warned us against meddling in Old World affairs; a Jefferson, who won for us a western empire without shedding a drop of blood; a Hamilton, who helped to frame, and a Madison, who taught us to interpret and revere, our constitutional rights; a Monroe, who sent the challenge of a great doctrine across the seas and warned us against Old World menaces to our form of government; a Jackson, who stood for unity and democracy among all the States; a Lincoln, who pledged for us that this Nation, conceived and dedicated to the cause of liberty, should not perish on this hemisphere.

I would like to know that every child and every adult who enjoys the blessings of liberty bequeathed to us by these great forefathers have become acquainted with the lives and the deeds of the men of America—not merely the heroes of wars but the statesmen who stood as human bulwarks for everything down the fateful decades of our history that gave us the Nation we are called upon today to defend. And I want them to know, not only our heroes of warfare, our statesmen in the legislative halls, but those brave souls, the Kit Carsons, the Jim Bridgers, the Fremonts, the Fitzpatricks, the Father Desmets, and the missionaries of every faith that spread across the land the doctrines of peace and good will.

At this point I feel that I should call especial attention to an almost forgotten name, because his career was symbolic of what America holds out to those who come to her shores imbued with the true democratic spirit.

In Missouri there is one name that has become almost a symbol for that word we hear so much of in these days—Americanism. He was foreign-born and yet his public life in my own State and in the Nation was one that exemplified to the fullest true Americanism and independent statesmanship. I refer to Carl Schurz, one of the most remarkable men that ever represented Missouri in the United States Senate.

The story of his life was a romantic one—and yet with all its independent elements he emerged from a country that today is held up as a tyrannical despotism.

Carl Schurz was born in Germany. He was educated in the Gymnasium of Cologne and he became a revolutionary in political life and finally an exiled refugee from his native land. Driven from Germany after the revolution of 1848 he came to America in 1852 and settled in Wisconsin. He served in the Union Army during the Civil War and after the war was over he settled in Missouri and then became in 1869 the first German-born American to be elected to a seat in the Senate. The story of Carl Schurz's public life is a liberal education in American ideals. He adhered absolutely to no party. He supported Lincoln, Horace Greeley, Grover Cleveland, and though he opposed Bryan on the money issue he supported him on the antiimperialism issue. He championed the cause of civil-service reform, and to the end of his public career he was an eloquent advocate of high American ideals and a revered champion of unadulterated Americanism.

The Old World has nothing to teach us now, except fear and terror. The lessons we are to learn now are those which have come to us from our own soil and our own people until, in the language of Washington, we come to a fuller understanding of the name we all rejoice in—that of American. We must make it mean something to every child in this land; and the only way we can do that is to spread our country's history, and the story of its founders and preservers and defenders in books that are not out of reach on high library shelves but distributed across the land on the school desk and within easy reach and comprehension of all our school children, and sunk into the hearts of the growing young patriots of America in every State of the Union. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement showing where the money goes that we appropriate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, heretofore entered, the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW] is recognized.

AIR SAFETY BOARD

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to address my colleagues on a subject on which I do not feel well informed, but I rather believe that in this instance I am as well informed as most of the Members of the House. It may be that two or three who are actively engaged in aeronautics do know more about this than I.

Last spring I had occasion to make a trip to my home district and return by air. It was a rather stormy trip, and as we left El Paso on the way to Memphis, Tenn., it was extremely stormy. We were really en route to Nashville, Tenn., but as the plane landed I was very sleepy and went to sleep, and about half past 10 in the morning woke up to find we were in Memphis, and still there, instead of Nashville. The wings of the plane had been covered with canvas and there was a coating of ice over the outside of the plane. For the next several hours the attendants in Memphis hosed hot water on that plane to get the ice off. There was perhaps a half inch to an inch coating of ice all over the plane. I do not know how much such a coating of a half inch or an inch of ice will weigh, but it will weigh a great deal, perhaps as much as a ton, because the wing spread of a plane is considerable, and the fuselage also comprises quite an area.

What had happened in this particular case was that we had run into what is called a "cold front" on landing. I am speaking in terms of meteorology. A cold front is a point at which the cold air comes in contact with warm air. In this particular instance the dew point and the temperature were equal and they were just below freezing. As you may know, it takes the conjunction of a cold body of air with a warm, moisture-laden body of air to cause precipitation in the form of either rain or snow, depending upon the temperature. When the ground temperature is approximately 30, 32, or thereabouts, and the temperature of the moisture-laden upper air is somewhat higher than that, precipitation will occur which, when it reaches the ground, will form ice. We had a terrific example of that in Amarillo, Tex., not long ago when the trees became so coated with ice that all of the branches broke off and it laid the countryside to waste. That particular cold front and warm upper air remained stationary in Amarillo for such a period of time that a very heavy coating of ice ensued.

In this accident that occurred to an air liner in Chicago something similar happened. A cold front was approaching Chicago. The upper air was warm and moist and the lower air was cold. When a plane or anything else finds itself in that peculiar position then ice is bound to form on it, and it can form extremely quickly. It takes very little time for a considerable coating of ice to form on a plane.

We have in the Civil Aeronautics Authority inspectors whose duty it is to go about inspecting the air-line operations offices and also to ride the planes. It is their duty to see that the regulations are lived up to, that minimum operating conditions are observed, and that flights are not made in dangerous weather; that the pilots and equipment are in good condition and that the organization generally is on its toes. There is a great body of regulations which these people must follow.

Now, it may be because of the abolition of the Air Safety Board, or it may be because of the extensive program for civil-aeronautics training which we have dumped onto the Civil Aeronautics Authority, but it seems from the meager information I can find that these inspectors are fewer and farther between on the air lines today than they were last spring.

Certain pilots of air lines have called me to say that whereas inspectors were very much in evidence prior to July 1 last, nowadays they rarely see them. You can understand in any air-lines operations the pilot first goes into the room where they have weather maps and the weather information and examines the weather conditions through which he is to fly. Before he lays out his flight plan he receives all of the available information. If the management of the air line gives him clearance to point of destination, then it is up to the pilot to decide whether or not he will make the trip. You can see that there is a tendency as times goes on for the management to say, "Well, we have made 10,000 or 40,000 trips into this particular destination; and although there is a cold front approaching or there may be some intermediate bad weather, we believe that the pilot can make a successful trip and a successful landing; consequently we will give clearance to the pilot to point of destination." If he happens to be scheduled to go through dangerous weather or into dangerous weather at the other end of his trip, it becomes a matter of daring on the part of the pilot whether or not he will actually take off.

These pilots are paid on the basis of a certain amount in base pay and a certain amount for trip mileage. Whenever he cancels a trip he loses his trip mileage. Whenever the company cancels a trip it loses all of the income that might come from such trip. There is always a strong tendency on the part of the management to want to make their scheduled trips, as the people who have bought tickets are anxious to get to their destinations, and the pilot wants to make the trip because otherwise he loses his mileage pay.

When there comes a relaxation of vigilance on the part of inspectors and the Civil Aeronautics Authority, there is a tendency on the part of first management and then pilots to go a little beyond what may be considered proper prudence and good judgment. They will take some perhaps unnecessary chances—that is, they may not be unnecessary but they certainly are in some respect unwise.

In the case of this crash at Chicago it was known that a cold front was advancing from the north. As a matter of fact, one of the air lines in the early afternoon had stopped all of its flights west of Pittsburgh. Detroit operations were closed down on account of the cold front; yet, at 6 p. m., we find planes flying into Chicago under exactly those conditions.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, a distinguished Member of this body relays to me first-hand from an eyewitness the information that when this plane hit the ground it had perhaps as much as an inch of ice on it, which may have weighed a ton. In other words, as he dropped his landing flaps to slow down the plane, and those landing flaps act like brakes, and as his air speed slowed down, then the plane plummeted to the ground on account of its excess weight. That is a matter for the Civil Aeronautics Authority and its inspectors in the Division of Inspection to determine. I merely relate what a Member of this House told me he received first-hand.

In discussing the Air Safety Board it is not with any sense of "I told you so" or any sense of saying that somebody was wrong in the first instance when the House refused to reject Reorganization Plan No. IV, which abolished the Air Safety Board, but it comes at this point as a matter of common good judgment to the Members of the House whether we should not consider the reinstallation of the Air Safety Board into the Civil Aeronautics set-up. That board stood absolutely independent—as stiff as a rock—between the pilots and the management, and between the pilots and the Civil Aeronautics Authority inspectors themselves, ready to place the blame for any accident that may have occurred definitely upon the real source of the lack of judgment or the violation of the regulations that brought it about.

It is a curious thing, but when you take out from this set-up that independence and place the subject of accident investigation in the Department itself, there is a natural tendency on the part of the investigators to whitewash the Department. I mean, they do not want the onus to lie on their own immediate heads. But this is too important a matter to fool with, because it is not only civil aeronautics that is involved in this question; there is also the military and naval aeronautics involved, and the lives of a great many thousands of people.

The other day I made bold to introduce a resolution asking for an investigation of these three acidents that have occurred since July 1 last, with a view not only to examine the causes of the accidents themselves but to examine into all questions related thereto. The select committee proposed may have to investigate the subject of the Air Safety Board and the effect of its abolition; it may have to go into the necessity for additional weather information and more prompt dissemination of that information; it may have to go into the subject of a bit sterner rules on the part of the Civil Aeronautics Authority for the handling of operations for aircraft, and it may run into a number of other related subjects. However, there is still time. We can be working on this between now and the 3d day of January. Although I realize that many Members want to go home for Christmas and the holidays, I expect to be here for Christmas, and others expect to be here also. It may be that the program of the majority would not allow such a thing, yet I believe that expedition at this point is very highly important.

The matter is hot at the moment. It will have cooled down later on, and until another accident occurs nothing will be done about it. I therefore suggest to the leadership of the majority that they consider taking up this important matter at the earliest possible date and getting this investigation started. It is not meant to be a fishing expedition or a witch hunt; it is meant merely to find out the truth and do the best possible thing we can to improve and promote civil aeronautics. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article appearing in a recent issue of the California State Bar Journal, prepared by a constituent of mine, on leading cases construing emergency legislation during the last World War.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCORMACK). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Thursday next it adjourn to meet the following Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on Friday, December 6, 1940, present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 6324. An act to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Thursday, December 12, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

2066. A letter from the Secretary of Commerce, transmitting the draft of a proposed bill to amend the act of February 14, 1931, as amended, so as to permit the compensation on a mileage basis of civilian officers or employees for the use of privately owned airplanes while traveling on official business; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland: Committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. H. R. 658. A bill for the relief of Dr. B. L. Pursifull, Grace Pursifull, Eugene Pursifull, Ralph Pursifull, Bobby Pursifull, and Dora Little; without amendment (Rept. No. 3108). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. VOORHIS of California:

H. R. 10720 (by request). A bill to provide funds for the national defense; to prevent avoidance of taxes by unlimited investment in advertising; to control uneconomic advertising expense engaged in by the liquor, tobacco, and luxury trades; to discourage advertising on the public highways and to derive revenue therefrom; and for other purposes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

H. J. Res. 621. Joint resolution authorizing the President to set aside February 16, 1941, as Pan-American Unity Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER:

H. R. 10721. A bill for the relief of Francis I. Reubish; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. LUDLOW:

H. R. 10722. A bill granting a pension to Eva L. Collins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, November 19, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty and eternal God, before whom the nations are as the dust of the balance, who hast put down the mighty from their seat and hast exalted the humble and meek: We bless Thee for all the channels of Thy grace, for joy and pain, freedom and necessity, sunshine and rain, sickness and health; yet most of all we bless Thee for the tender ministries of human love, for the love that binds man and woman, for the unselfishness of parents, for the confidence of little children, and for the encouragement of friends. As Thou hast blessed us, so do Thou quicken within us a deep sense of penitence for the foulness of our cities, the shame of our streets, and the misery of the poor. Let the flood of Thy purifying power cleanse our national life, lest our destruction be determined and we go the way of the nations that have forgotten God. Harken to our prayer, O Lord, for the sake of Thy dear Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. STEWART, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Monday, December 9, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

SENATOR FROM NEVADA

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, Mr. BERKELEY L. BUNKER, who has been designated by the Governor of Nevada to take the place made vacant by the death of our late beloved and lamented colleague, Senator Pittman, is in the Chamber ready to take the oath of office. His credentials have been presented and are on file with the Secretary of the Senate in due form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator-designate will present himself at the desk the oath will be administered.

Mr. BUNKER, escorted by Mr. MCCARRAN, advanced to the desk and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him by the President pro tempore, he took his seat in the Senate.

CREDENTIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the credentials of JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY, duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Wyoming a Senator from that State for the term beginning January 3, 1941, which were read and ordered to be filed.

He also laid before the Senate the credentials of MON C. WALLGREN, duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Washington a Senator from that State for the term beginning January 3, 1941, which were read and ordered filed.

He also laid before the Senate the credentials of ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, JR., duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Wisconsin a Senator from that State for the term beginning January 3, 1941, which were read and ordered to be filed.

He also laid before the Senate the credentials of JAMES M. MEAD, duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of New York a Senator from that State for the term beginning January 3, 1941, which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I present the certificate of election of WILLIAM LANGER, who was elected on November 5, 1940, to the United States Senate from North Dakota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be read and filed.

The credentials of WILLIAM LANGER, duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of North Dakota a Senator from that State for the term beginning January 3, 1941, were read and ordered to be filed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 302) authorizing the President to invite foreign countries to participate in the Pan American Cotton Congress.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 658) for the relief of the estate of Dr. B. L. Pursifull, Grace Pursifull, Eugene Pursifull, Ralph Pursifull, Bobby Pursifull, and Dora Little.

TRIBUTE TO THE LATE SENATOR PITTMAN

Mr. TYDINGS presented a resolution adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Juneau, Alaska, as a tribute to the memory of Hon. Key Pittman, late a Senator from the State of Nevada, which was ordered to lie on the table.

AWARDS OF QUANTITY CONTRACTS FOR THE ARMY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate two letters from the Acting Secretary of War, reporting, pursuant to law, relative to divisions of awards of certain quantity contracts for aircraft, aircraft parts, and accessories thereof entered into with more than one bidder under authority of law, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

J. H. REDDING, INC. v. THE UNITED STATES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, his report and recommendation concerning the claim of J. H. Redding, Inc., against the United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORT OF THE DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, transmitting, pursuant to law, the forty-third report of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution for the year ended April 1, 1940, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 2—RELATIVE TO PURCHASES OF WOOLEN MATERIALS AND PRODUCTS FOR NATIONAL-DEFENSE PROGRAM

Whereas the Government of the United States has embarked on a program designed to protect the shores of this country against the menace of totalitarianism; and

Whereas as part of this program the Government is purchasing woolen materials and products necessary for adequate defense; and

Whereas consistent with the ideals of democracy which we are striving to defend and preserve is the thought that woolen-goods manufacturers throughout the country should be given an opportunity to do their share toward carrying into effect the defense program; and

Whereas, because of differentials in prices resulting from location, woolen-goods manufacturers on the west coast cannot compete with their competitors in other sections of the country in submitting bids for Government contracts and are thus deprived of an opportunity to participate in the defense program; and

Whereas the inequities in this situation call for desirable changes at the earliest possible date: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California, jointly, That the National Advisory Defense Commission and the United States War and Navy Departments are hereby respectfully urged to provide in their specifications for bids for national-defense contracts for the purchase and sale of woolen products, in cases where the bids of west-coast manufacturers of such products would otherwise exceed those of manufacturers in other sections of the country, such excess representing the cost of transporting the products to the place of delivery, either that:

(a) An allowance in the amount of freight will be made in favor of the bids submitted by the west-coast manufacturers; or

(b) The bids submitted by west-coast manufacturers may be based on prices f. o. b. their mills; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to each Member of the Senate and the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, to Mr. Edward Stettinius and each other member of the National Advisory Defense Commission of the United States, to the Secretaries of the War and Navy Departments of the United States, and to the Quartermaster General of the United States Army in command at Philadelphia.

RESOLUTION OF VERMONT STATE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, on the 4th of December, at Burlington, Vt., the Vermont State Chamber of Commerce held its annual meeting. It adopted a resolution urging all material aid to Great Britain, and, if necessary, financial aid.

I ask that the resolution be appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES AND GREAT BRITAIN

In view of the present situation at home and abroad,

Resolved, That the Vermont State Chamber of Commerce suggests to Vermont local chambers of commerce and other Vermont organizations that they, in the immediate future, consider the adoption of some such resolution as the following for presentation to the Vermont delegation at Washington:

"That the organization urges the further increase and the speeding up of material aid to Great Britain, and, if deemed needful for the protection of the United States and the Americas and Great Britain, the extension of financial aid to Great Britain."

DEMANDS ON KANSAS HIGHWAYS BY NATIONAL-DEFENSE PROGRAM

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a resolution adopted December 2, 1940, by the State Highway Commission of Kansas. The resolution points out the additional load which will be thrown upon the Kansas highway program through demands for extraordinary maintenance and upkeep of highways adjacent to and surrounding the Fort Riley and Fort Leavenworth Military Reservations in Kansas due to the national-defense program. The Kansas State Highway Commission promises to cooperate in every way with the Federal Government in the program but points out that changes in routings and large maintenance costs will be a heavy drain on available road funds, and urges that special appropriations be made for this class of highway construction and maintenance. I desire to call attention of the Senate to this problem and express the hope that it will be taken care of adequately in the next session of Congress.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Kansas State Highway Commission is faced with the necessity of coordinating the highway needs of the civilian peacetime traffic with the extraordinary demands that will be made on the Kansas highway system as a result of the Federal Government's preparation for national defense; and

Whereas, recognizing the importance of Kansas highways to the plan of national defense, since Kansas has within its confines two important Army training centers, namely, Fort Leavenworth and Fort Riley, and since it is reliably informed that both of these forts will be used as large training centers; and

Whereas this will place a great deal of purely military traffic upon the highways of Kansas, it is deemed necessary to call the attention of Congress to the importance of the Kansas highways in any military movement in the defense of these United States, particularly to facilitate the movement of traffic in and around the two forts above mentioned; and

Whereas the Kansas State Highway Commission is confronted with a serious shortage of funds to meet the normal demands for highway construction in all parts of the State and, in addition thereto, must provide for extraordinary maintenance and upkeep of highways adjacent to and surrounding the above-mentioned forts and training centers; and

Whereas it is the belief of the Kansas Highway Commission that funds collected through State agencies should not be used for construction and maintenance of roads primarily serving training areas, and that special appropriation should be made available through the Public Roads Administration to meet the other road improvements urgently needed for the military-training-camp areas and for selected portions of the designated State highway system: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Kansas State Highway Commission, That it declares its intention to cooperate with the Federal Government in the construction and maintenance of highways of the Kansas highway system that are considered of strategic military importance by the proper defense agencies.

That it respectfully calls attention to the needs for additional appropriations for the construction and maintenance of roads, the primary purpose of which is to provide access to military training areas as well as Kansas highways which are considered of strategic military importance by the proper defense agencies.

That it tenders the engineering facilities of the Kansas State Highway Commission to the Federal Government for the construction of military roads deemed necessary by the proper defense authorities.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on December 2, 1940, that committee presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 4373) to amend the act of June 25, 1938, entitled "An act extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes."

BILL INTRODUCED

Mr. GREEN introduced a bill (S. 4437) for the relief of Luigi C. Galatioto and Maria Galatioto, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

REPORT AND CONFIRMATION OF POST OFFICE NOMINATIONS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, as in executive session, I report from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads 26 nominations of postmasters in the several States, the nominations having been approved or not objected to by the Senators from the States in question. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be confirmed en bloc and that the President be notified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc, and the President will be notified.

BRITISH DIRECTORSHIPS OF J. P. MORGAN & CO.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, when J. P. Morgan contributed the first check to the William Allen White committee known as the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, was he a representative of J. P. Morgan & Co., of New York City or Morgan, Grenfell & Co., Ltd., of London, England?

The persons in this country are familiar with the vast holdings and powerful connections of the American banking firm, but they are not presented with the data of the vast colonial holdings of the codirectors of Morgan on the directorship of Morgan, Grenfell & Co. These holdings are particularly heavy in India.

The directors of the English banking house are Lord St. Just (Grenfell), Lord Bicester, Lord Catto, Viscount Harcourt, R. H. V. Smith, F. J. R. Rodd, W. W. H. Hill-Wood, and J. P. Morgan.

These directors have wide interest in the British Empire. Lord St. Just is a director of the Bank of England, with its powerful ramification. He is also director of Sun Insurance office and Sun Life Assurance Society. Lord Bicester is director of the Associated Electrical Industries, Ltd., which incidentally is the Westinghouse production in Great Britain, governor of the Royal Exchange Assurance, which is the parent company of United States insurance companies, and chairman of the board of Yule, Catto & Co., Ltd., the East Indies merchants. Lord Catto is director of Amlevant Investment Co., Ltd., Andrew Yule & Co., Ltd., of Calcutta, India, Mercantile Bank of India, Royal Bank of Scotland, Royal Exchange Assurance—note above reference—Tobacco Securities Trust, Yule, Catto & Co.—note above—Union Castle Mail Steamship Co., Ltd., with its South African interests in shipping, Oriental Telephone & Electric Co., Ltd., with its ownership of the Singapore Telephone Co., China and Japan Telephone & Electric Co., and certain India telephone exchanges. R. H. V. Smith is also director of Andrew Yule & Co., Ltd., of Calcutta, English & New York Trust Co., Ltd., Mercantile Bank of India, Ltd., Yule, Catto & Co., Ltd. Francis J. R. Rodd is director of Courtlands, Ltd., which has a heavy interest in the American Viscose Corporation.

PLEA FOR WORK

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a letter from one of his constituents making a plea for work, which appears in the Appendix.]

ISSUANCE OF TAXABLE SHORT-TERM NOTES BY TREASURY DEPARTMENT

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, 2 or 3 days ago I had occasion to criticize Hon. Henry Morgenthau, the Secretary of the Treasury, for what seems to me to be a diversion of a part of the stabilization fund from the purposes for which it was constituted by law, and its conversion into a lending agency of the United States. I still adhere to that view and will oppose all such conversions of the stabilization fund with all the force at my command. I should like, however, to take occasion today to go on record as commending in the highest terms another action which has been taken by the Secretary of the Treasury and announced since the last meeting of the Senate.

Under the present law the Secretary of the Treasury has authority, either in refunding Government indebtedness or in providing funds for the appropriations made under the various national-defense acts, either to issue short-term notes, which, in his discretion, may be taxable, or to issue long-term bonds, which, under the law, cannot be made taxable. Within the past 2 or 3 days Secretary Morgenthau has announced his purpose in those refunding operations, while Congress is not working at full capacity, to cover the necessities of the Treasury by issuing the shorter-term notes, which, in his discretion, he proposes to make subject to taxation.

I regard this as one of the greatest steps forward in the whole system of taxation which has taken place in the United States in the history of this country. As Senators know, that is a struggle which has been going on for years. So far as I am concerned, I have been actively engaged in it during the 8 years I have been a Member of this body. I offered an amendment to the 1933 tax bill, which was adopted by the Senate by a very substantial majority, for subjecting issues of the United States Government to taxation. That amendment was defeated in conference on that bill by the action of the Senate conferees in receding before the conference was begun. Since that time I have repeatedly offered similar amendments on other tax bills, and other Senators have offered amendments of a similar character, which have usually been defeated on the ground that the subject was one which required careful study, that legislation dealing with it should originate in the House of Representatives, and the subject should not be dealt with in any hasty manner. It has always been pressed as an argument that the particular tax bill which was then before the Senate for consideration was not a proper vehicle for the consideration of that question. Promises have repeatedly been held out on the part of the leadership of the House of Representatives and on the part of the leadership of the Senate that the question of the taxation of Federal Government securities would receive full and adequate consideration either at the session of the Congress then in existence or at the next session of the Congress.

Mr. President, in view of the fact that certain of our large bond issues are coming to maturity, and that it will be necessary to refinance them, and in view of the very large expenditures for defense purposes, that issue will be squarely in the lap of the next Congress for necessary consideration through the action of Secretary Morgenthau in issuing short-term notes instead of long-term bonds, which would be free from taxation. I want to congratulate Secretary Morgenthau on his action, and I want to congratulate the country on having as Secretary of the Treasury a man with the vision and with the courage—and it did take a great deal of courage to take this action—and with the statesmanship to force this issue, and lay it squarely in the lap of the Congress for necessary consideration and action.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. If it required legislation to accomplish this purpose, in the judgment of the Senator from Missouri, by what authority of law did the Secretary of the Treasury take this action?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Secretary of the Treasury has authority under the law to issue short-term notes subject to taxation. That discretion is specifically given him under the law; but if it is a matter of refunding bonds or issuing long-term bonds, he would have no discretion as to whether or not they should be subject to taxation. What the Secretary of the Treasury is doing is simply making the necessary refinancing at this time under his authority subjecting these notes to taxation and leaving the matter for the consideration of Congress, where it properly belongs.

Mr. HAYDEN. In the judgment of the Senator, will the taxpayer be saved any money by this procedure?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is a question which I shall be very glad to discuss with the Senator. I have frequently discussed it at length. I think the taxpayers of the country will be saved money. I think it will be a very meritorious thing to stop this refuge of owners of capital who at any time do not happen to like the particular policy of the Government in power at the moment—a refuge to take their capital away from any beneficial work for the public, away from any contribution to the defense scheme of the United States, and put it in a position where it will escape from taxation instead of having to go to work. But it was not my purpose to detain the Senate by a discussion of what is more or less a technical matter, on which we have the report of a very eminent and able committee of the Senate, and which will undoubtedly require a great deal of discussion when the matter comes before the Senate, as I apprehend it will, at an early stage of the next session. I was simply desiring to express my admiration for the action of Secretary Morgenthau in leaving the matter for the consideration of the Congress, instead of acting as he might have done and issuing a series of long-term bonds in the sum of possibly several billion dollars which would be free from taxation for a period of 30 years, which is the ordinary term of bonds.

Mr. HAYDEN. I asked the question because in certain States it was thought proper to tax mortgages, with the idea that the mortgage holder did not pay taxes, and that he ought to do so; and the net effect was to raise the interest rates on mortgages, so, after all, the farmer who had the mortgage on his farm was the one who paid the tax.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I say very frankly to the Senator that I think possibly the taxation of Government securities may possibly require raising the interest rates which the Government will have to pay, although I am not at all certain that that result will follow, for the reason that investors in Government securities usually invest in them by reason of the safety of the security offered rather than by reason of the amount of interest paid. But even if that were true—even if the Government were required to make a greater expenditure in interest—I still believe it would be very much to the advantage of the Government in compelling everyone to make contribution for this defense scheme and to prevent the escape of capital, from reasons of pique or other reasons, from being usefully put to work in the public interests.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I am interested in this particular address of the Senator from Missouri by virtue of a special study I have made of the question to which he addresses himself; but I cannot agree that we as a country are necessarily to be congratulated because the Secretary of the Treasury has seen fit to make use of a doubtful power to try to enter a wedge into this problem, which is of an adventitious kind, it being a purely legislative one, and, as some of us view it, a problem of constitutional government and constitutional reform rather than a subject of policy and change by mere legislative statute.

I should have said nothing on this occasion about this rather momentous event had I not been caused to do so by the remarks just made by the distinguished Senator from Missouri; but I do comment upon the probative effect already seen of this conduct, and that is that it has already demonstrated beyond any question the additional burden of cost of national defense that is imposed upon the taxpayers of this country by removing the immunity from taxation of Federal bonds. Already it appears that this large issue of short-term notes could have been sold at a cost of one-half of 1 percent to the taxpayers of the country had it been sold as heretofore, free from taxation; whereas, taxed as it is, it must be sold for the much higher rate of three-fourths of 1 percent, which means an annual additional cost to the taxpayers of the country of $2,500,000 to finance this particular issue.

If that be true, as I have been informed it is, we cannot be disturbed in our future consideration of this question by the adventitious claim that this is a procedure necessary to national defense, that it is an expediency which we ought to choose, having such great weight financially and such merit because of the cheapness of this method of financing that we should overcome our qualms respecting the violation of the constitutional principle involved, and take such a revolutionary step as this because it has become necessary in time of world war to find new sources of revenue for our Government.

Mr. President, I am moved to comment that, in my judgment, there is no single step the Congress of the United States could take which has greater significance as an indication of our cooperation in the world revolution, which has a form of war elsewhere, but which nevertheless has for its object in the entire world the setting up of a system of national socialism. It is useless to attempt to avoid or evade it. Every time the Congress of the United States permits a statute to be enacted or a resolution to amend the Constitution to be offered to the people for ratification, which breaks down the barriers and limitations between the two Governments which occupy the same geographical area, we take an important step away from representative government, away from the Republic our fathers established, which we have maintained at some cost for 150 years, and we take a step toward national socialism.

So the question will not be a question of financing of war. The specious claim that it has become necessary to take this course because we must find new sources of revenue to maintain our armies cannot be used, and the issue, I predict, will stand out in full delineation, perfectly clear, a great issue of principle. It will be the spear point of world revolution here, and those who still believe in the republic and who still have a patriotic fervor which excites them to fight for its defense, will stand fast to protect the Federal Government from the incursions of the several States through this essential means of Government, an attack upon this essential means of maintaining the Federal power, namely, the obtaining of its revenues. Those who stand fast to save to the several States, and to the municipalities in them, this essential function of their government, without which they cannot preserve their independence any longer, will be those who are lined up standing fast for liberty, and those who are opposed to it will be attacking that republic and further aiding that system which hands down from on high the rules of conduct in government called the civil law. Those who would replace with these fiats the law that comes up from the ground and from the people and has the consent of the governed would be the same as those who would readily set aside our judicial system, which gives every citizen in his controversy with his government notice and opportunity to be heard, a fair trial before an independent tribunal, and execution of his sentence or his judgment by still another. They would supplant this system of jurisprudence and administration of equal justice, as nearly equal as it can be in human hands, by a bureaucratic system, in which the bureau would become the complainant, the trial court, the judge, and the executioner of the judgment.

Mr. President, we confront that condition. It is my belief that the issue becomes more clean-cut every day; that the Seventy-seventh Congress will have to face this fundamental issue bravely, and that our country, our form of government, will stand or fall by the decisions we make, one at a time, on these several issues. Upon no other issue than this, of the destruction of the immunity of the several States and municipalities from incursion by the Federal Government upon the essential function of raising revenue, and vice versa, upon no other issue will it be more important for us to make a correct decision.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I always listen with great interest to the remarks of the distinguished and able Senator from Vermont. It seems to me, however, that in this case his argument has gone rather far afield from anything contained in my remarks. I was merely commending the Secretary of the Treasury on leaving the determination of policy to the Congress, where in my opinion it belongs, rather than exercising the authority which he undoubtedly has under the law to renew bond issues which would necessarily be subject to taxation for 30 years. All the action of the Secretary of the Treasury means is that Congress will have full opportunity to determine the policy of the United States Government. When that time comes the Senator from Vermont and all other Senators will have a right to expound any theory which they may have, and if he or others entertaining views similar to his can obtain sufficient votes in the two Houses of the Congress, to write their views into law.

I do desire to say, however, that I utterly repudiate the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont that Senators or Representatives or others who are in favor of a change of the fiscal policy of the United States which will subject Federal Government bond issues in the future to taxation, a policy undoubtedly within the constitutional authority of the Congress, are guilty of making attack upon the liberties of the people of the United States, as the Senator from Vermont suggested. I suggest that any Senator who entertains such a view has just as good a right to his view as has the Senator from Vermont to his rather reactionary and anachronistic view on the other side.

I further repudiate in the strongest terms the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont that any proposed change in the Constitution of the United States by submission to the people or to the legislatures of the several States, through the orderly process established by the founders of this Government, the framers of the Constitution, and specifically written into the Constitution itself of a proposition for a change in the Constitution, is an attack upon the liberties of the people, or upon the structure of our Government.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, there is one phase of this matter about which I would need more light before I should be willing to join with the distinguished Senator from Missouri in rating the present Secretary of the Treasury as the greatest Secretary since Alexander Hamilton.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I did not make any such suggestion. What I said was that I entirely approve the action of the Secretary of the Treasury at this time in not committing the Government to a permanent policy as to further bond issues, leaving it to the determination of the Congress; and I repeat that commendation.

Mr. BURKE. Very well; and I repeat my statement that before I am willing to put the Secretary of the Treasury upon the high pedestal I want more information upon one phase of the matter.

I agree fully with my colleague the Senator from Missouri that the Federal Government certainly has the right, and I think very properly could exercise that right, to tax its own issues; but the thing about this whole matter which has always disturbed me is the attempt by the Federal Government to force the States to enter upon a line of policy with which they do not agree.

In the same announcement to which the senior Senator from Missouri has referred, it is stated that the program now worked out by the Secretary of the Treasury is to be used as a club to force the recalcitrant States to enter into the field of taxation of its own securities, the securities of the school districts in the town where I live, and every other bond or obligation issued by any of the Government agencies. Before I acclaim the Secretary of the Treasury, I want to know first whether he is confining himself strictly and limiting himself solely to the taxation of the issues of the Federal Government, or whether this program is proposed to be used as another means of doing what we have come to call the voluntary thing in this country, such as voluntary compliance with the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, when everyone knows in that instance there is an effective club which removes all semblance of voluntary action. If the Secretary of the Treasury is engaged in such a program or is starting on such a course, I want to be in a position to condemn him as doing a great disservice to the country, rather than doing something which will benefit it, because, in my humble judgment, we have gone altogether too far in breaking down State lines and local autonomy, and for myself I want to be heard in protest against any move along that line.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, in response to what the Senator from Nebraska has said, I should simply like to say that if he saw any such thing in the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury as that the Secretary proposes to use this note issue as a club to force certain action by the States, he saw a different version of the statement from the one which I saw and a different version than that given by the Secretary of the Treasury to the members of the Finance Committee who happened to be in town. If the Senator from Nebraska has seen any such statement from the Secretary of the Treasury as that which he just made, I think it is his duty to put it in the RECORD so we can all see it.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, I suggested that I wanted more light upon the purposes of this move before I reached a final judgment. I did not say that in any official statement made by the Secretary of the Treasury he went beyond the bare point of saying that he would exercise the discretion which the Congress lodged in him. But the reputable newspapers of the country in commenting upon that statement said that the reporters had talked with the Secretary of the Treasury and did not quote him—I did not say that he was quoted in exact language—but they did say that the purpose for which the program was to be used was as I have stated, and at once the attorneys general and Governors of many States in the Union who have been fighting this proposal thought it necessary to go into action to check such a movement. If the Secretary of the Treasury has no such purpose in mind, I will, of course, be free then to praise him almost as highly as has the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, the Senator in his previous remarks said that in the very same statement of the Secretary of the Treasury there was contained a declaration that it was the purpose to use this means as a club on the States. I insist there was no such declaration in the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BURKE. I think the Senator from Missouri is entirely mistaken with respect to what I said. At least I am very clear in my own mind that what I intended to say was that in the same announcement the newspapers carried a statement—not in the exact words of the Secretary of the Treasury, but it all came out at the same time—of what the Secretary of the Treasury proposed to do, and the correspondents reported that the plan I have suggested was a part of the program. So I only ask the Senator from Missouri and others to exercise a little reasonable caution, and find out just what is in mind before they talk too loud in their praise of the Secretary's action.

ORDER FOR RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate shall have completed its business today, it stand in recess until Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PAYMENTS TO SHORT-LINE RAILROADS

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, on November 26, 1940, the legislative day of November 19, House bill 10098, to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for termination of Federal control of railroads," and so forth, was passed by the Senate. As I understand, the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who now honors this assembly by presiding, made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed. That motion has been pending since then.

Mr. President, at this time I desire to move consideration of the motion made by the Senator from Utah to reconsider the vote by which House bill 10098 was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, in order that the RECORD may show more clearly what the subject matter is, will the Senator from Colorado make a brief statement of the purpose of the measure?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I shall be glad to do so. House bill 10098 provides for the relief of the so-called short-line railroads by reason of what occurred at the time of the World War when the railroads were taken over by the Government. After that time the class I railroads were paid by the Federal Government in connection with their operation during the time when they were controlled by the Government. Part of the short-line railroads were also paid under legislation passed in 1920 by the Congress, but during the process of paying the short-line railroads some dispute arose as to the word "deficit," and, due to the change made by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the interpretation of the word "deficit," many of the short-line railroads were not given the relief which the class I railroads and other short-line railroads were given. House bill 10098 was enacted to give a different interpretation to the word "deficit" than had been made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which would in turn permit the short-line railroads to obtain the relief which they deserved, and which Congress had already extended to them.

During the consideration of the bill the House, in its wisdom, placed a limitation of 5¾ percent on the fair valuation of the short-line railroads as the amount such railroads should be allowed. That limitation was fixed in order to determine whether or not the railroads had a deficit, and no deficit could be paid in excess of 5¾ percent.

The Senate also added an amendment which provided that no short-line railroad could receive an amount in excess of $150,000. That amendment was sponsored by the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED].

The Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate had the bill under consideration for a long time, and after these two amendments were placed in it we were able to have the bill favorably reported and passed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it true that if the measure should become law, and a short-line railroad should establish its claim and qualify for relief under it, it could not receive in the aggregate, including what it earned and the sum the Government paid to it under its claim, an amount greater than 5¾ percent per annum on its total valuation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I understand that the 5¾ percentage on its total valuation is the total amount of its earnings, and I think the answer to the Senator's question, if I understand it correctly, is, "Yes."

Mr. AUSTIN. I think it should be. As I understand the bill, it should include both the earnings and the amount certified. If it does, that is in accord with my understanding of what ought to have been done.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I am very certain that that is what the bill does.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I shall be glad to yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator a question, prompted by the interrogatory of the Senator from Vermont. As I understand the terms of the bill, if the earnings of a railroad exceed 5¾ percent, it is limited to that amount. It may not receive any additional sum whatever.

Mr. AUSTIN. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. KING. So there is an injustice to 66 railroads which were cut off while 72 received a much larger percentage. The Interstate Commerce Commission reversed its ruling, thus denying 66 railroads the relief to which they were entitled, and we are now validating what is believed to be an unjust, if not illegal, act.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. As I understand, that is what the House wanted to do. The House did not want to give any relief payment to a railroad which had earned 5¾ percent. The House thought that such a railroad was not in need of relief. That is the object of the House amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am reluctant to intrude upon the Senate at this time and regret that my distinguished friend from Colorado insists upon bringing up the motion which I entered some time ago for the reconsideration of the measure which passed.

In order to present the matter as I understand it, I desire to submit a few observations in opposition to the motion. May I say to my friend that I shall be reluctant to call for a quorum, but I do not think the bill ought to be jammed through at the present time, or that the motion ought to be taken up for consideration in an attempt to force the bill through without a quorum of the Senate to pass upon the question, which is of importance to a large number of the smaller railroads.

The claimed purpose of the bill is to rectify the gross injustice which has been done a number of small railroads by reason of the construction placed upon the word "deficit" by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In the so-called Transportation Act of 1920, 204 (a), it was provided that railroads taken over by the Government during the war should be reimbursed for their losses occasioned by the Government operation. In the act was contained a formula for determining the "deficit," and controversies arose thereafter as to the meaning of the word "deficit." The question was whether or not the railroads actually had to lose money; that is, that their operating incomes were less than their operating expenses, or whether the incomes of the railroads should be less during the period of Federal control than during the so-called test period.

This question was the subject of a study or report by the Interstate Commerce Commission in Finance Docket No. 1600, entitled "In the Matter of Construction of the Word 'Deficit,'" as used in paragraph (a) of section 204 of the Transportation Act of 1920, decided February 9, 1922. In its decision the Interstate Commerce Commission held as follows:

> We are of the opinion and hold that the word "deficit," as used in paragraph (a) of section 204, should be construed to mean a deficiency or decrease in income under private operation in the Federal control period as compared with the average income for corresponding portions of the test period.

There appears to have been no particular difficulty in the settlement of cases involving the larger railroads. However, there was considerable controversy in the matter of the short-line railroads. Under the decision previously referred to, the claims of 72 carriers for a differential in income—but not a red-ink operating deficit—were balanced in the amount of $2,836,953.57. However, there were remaining the claims of 66 railroads which were rejected under a decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission of October 17, 1925. This decision reversed the one of February 9, 1922, and, of course, eliminated to a large extent, if not wholly, the 66 railroads which did not get in under the line before the Commission reversed its decision.

In conclusion, the decision stated as follows:

> We now find that the words "deficit in its railway operating income" as used in section 204 of the Transportation Act, 1920, mean an excess of railway operating expenses over railway operating revenues, computed as therein provided.
> This construction excludes the carriers named above (Bingham & Garfield Co. and others) from the provisions of section 204, and an order dismissing their applications and claims will be entered.

The 66 railroads referred to had their claims pending, and they were being adjudicated in harmony with the former decision of the I. C. C., under which 72 of the larger railroads received compensation on the basis of their earnings during the test period.

Commissioner Esch, one of the ablest Commissioners, dissented and was joined by Commissioners Campbell, Lewis, and Cox. In his dissent, Commissioner Esch stated:

> From my study of section 204 and the facts and considerations connected with its enactment, it seems clear that the purpose and intent of Congress was to reimburse carriers for losses sustained because of Federal control.

The bill before us, H. R. 10098, would legislatively define the term "deficit" so as to conform to the Interstate Commerce Commission's decision of February 9, 1922 (66 I. C. C. 765). However, the bill contains a proviso, as follows:

> Provided, That the aggregate of the railway operating income of any carrier during that part of the period of Federal control during which such carrier was not operated by the Director General of Railroads plus the amount certified by the Commission under this act shall not for said period be at a rate in excess of 5¾ percent per annum of the value of the carrier's property determined by the Commission under section 19a of the Interstate Commerce Act: Provided further, That no claim certified under this subsection shall be for an amount in excess of $150,000.

That is to say, under the later decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission reversing its former decision the 72 railroads to which I have referred received, under the earlier definition of the word "deficit," a larger amount than is provided under the terms of the bill. Unfortunately the 66 railroads are limited to the provisions of the pending bill, and, of course, the amount which they were entitled to receive, by reason of the Federal Government taking possession of their property and operating it during the period of the war is denied them.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. I should like to have the Senator discuss for a moment the change in the definition of the word "deficit," and make clear the difference between the two definitions employed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Is it not true that in the first instance the Interstate Commerce Commission regarded as a deficit the difference between what a railroad company earned in peacetime and before the Government took charge of it, and what it earned in wartime after the Government took charge of it? That was the first definition, was it not?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. And afterward, in a Utah case, is it not true that they reversed that decision and rendered a new decision which depended upon actual operation of the road, and then said, in effect, that in order to have a certificate on the ground of deficit it must appear that in the actual operation of the road during the time when the Government operated it there was an actual deficit? Is not that what they ultimately held?

Mr. KING. I think that is the effect of the decision.

Mr. AUSTIN. Very well. In order to qualify for this certificate, a road must have actually suffered a deficit in its operations during the period for which the Government had it under control. Is that correct?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. And a limit of $150,000 per claimant is imposed by this bill. Is that correct?

Mr. KING. That is correct. In other words—and I am repeating—under the first decision the railroads which pushed their claims actively—and there were 72 of them, and they were the larger railroads, because I may add by way of parentheses that the larger claimants are usually more active than the poorer or smaller claimants—those 72 active claimants obtained much larger sums relatively than did the 66 which did not come in before the reversal of that decision. Believing that the limitation of 5¾ percent per annum of the value of the carrier's property is a clear discrimination against 66 railroads whose claims were disallowed under the decision of October 17, 1925 (99 I. C. C. 724), I offered an amendment to the pending bill to strike out all of the matter contained in the proviso in subsection (j).

To review for a moment, briefly, the history of this matter:

The Transportation Act of 1920 provided for the reimbursement of the railroads which were under the control of the Railroad Administration during the war, and which suffered losses by reason of Federal control rather than their own control. The Interstate Commerce Commission on February 9, 1922, decided that the word "deficit" should be construed to mean a deficiency or decrease in income under operation in the Federal control period as compared with the average income for a corresponding portion of the test period. This decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission was reversed after 72 railroads had received payment of their claims, and while 66 other railroads had claims still to be acted upon, by the decision of October 17, 1925. The Commission at that time decided that the word "deficit" meant a "red ink operating deficit"; that is, that while under Federal control the operating income was less than the operating expenses. The claims of the 66 railroads which have been rejected totaled $5,095,963.55. It is contended by those sponsoring the bill that because some of the railroads in question did show a profit which they considered too great during the period the lines were under Federal control, their claims should be rejected.

The decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission of October 17, 1925, seems to be based upon the consideration that because these railroads made a profit they should be precluded from any recovery for that reason, in spite of the fact that they made considerably less money while under Federal control than they made while the railroads were in their own hands.

Attention should also be called to the further proviso contained in subsection (j) to the effect that no claim shall be in excess of $150,000. Five of the claims pending out of the 66 are for more than $150,000, and this would mean that 61 claimants might be paid in full and 5 claims would have to be scaled down to $150,000 if their profits were not in excess of 5¾ percent. This is so manifestly unfair that it seems to me the Senate should reject the bill or accept the amendment which I have offered, and to which I have just called attention.

In view of the fact that the claims of the 72 railroads whose claims were filed under the first ruling of the Interstate Commerce Commission, are similar to the claims of the 66 railroads which were rejected under the second decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, I introduced the amendment to which I have invited attention.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator, as usual, has made a cogent and persuasive statement; but the most cogent and persuasive thing I heard him say, if I heard him correctly, was at the outset, when he announced that he would have to ask for a quorum if this motion should be pressed. I should like to know if that is his purpose, because, if it is, obviously the motion will have to be withdrawn, and I see no particular purpose in pursuing the exploration of the merits of the question.

Mr. KING. I will frankly state that I am greatly embarrassed because I should like to have the bill disposed of, but in view of the facts and the representations made to me I believe that the bill has some injustices and ought not to be considered in the absence of a quorum; and, reluctant as I am to delay consideration of the bill, I shall ask my friend from Colorado not to press this motion today. Before this Congress ends I feel sure there will be a quorum and then I shall not interpose any objection to the consideration of the motion.

I hope, with that explanation, that my friend—whose suggestions to me are almost commands—will appreciate my situation and not force me to take the step which I should dislike to take.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I do not share the Senator's optimism about a quorum showing up here one of these days. As a matter of fact, I think most of us know either that Congress is liable to adjourn or the attendance is liable to grow smaller, if that were possible, before the session ends. Therefore, I cannot share the Senator's optimism at all.

This bill was passed by the Congress—the House and the Senate. The Senator from Utah entered his motion to reconsider, and his motion to reconsider has the effect of killing the bill. That is all there is to it; and we shall have to dispose of his motion, or the bill will be killed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado a question. It reflects upon the expediency of legislating. Is it true that the aggregate of all the claims that could be paid under this law would be $1,869,353?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes; under this law, as amended, the total amount is $1,119,905. That is the difference between the Senator from Utah and myself. As we know, when claims come before the Congress they are sometimes whittled down, and that is what happened to this claim. This bill originally, and as the Senator from Utah would like to have it passed, provided for the payment of claims amounting to a total of $5,417,480, I think. The two Houses have whittled down the claim until the total amount now is $1,119,905.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the claims that were filed for $5,000,000, as the Senator indicated, were predicated upon the same ground and followed the same decision that was rendered before the reversal of the decision which was made in 1924. Is not that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is exactly true, the Senator is correct in his statement. However, the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] and Members of the House of Representatives, in their wisdom, obected to making these payments in full, on the ground that some of the so-called short-line railroads were merely facilities of an operation. For instance, in Utah there are some large copper properties, which have short-line railroads in connection with their operations. During the war these copper companies made a very great profit. The railroads were only a part of their operations, and some Senators and many Representatives felt that corporations operating short-line railroads in the capacity of facilities of plants should not get relief from the Federal Government. That is the reason why Congress cut down this claim. It was cut down from the five million figure to something like $1,800,000. Then the House made another cut of almost $700,000.

Mr. President, that is the whole story. If the Senator from Utah has his way, the bill will be killed, and that will be the end of it. Bills covering claims similar to the one we are discussing have been kicked around Congress for years and years, but we finally reached a basis, after long argument and discussion, and hearings, of which there seemed to be no end, arriving at a decision to settle the whole matter by the payment of $1,119,905. If the Senator will let the bill go through, the matter will be settled.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator speaks about these claims being "kicked around" Congress for a number of years. That perhaps is not to the credit of Congress; it certainly is not to be regarded as a criticism of the claimants, who have had legitimate claims against the Federal Government pending for years. In many instances we have set up commissions for the purpose of ascertaining the validity of claims against the Government and long years after just claims have been matured, and the claimants perhaps have gone to their great reward, before Congress has favorably acted upon the same.

I think the Senator is not quite fair in saying these claims have been "kicked around," as implying that they were unjust, or that they were not duly pressed. The Congress of the United States set up the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it was authorized to pass upon claims. The Interstate Commerce Commission did pass upon the railroad claims which were pending up to a certain date; their first decision was proper, as was demonstrated by the opinion of Commissioner Esch and others. As to the 66 small roads with claims still pending, testimony having been taken in nearly all of them, I am advised, a majority of the Commissioners reversed their decision. Since that time the claimants have been knocking at the door of Congress to give them justice, to accord them the same treatment that was accorded to the richer and larger railroads.

I repeat what I stated a moment ago, I do not want this matter taken up today. If it becomes apparent that we cannot get a quorum before adjournment, I will not insist upon calling a quorum, but will be content to have the matter again brought before the Senate for action.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Of course, the Senator understands that the bill originated in the House, was amended in the House, that it came to the Senate and was amended in the Senate, and that there must be a little time, if it is to be enacted, so that the two Houses can agree. The Senator doubtless knows also that the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in the House has stated that he could not accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah doing away with the 5¾-percent limitation—that they could not consider it.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that the Senate should refuse to pursue a course which it deems just because of a threat that unless we reject an amendment which does not meet their approval they will not approve a measure?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The Senator knows I am not making a threat, or anything of the kind.

Mr. KING. No; the Senator is not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Neither has the House made a threat. It is merely a statement of fact, and the Senator knows it. He knows that the House cannot and will not accept this kind of an amendment because they do not think it is fair. The House does not think it is fair to give to a large corporation operating a railroad merely as a facility of its operation a large amount of relief money, when during the war they made an excessive profit on their major operation, or, at least, a large profit. That is the contention of the House, and, as I understand it, they are not going to back away from that position.

Mr. KING. The Senator suggested that a large number of these railroads would get relief. They would be denied relief if their profits were in excess of 5¾ percent. Several would be denied the rights which the larger railroads had under the former decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. It is true that if the Senator will permit the bill to go through 46 railroads will be relieved, and we will be through with the whole matter; but if the Senator insists on killing the bill, then we will have the claims of the 66 railroads before us, as we have had for a long time.

Mr. KING. I do not think the Senator is fair in saying that I insist upon killing the bill. I do not insist on killing it; I am merely asking that it be amended so that there shall be no discrimination. I make the statement again that when it becomes apparent that a quorum will not be available during this session I shall not object to the Senator moving that the bill be taken up, perhaps some time next week.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I put the Senator and the Senate on notice that on Monday next, when we meet, I shall renew my request that the motion to reconsider be brought before the Senate.

Mr. KING. I accept the notice, in the presence of a large number of witnesses, and I shall not deny that I have received the notice.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Taylor, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker pro tempore had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 3729. An act for the relief of Hjalmar M. Seby;

S. 3765. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg., and for other purposes;

S. 3934. An act authorizing the State of Michigan, acting through the International Bridge Authority of Michigan, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto across the St. Marys River, from a point in or near the city of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., to a point in the Province of Ontario, Canada;

S. 4135. An act to legalize the construction by the State Highway Board of Georgia of a free highway bridge across the Withlacoochee River between Valdosta, Ga., and Madison, Fla., at Horns Ferry;

S. 4370. An act authorizing the President to appoint an Under Secretary of War during national emergencies, fixing the compensation of the Under Secretary of War, and authorizing the Secretary of War to prescribe duties;

H. R. 658. An act for the relief of the estate of Dr. B. L. Pursifull, Grace Pursifull, Eugene Pursifull, Ralph Pursifull, Bobby Pursifull, and Dora Little; and

S. J. Res. 306. Joint resolution extending the time for submitting the final report of the Temporary National Economic Committee.

TOTALITARIAN ATTACK UPON DEMOCRACY

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to discuss for a short time some of the phases of the present world conflict, and particularly the assaults made by the totalitarian states upon democratic nations. The world has become aware of the evil purposes of Hitler and his associates. They plan to destroy democracy and establish autocratic rule in many if not all parts of the world. Hitler waged a merciless war upon Czechoslovakia and Poland, as well as other governments, and has brought within the circle of his activities Mussolini, Stalin, and Japan. In harmony with the conspiracy upon the part of the Axis Powers, Greece has been assaulted, and Mussolini's military forces are endeavoring to conquer Greece and to superimpose upon the brave and heroic people of that country a merciless and despotic rule, a rule which the Axis Powers seek to impose upon the remaining governments not under their iron rule.

There was no justification whatever for the wicked attack by the Fascist Government. The people of Greece were living in peace with the world; they desired to maintain cordial relations with all nations and were pursuing those paths that would make for the growth and development of their country. Their country is small in area and its population limited. They coveted no territory beyond their borders and, as indicated, sought only the development of their own land and the promotion of the welfare and happiness of their own country. Italy has a population of approximately 70,000,000 people and for a number of years had devoted itself to the building of a powerful military force. Mussolini recently boasted that Italy had 8,000,000 men available for military service and that he would "break the back of Greece within a year." It was a bombastic and brutal fulmination on the part of the Fascist leader. He had conquered the small and feeble state of Albania, had made war upon Ethiopia, and was determined to destroy Greece.

As stated, the attack upon Greece was without provocation and calls for universal execration. It seems inconceivable that a great nation such as Italy should wage a war of aggression upon a small state which had given no occasion whatever for the assault made upon it and its people. History will condemn Mussolini and applaud the Greeks for their heroism and courage and for their defense against a powerful aggressor. The Greeks are defending their homes and their country with that heroism and courage which have always characterized the Greek race. They have demonstrated their greatness in all fields of human endeavor, and Rome and the world are indebted to the Greeks for their invaluable contributions to the cause of liberty and civilization.

In my opinion, the Greeks, in this unequal contest, have the sympathy and high regard of the American people. Moreover, I believe that material aid will be given to Greece—aid not only from individuals and groups but also aid at the hands of our Government.

It can truthfully be said that Great Britain and Greece and China are citadels defending democracy and freedom; they are repelling the assaults of totalitarian states which seek the subjugation of the world.

The President of the United States within the past few days received a message from the King of Greece, in which he stated, among other things:

> The Greek nation is fighting for the principles of justice, truth, and liberty, without which life for us is inconceivable.

The President of the United States, in replying to the King's message, sent a telegram reading as follows:

> HIS MAJESTY GEORGE III, King of Greece:
> I thank Your Majesty for your friendly message, which comes at a time when all free peoples are deeply impressed by the courage and steadfastness of the Greek nation.
> The American Red Cross has already sent substantial amounts of funds and supplies for the relief of suffering in your country, and I am sure that my countrymen will give generously to the new organizations which are being established for the same purpose.
> As Your Majesty knows, it is the settled policy of the United States Government to extend aid to those governments and peoples who defend themselves against aggression.
> I assure Your Majesty that steps are being taken to extend such aid to Greece, which is defending itself so valiantly.
> FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Mr. President, I repeat, when I say that the American people look with deep concern upon the assaults which are being made by the totalitarian states upon nations in various parts of the world. It is apparent that the totalitarian states seek the destruction of republics and democratic institutions and the establishment of a political and economic system which will enslave the greater part of the world. The menacing attitude of the totalitarian states toward this Republic as well as to the few remaining democracies has aroused the American people to the importance of providing adequately for national defense.

Mr. President, we often hear the question asked, What should the United States do in this mad world, when governments are being overthrown and innocent people slaughtered, and its own interests directly or indirectly menaced?

The American people have desired and still desire peace, and look with deep concern upon the conflagration which is raging in so many parts of the world. Following the World War many believed that a new order had come into the world and that by treaties and the application of international law, controversies among nations might be settled and war averted. Treaties were entered into, but they have failed to establish peace; and, as I have indicated, in numerous parts of the world, savage and brutal war is waged against helpless and unoffending peoples.

The list of nations destroyed by the triumvirate of powers which violated treaties and disregarded all moral and international obligations, is appalling; and throughout the world is increasing fear that savagery and barbarism will continue their evil course until civilization is destroyed and the world wasted away. Many Americans believed that by a policy of isolation and multilateral treaties, and neutrality legislation, this Republic would be immune from the conflicts which might rage in other parts of the world. However, the frightful conditions now existing refute the hopeful and optimistic views which were entertained; rights which we surrendered have not made us secure and immune from attack; indeed, in some respects, they have weakened our position and encouraged dictators, and those seeking world dominion, to formulate plans hostile to this Republic.

As stated, neutrality acts and international guaranties have been repudiated, and treaties violated, and Hitler and his associates are devising plans for the further destruction of peace-loving nations, and for the division of the world among four despotic powers.

Peoples who loved peace and enjoyed liberty have been the victims of Hitler, Stalin, Mussolini, and the military cabal in Japan, who, not satisfied with past conquests, are now carrying on ruthless and merciless attacks upon individuals and peoples who stand in the way of their mad ambitions.

Some Americans seem blinded to the dangers which menace this Republic, and hug the illusion to their breasts that this Republic has been and will be free from any attack; that the scorching fires of war, involving so many parts of the world, will not even touch the hem of the garment of this Republic. It has been apparent for some time that Stalin, Hitler, Mussolini, and military leaders in Japan were cooperating to dominate the world, and they have waged relentless and barbarous war upon peace-loving and democratic peoples. The pages of history fail to record more ferocious and barbarous methods of slaughtering human beings, and destroying the monuments of industry and civilization, than those adopted by the four powers referred to. Ruthless methods employed against peace-loving China, resulting in the killing of millions of persons and the driving of tens of millions from their homes, have been and are being employed by the Axis Powers in their determination to destroy democratic nations of Europe.

Japan was a signatory to the Nine Power Pact, which was a solemn obligation to respect the sovereignty, independence, territorial, and administrative integrity of China. The United States was a party to that treaty, as well as others, to which Japan and various nations were signatories. But Japan is not only carrying forward her war of destruction against China but is cooperating with the Axis to deprive Great Britain and France and Holland of their possessions in the Far East.

The Japanese Government, apparently intoxicated by its recent treaty with Hitler and Mussolini, does not hesitate to threaten this Republic if it shall discharge its obligations in the Orient. Japan seeks the destruction of China and the control of the Pacific. Her attitude is one of hostility to the United States and a challenge to this Republic in exercising its rights and discharging its responsibility in the Pacific and in the Orient.

Japan has declared that a new order is being established in Asia and manifests her purpose to become an active participant in the execution of the Axis plans.

Evidence is accumulating that substantially all of Europe is to be brought under the control of the Axis, and that Africa and that part of Asia not allocated and under the control of Japan is to be divided among the victors. Already Norway, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, Austria, Poland, France,

Czechoslovakia, Albania, Luxemburg, Latvia, Estonia, Lithuania, Rumania, and Ethiopia are no longer independent nations. They have been chained to the chariot of the totalitarian states; and military movements are now being carried forward to encircle within the iron chains of the Axis Powers Hungary, Yugoslavia, Bulgaria, Greece, Turkey, and Egypt, and states and governments in western Asia.

If this Republic is immune from attack, as some of our citizens assert, why are we appropriating billions and billions of dollars for military purposes? Why this haste to build more ships and submarines and airplanes? Why the expenditure of stupendous sums for bombs and munitions of war? Against whom are we preparing?

What country with sublime courage and indomitable will is defending itself against the ruthless and barbarous assaults of the Axis Powers? Everyone knows that Great Britain is one of the few democratic nations which has survived the assaults of the totalitarian states. For many reasons the American people desire that Great Britain shall not be conquered; indeed, many desire that she shall triumph over her foes. If she is defeated, it would mean, as many believe, this Republic would be challenged by Hitler and his associates.

Britain's Fleet has been a shield of protection to this Nation. We have not felt it necessary to build a two-ocean navy so long as Great Britain remained as she has been for many long years, a defender of democracy and the principles of liberty and justice.

Now, with Japan associating herself with the Axis, it becomes important that we maintain two powerful fleets—one in the Pacific and one in the Atlantic. For more than a hundred years Britain and this Republic have had many aims in common, and the American people have believed that Great Britain's Fleet was an arm of protection for the Western Hemisphere.

It is clear, therefore, that the billions which we are expending and the billions which we will expend for military preparedness and defense are the result of the policies of the Axis Powers. If Great Britain is saved, the authority of the totalitarian states will be diminished; our expenditures for military purposes reduced, and, moreover, there will be no fear of the intrusion of alien systems into South America, or that the Monroe Doctrine will be challenged by Hitler and his associates.

It should be obvious to everyone who loves America and who desires that dictators shall not rule the world, that Great Britain shall not be destroyed, and that help given in this hour of her heroic struggle is aid to people everywhere who seek freedom and justice. Lovers of liberty in every clime should welcome an opportunity to aid Britain in her heroic struggle. Her enemies treat with contempt all moral and legal obligations, all principles of international law, all restraints imposed by the principles of justice which prevail among civilized peoples.

The world has never witnessed a more heroic and glorious example of a people fighting for liberty and justice than that afforded by Great Britain—and, I should add, Greece and China. They, too, are fighting against the totalitarian powers for the preservation of their countries and for the cause of liberty. They are fighting not alone for themselves but for this Republic and for the remaining democracies in the world, and for peoples, wherever they may be found, who seek liberty, peace, and justice.

We do not forget the struggle of Great Britain in the days of Napoleon, when he contemplated the invasion and destruction of Great Britain, as Hitler plans for the destruction not only of England but of the British Empire. In 1804, when Great Britain was preparing to resist Napoleon's invasion, the younger Pitt said in the House of Commons:

> I need not remind the House that we are come to a new era in the history of nations; that we are called to struggle for the destiny not of this ccuntry alone but of the civilized world. We must remember that it is not for ourselves alone that we submit to unexampled privations. We have for ourselves the great duty of self-preservation to perform; but the duty of the people of England now is of a nobler and higher order. We are, in the first place, to provide for our security against an enemy whose malignity to this country knows no bounds. But this is not to close the views or the efforts of our exertion in so sacred a cause. Amid the wreck and misery of nations it is our just exultation that we have continued superior to all that ambition or that despotism could effect, and our still higher exultation ought to be that we provide not only for our own safety, but hold out a prospect to nations now bending under the iron yoke of tyranny what the exertions of a free people can effect; and that, at least in this corner of the world, the name of liberty is still revered, cherished, and sanctified.

An eloquent address, paralleled in part by some of the magnificent speeches recently made by Churchill, one of the great men of England.

There is daily brought to our attention evidence of the brutal and oppressive rule imposed upon helpless people by the Axis Powers. Great Britain, with more than human courage, is meeting the savage and wicked assaults on liberty and civilization.

The President of the United States, in an eloquent address delivered at Dayton, Ohio, on October 12, on the anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus, referred to transactions between the United States and Great Britain under which naval bases were acquired by the United States, not only for its protection but for the protection of the whole Western Hemisphere. He declared:

> We of the Americas still consider that this defense of these oceans of the Western Hemisphere against acts of aggression is the first factor in the defense and protection of our own territory and integrity. We reaffirm that policy, lest there be any doubt of our intention to maintain it.

I hope some of our American friends who are talking about isolation, and doing nothing to aid in the defense of democratic nations, will remember the words of our President.

He further stated:

> There are some * * * who suggest that the countries of Europe and Asia will halt us in the path we see ahead for ourselves and democracy.

Referring to Great Britain, he said:

> No combination of dictator countries of Europe and Asia will stop the help we are giving to almost the last free people fighting to hold them at bay.

I respectfully submit that this statement is a declaration that the British people are fighting to hold the dictators at bay, and that this Republic is giving and will continue to give aid to Great Britain.

The President then added:

> Our course is clear. Our decision is made. We will continue to pile up our defense and our armaments. We will continue to help those who resist aggression and who now hold the aggressors far from our shores. Let no American in any part of the Americas question the possibility of danger from overseas. Why should we accept assurances that we are immune? History records that not long ago those same assurances were given to the people of Holland and Belgium. It can no longer be disputed that forces of evil which are bent on conquest of the world will destroy whomever and whenever they can destroy. We have learned the lessons of recent years. We know that if we seek to appease them by withholding aid from those who stand in their way we only hasten the day of their attack upon us.

That is equivalent to stating—it is so clear that it needs no explanation—that Great Britain is holding at bay those who would attack us, and that by any policy of appeasement we are only hastening the day when we shall be the objects of the assaults of totalitarian states.

The President further added:

> The men and women of Britain have shown how free people defend what they know to be right. Their heroic defense will be recorded for all time. It will be perpetual proof that democracy, when put to the test, can show the stuff of which it is made.

I have referred to Japan's association with the Axis Powers and her bellicose attitude toward this Republic. The President, in his important address, had in mind our rights in the Pacific when he declared that:

> When we speak of defending this Western Hemisphere, we are speaking not only of the territory of North, Central, and South America and the immediately adjacent islands. We include the right to the peaceful use of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. That has been our traditional policy.

I have believed that the interests of this Republic warranted the aid being given to Great Britain. Accordingly, I introduced a measure, now pending in the Senate, which has for its object the strengthening of our national defense. To secure that result the President is authorized to enter into negotiations, by lease or otherwise, for the acquisition of islands or other possessions of Great Britain in or bordering on the Pacific Ocean. The President, acting in the interest of our country, has acquired, by proper methods, bases in the Atlantic and in the neighborhood of the Caribbean, but I think we need to acquire some bases in the Pacific.

The bill also authorizes the President to make loans and extensions of credit to Great Britain and its political subdivisions, and also to reduce the amount of her indebtedness to the United States by an amount equivalent to the reduction of the Italian Government's indebtedness to the United States.

The bill seeks to remove provisions of existing law prohibiting loans to Great Britain or its political subdivisions, or loans to persons or associations acting for or on behalf of the Government of Great Britain or its political subdivisions. I may add in passing that the Johnson Act does not prevent our Government extending credit to Great Britain or to any other country.

It is obvious that in affording aid to Great Britain we are protecting the American people and this Republic. We are not only protecting the American people in a material way, but we are protecting them and this Republic, and the democratic institutions for which it stands, against attacks which may follow if Britain should be conquered.

In my opinion, Great Britain is a rampart for the protection of democratic nations, and of liberty and justice in all parts of the world. Because of that belief I favor the passage of the measures to which I have referred, and express the hope that Great Britain, Greece, and China will survive the cruel and barbarous attacks to which they and their people are subjected by the Nazi Government and some of its conspirators.

The American people have a vital interest in the preservation of Great Britain, China, and Greece. For that reason I hope that in this contest which is being waged by Great Britain for liberty, justice, and democracy, the American people will extend not only sympathy but aid to Great Britain, China, and Greece.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD as part of my remarks a number of statements appearing in various newspapers. They are as follows:

Editorial from the New York Herald Tribune dated September 30, 1940:

WE CANNOT REMAIN INDIFFERENT

As yet the only official American response to the Berlin-Rome-Tokyo treaty is Secretary Hull's statement that the pact "does not substantially alter" the preexistent situation. In a significant sense this is true. All the glittering ceremonial at Berlin, all the grandiloquent flourishes about the three powers coming to one another's assistance if "attacked" cannot affect by one jot their present inability to do so. Words will not shorten the thousands of miles of salt water which separate them; words will not sink the men-of-war which hold these routes, add a barrel of oil or a ton of steel to Japan's slender resources, make Mussolini any less a prisoner of the Mediterranean or Hitler any less a prisoner of the North Sea blockade. These words even fail to clarify the chief uncertainty of the situation, which is the attitude of Russia, and the lesser one, which is the attitude of Spain. As they stand they are a colossal bluff, which in itself alters nothing.

But as the comment rolls in from all over the world it becomes only more obvious that they are a bluff intended as another piece of diplomatic terrorism which would alter everything. To conclude from Secretary Hull's comment, as some Senators have done, that because the treaty does not actually change the situation the United States can afford to remain indifferent to its implications would be profoundly shortsighted. This treaty is an order issued to the United States—with an explicitness which would be amazing in any diplomacy less brutal than that to which the totalitarians have been accustoming us—to allow Hitler and his satellites to destroy Britain and redistribute the world without hindrance. It is a ukase issued without the power to enforce it, a threat from blackmailers who have no means of making it good. But for that reason its whole effectiveness depends upon the manner in which it is received.

If the United States in any way accedes to this unparalleled challenge, or even allows it to pass without appropriate action, it will simply announce to the world that our democracy, like so many others, is now meekly ready to dig its own grave at the command of Hitlerian terror tactics. The effect upon the Russians, who are at the moment watching this country keenly; upon the Spaniards, who are of such critical importance to the whole question of Spanish America; and upon the Italian and German populations, whose rulers have presented them with this diplomatic bauble to divert them from Hitler's failure before the cliffs of England, will be immediate and disastrous for the United States. A treaty which alters nothing in itself may then really succeed in remaking the world. There can be little doubt that the production of this document announces one of the most critical moments of the war, and one to which the United States must respond with all the firmness and clarity at its command.

There is no reason why the United States should attack any of the three powers who have here forbidden us to do so; it would be folly if we did. But by combining their several wars into a single world struggle and then orienting their association directly against the United States, they have only intensified our vital interest in the survival of Great Britain, in the maintenance of order in the Far East, in the security of the Americas, in every other objective which it is our policy to defend; and, in face of this direct threat, we can do no less than make it plain that the defense of these interests must now be strengthened by whatever means seem suitable. Japan, for example, cannot expect that our attitude toward feeding her munitions industries can be the same after this declaration as before; nor can Germany suppose that it will permit us to lessen our aid to Britain. The precise steps, however, by which we are to meet the treaty are a matter for careful consideration; the one overwhelming fact is that we must meet it clearly and emphatically in our own defense.

An article appearing in the Washington Post, dated November 19, 1940, by Walter Lippmann, entitled "The Meaning to America of a British Defeat":

TODAY AND TOMORROW—THE MEANING TO AMERICA OF A BRITISH DEFEAT

(By Walter Lippmann)

As the Nation proceeds to put into effect the policy of supporting Great Britain, it will be most necessary to hold clearly in our minds why this policy, to which both parties have committed themselves, represents the vital interests of the United States. Much has been said on one aspect of the matter, but the whole case has not yet been presented clearly and candidly to the people.

Thus it is well understood by almost everyone that if Great Britain wins the war the safety of the Western Hemisphere and of the main American interests in the Pacific Ocean is assured. It is well understood that the continuing resistance of Great Britain provides the United States with a protective shield behind which it can develop its naval and military defenses. It is well understood that if Britain were conquered the United States would face alone, if not in actual war, then at least in a warlike diplomacy and economic pressure, the combined power of Germany, Japan, Italy, and their satellite states. It is well understood that to be the one great democratic power left in a world of victorious totalitarian powers would be a kind of isolation such as Americans have never dreamed of.

But to have understood all of these things is not yet to have understood the whole reason why the effective support of Great British is the vital interest of America. For in the partial presentation of the case there is the fatally misleading assumption that, if Britain were defeated, the peoples of the British Empire would somehow become a merely neutral force in the relations between the Triple Axis and the Western Hemisphere. Most of the discussion here, except among those who are the best informed and have the clearest insight, supposes that the defeat of Britain would simply mean the withdrawal of the British Fleet and British power as a barrier between the Axis and ourselves, that where Britain stands now there would then be nothing, and that our problem would then be to defend ourselves against, or to get on as best we could with, the victorious Axis. But this would not be the situation, and it could not be.

Though to say so must be a shock to many, the inescapable fact is that a defeated Britain could not be neutral. It would have to be a partner of the Axis. For if the defeat of Britain were a military defeat resulting from invasion of the British Isles, the starvation of the British Isles, or the crushing of the spirit of the people of the British Isles, the Government of Winston Churchill would inevitably be swept away and replaced by a regime which obeyed the orders of Berlin either because it was composed of men who hoped for favors from Berlin or by men who dared not say "no" to Berlin. It would be a regime similar to that of Vichy, except that there remains in France and among all patriotic Frenchmen in Vichy the hope of an eventual liberation through a British victory. This saving hope is what now preserves the neutrality of France; were Britain defeated, there would be no such saving hope for France and none for Britain. For how could a defeated Britain, with the Germans in occupation or with a pro-German government installed in London, hope for liberation from the United States?

The case would be no better if in order to avert a military conquest, the British decided to negotiate a peace with the victorious Axis. For such a peace could not be negotiated by Britons like Churchill and Bevin and Morrison who have sworn that they will never give up; it would have to be negotiated by Britons of a wholly different sort. In such a negotiation is it likely, is it conceivable that the British appeasers would feel in any way bound to think of our interests? Certainly not. Is it not plain that their best chance of getting favorable terms for the British Empire would be to invite Hitler and to help Hitler to carve out his empire elsewhere? Except for strategic points like Gibraltar, Suez, and Singapore, and a few colonies in Africa, there are no important territories under the British Crown that Hitler greatly covets. His empire in Europe would be the Continent of Europe and his empire overseas would be South America. An Anglo-German peace of appeasement, designed to spare Britain and to satisfy Hitler, would naturally be based on the principle of a free hand for Germany in continental Europe and Latin America.

The effects of the conquest of Britain or of the acceptance of a peace of Nazi appeasement would be world-wide. For while there would no doubt be multitudes of British people everywhere, in Canada and in Australia, and in the colonies, who would never accept such a fate, there would be others who in loyalty to the Crown and with patriotism would feel, as so many Frenchmen do, that they had to cling together and support the policy of the Empire. Our relations with all British lands—Canada among them—would be profoundly unsettled. For we could never know for certain how far any British subject dissociated himself from what would then be the policy of London, from what would then be the obligation of loyalty to King and country.

This is the tragedy of Franco-American and of Franco-British relations today. Although Britons and Americans have not ceased to love the French Nation as the most civilized of peoples or to believe in it as the true defender of all that they cherish, yet they must take into account the terrible and insidious pressure of the German conquerors on the conscience and the loyalty of Frenchmen.

A defeated and subjugated government in London, operated by men who were bound to Berlin, who had given to Berlin hostages such as Vichy has had to give, would cause such a revolutionary unsettlement of all Anglo-American relations as no man can now fully imagine. We should not know in any part of the world who are our friends, who are the neutrals, who are our antagonists.

Thus, there is staked upon the effectiveness of our support to Great Britain much more than many of us have as yet allowed ourselves to realize. For while Britain resistant and victorious is our first line of defense, Britain defeated and subjugated would become a force for disintegration and insecurity behind all our defenses.

BROADENING OF HELP FOR BRITAIN CALLED SUREST UNITED STATES DEFENSE STEP—MARK SULLIVAN SAYS AMERICA IS ARMING IN FEAR OF WORLD NAZIFICATION, AND THIS CANNOT TAKE PLACE AS LONG AS BRITISH FLEET CONTROLS THE SEAS

(By Mark Sullivan)

WASHINGTON, November 15.—Our preparedness for war increases cumulatively. Also the nearness of war to us increases. Probably we shall shortly pass into an advanced stage both of preparedness and nearness.

What is the nature of this war we prepare against? It is not an ordinary war about any ordinary issue, such as territory. It is, on our part, a war of defense against aggression. But a special kind of aggression and a special kind of defense.

At the risk of trying to simplify too greatly, the thing we fear from Germany and her allies may be stated thus: We fear that Germany, if she conquers England and gets control of the seas, may impose her totalitarian system on the world, may nazify the world. She announces that intention; repeatedly she declares her intention of destroying democracy everywhere and replacing it with her own system, which she calls a "new world order." We fear that, with all the world nazified except us, we could hardly preserve our own system. We fear that we, too, would be nazified. We fear that the totalitarian system would be imposed on us.

We fear that this would be done to us. But we do not fear, except in a remote sense, that Germany would do this by armed invasion of our soil. We do not seriously fear that a German army would goose step up Pennsylvania Avenue and set up a dictator or gauleiter in the White House.

DANGER IN A DIFFERENT FORM

Our danger, as it is seen by many thoughtful and competent persons, has a different form. The destruction of our American system, which we fear and which we arm to prevent, would come about in a different way.

Again at the risk of trying to simplify too greatly, the steps by which the totalitarian system might be imposed upon us run thus:

Germany conquers Britain. Germany then controls the sea. Germany then has a position of dominance over most of the world, excepting us. Germany then proceeds to nazify the world, to impose the totalitarian system on the world. As respects much of Europe, she does it by arms or threat of arms. As respects other parts of the world, she does it by pressure, chiefly economic.

She begins in most countries by nazifying industry and commerce. She takes that totalitarian system of commerce and industry, which she now operates within Germany, and expands it to cover the world. She makes all the commerce and all the industry of all the world into one unit centering in Germany directed from Berlin. She says to one country, "You shall raise and export wheat." To another country, "You shall raise cotton." To another, "You shall make textiles." To another, "You shall make automobiles."

Certain key industries she would keep for herself. She would keep the armament industry as a matter of course; she would keep the business of ocean transportation mainly for herself. She would keep the shipbuilding industry, or so manage it in other countries as to enable her to have the strongest navy in the world and also the strongest mercantile fleet. Quite likely she would prevent other countries from building ships beyond a certain size or number. For a similar reason she would keep the major airplane industry. She would probably fix the currency for that part of the world which she dominated.

All this, all the separate centers of production throughout the world, all the routes of trade, all the sea lanes, Hitler would weave into one web. It is as if all the world were one great factory operated from Berlin.

We fear that Germany would do this to all the world, except us. And we fear that after it was done to the rest of the world, we could not stay out. We fear that we too would be obliged to adopt the totalitarian system for our commerce and industry. And we fear that, if we adopted a totalitarian system for industry and commerce, we should be obliged to adopt it in the other respects. We should become a totalitarian country, totalitarian form of society, totalitarian form of government.

It is to prevent this that we arm.

What is said here thus far is the view of competent and thoughtful persons. It is, in substance, the view upon which we as a nation are acting.

ANOTHER POINT OF VIEW

There are other persons, of high standing, who do not think it would work out that way. The persons who feel this are as patriotic as any others. Conceivably they may be right. But we as a nation have chosen the other view. We have decided that the danger exists, and exists in the form here outlined. And so we arm against it—against Germany making the world totalitarian and thereby making us totalitarian.

We do not omit possibility of armed invasion. We assume it is possible Germany might get naval and air bases in Latin America, and from there might attack the United States. Against this possibility we arm and otherwise prepare ourselves in many ways.

Against every form of danger that Germany is to us, our best defense is to help Britain. If Britain survives, Germany cannot attack us directly. If Britain survives, Germany cannot impose her system on the world.

Soon we shall realize that the greater the help to Britain the greater the defense for us. We shall increase our help to Britain and extend it to new lines.

Also an article by Walter Lippmann in the Washington Post of December 12, 1940, entitled "Japanese Intervention in American Affairs":

TODAY AND TOMORROW—JAPANESE INTERVENTION IN AMERICAN AFFAIRS

(By Walter Lippmann)

The Japanese Foreign Minister, Mr. Matsuoka, received the foreign correspondents this week and made some interesting remarks about Japan's attitude toward the United States. They will be studied in this country and it is not unlikely that the more they are studied the more remarkable they will appear to be. For what Mr. Matsuoka tells us is that Japan will decide whether measures we may take to defend our security in the Atlantic Ocean are a good reason for launching an attack upon us in the Pacific Ocean. Mr. Matsuoka tells us that he does not wish to go to war with us but that he will go to war with us if Tokyo does not approve of our policy toward the European war. Tokyo is to be the judge of what we may do and what we may not do. Tokyo is to determine whether we have "attacked" Germany or have been attacked by Germany. And if Tokyo's verdict is unfavorable to us, Japan will go to war with us.

There will not be, says Mr. Matsuoka, "any serious clash" if "both of us attend to our own business," and "all depends on whether we mind our business." For, according to Mr. Matsuoka, the United States will not be attending to its own business if it interests itself in anything that happens in the Far East or in Europe. But Japan will be attending to her own business when, in addition to founding a new order in the Asiatic world, she constitutes herself the judge, jury, and lord high executioner in respect to American policy in the western world. According to Mr. Matsuoka, then, the price of peace is not merely to give Japan a free hand in the Pacific but to recognize Japan's right to censor and judge our policy in the Atlantic. If Mr. Matsuoka means what he said, the President and the Secretary of State and Congress will in future be expected to consult Tokyo and get the permission of the Japanese Government before taking any measures they may deem it desirable to take. For Tokyo will decide whether our assistance to Great Britain and Greece is an act of war which does or does not fall under article III of the Berlin Treaty of the Triple Alliance.

It will be difficult for Mr. Matsuoka to persuade the American people that they are a protectorate of the Japanese Empire and that their foreign policy as it affects western civilization is now subject to the control of the Japanese Government. Mr. Matsuoka must either be grossly misinformed by the Japanese Embassy in Washington or he is ignoring the information he receives if he imagines that it is wise or useful to talk in this fashion to the United States. Certainly, we do not wish to go to war with Japan, and if Japan wishes to discuss with us matters in which both countries have an interest, we shall certainly be ready to discuss these matters. But it is not wise or useful to tell us that we cannot be consulted about the Far East and that we shall be attacked by Japan if Japan does not like what we do about Europe.

The effect of such an amazing presumption will be to make Americans ask themselves what Mr. Matsuoka would be saying to us if there were no British fleet in the Atlantic and no Chinese

Army holding Japan in the East. Today we have a navy in the Pacific, supported by important British and Dutch forces, and based upon the powerful forts of Singapore at one end and Hawaii at the other; on the Atlantic side, Japan's two partners are locked up behind the immense power of the British Fleet. Yet in this situation Mr. Matsuoka ventures to claim the right to control our foreign policy in the Atlantic and threatens to fight us if the policy is not satisfactory. Since he has opened the discussion, we may continue it by asking him what he would have to say about our foreign policy if there were no Chinese and there were no British—if we stood alone and isolated with a one-ocean Navy in a world ruled by the Berlin Triple Alliance.

If anything were needed to demonstrate the vital importance of supporting Great Britain and China and the Netherlands Indies and Australia, Mr. Matsuoka has completed the demonstration by threatening us with war if we do not allow him to judge and define our foreign policy in respect to the defense of our vital interests in the Atlantic Ocean. As a result, his interview is bound to raise in very serious form the question whether the necessary answer to such a threat is not to take quickly even more energetic measures in support of China, and even more drastic measures to reduce Japan's capacity to threaten us with war.

For we have the power to take these measures, and the only reason we do not take them is that we do not wish to go to war with Japan, and it is not our habit to make threats of war. But neither are we accustomed to receiving threats of war from other nations. For we should in the end be compelled to take them seriously and to act in order that the threats may never be carried out.

Also an article appearing in the Washington Post dated September 29, 1940, entitled "Italians Call Three-Power Pact 'Last Warning' to America":

ITALIANS CALL THREE-POWER PACT "LAST WARNING" TO AMERICA—"EITHER SINCERE NEUTRALITY OR ENMITY" DEMANDED OF UNITED STATES; HOWEVER, FASCISTS ADMIT PACT IS CHIEFLY PROPAGANDA

ROME, September 28.—Italian commentators abandoned all pretense about the United States today and frankly stated that the three-cornered pact among Italy, Germany, and Japan was aimed at America.

Giovanni Ansaldo, editor of the Telegrafo, calls it the "last warning," and the newspaper Regime Fascista demands "either sincere neutrality or enmity."

The comments and hopes entertained can be summed up as follows:

The United States is warned that any move against Japan or the axis will mean war on two fronts. As a result Americans are expected to be frightened or prudent and to cease helping England.

Therefore the axis, with England isolated, can quickly finish the war while Japan, without fear of the United States, can go ahead in the Far East.

Meanwhile, Russia, already halted in the Balkans and too weak to take the offensive against the axis or even Japan, will remain quiet and perhaps even come to terms.

LITTLE RESULTS EXPECTED

In a practical sense, little is expected of the treaty, since obviously the axis cannot help Japan in her war against China and Japan cannot help the axis in its fight against England. Moreover, it is realized that the axis and Japan cannot even get together against the United States as long as England stands in the way and fights on.

In effect, the chief object of the treaty is considered to be propagandistic.

BULGARIA MAY JOIN PACT

ROME, September 28.—Bulgaria, friendliest of the Balkan countries to Russia, may join the new axis pact.

Spain also was considered likely to be a recruit in the near future to the military accord against attacks by any other power not now at war in Europe or Asia.

Bulgaria traditionally has been amenable to the "brother Slav" influence of Russia.

If Bulgaria entered the new alinement, foreign observers said, it presumably would be for protection against Greece, from which Sofia wants an outlet to the Aegean Sea through Thrace, and also from Turkey, friendly with Britain.

ISOLATION FOR TURKEY

Such an alliance, these observers added, would tend to isolate Turkey in a manner similar to the United States.

Authoritative Fascists have said previously that Italy and Germany want a settlement of still pending problems in southeastern Europe, among which are Albanian and Bulgarian claims on Greece.

A dispatch from Sofia reported that King Boris talked with his foreign minister, Ivan Popoff, and added that the Bulgarian finance minister, Dobri Bojjiloff, who has the close confidence of the King, would visit Berlin and Rome next month at the invitation of the axis governments.

Also, an article appearing in the New York Herald Tribune, by Maj. George Fielding Eliot, suggesting a plan affecting Japan's relation to the United States:

MAJOR ELIOT SUGGESTS A STRATEGY TO STOP JAPAN, CRACK NEW AXIS—UNITED STATES AND BRITAIN WORKING TOGETHER CAN DO IT, HE SAYS, WITHOUT CRIPPLING DEFENSE OF ENGLAND; DELAY OR HALF MEASURES MAY BE FATAL

(By Maj. George Fielding Eliot)

The announcement of the new Berlin-Rome-Tokyo axis confronts the world in general, and the English-speaking nations in particular, with an open acknowledgment of a situation long recognized as existing in fact; it is the motives behind this announcement which call for careful analysis, rather than the cooperation among the predatory powers, which has been going on more or less openly for so long.

Alliances are presumed to be mutually beneficial to all the contracting parties, unless one or more act under duress, which is hardly the case here. On this basis, some early commentators have found it difficult to see what benefit Japan is to expect; yet benefit there must be, or the practical Mr. Matsuoka would not be found in this galley.

Upon careful examination, only one real Japanese gain can be discovered—and that lies in the possibility that the Germans can bring such pressure to bear on Soviet Russia as to compel that country to stop aiding China. No one could confer a greater benefit on Japan than to bring the China incident to a close satisfactory to Tokyo. Japan herself has contrived to close one of the three routes (that by way of French Indochina) which China can still hope to get supplies; the second, the famous Burma Road, is now closed by the rainy season and by a temporary British-Japanese agreement; the third is the road from Soviet Russia. If that can be closed, too, China will be in difficulties, indeed. Only the prompt reopening of the Burma Road can save her.

HOPE TO EMBROIL UNITED STATES

As for the benefits to be gained by Germany and Italy, these are probably, first, a mighty fanfare of trumpets to attract world attention away from the German failure to reduce Great Britain, a failure which is beginning to loom as an accomplished fact; second, as American help to British grows and as the prospects of a long war increase a hope of embroiling the United States in the Orient and thus diverting American attention and munitions to a theater in which neither Germany nor Italy has any real or vital interests. Whatever damage and loss Japan may cause the British Empire and the United States in the Far East is that much net gain to Germany. Moreover, if Britain gets into trouble with Japan, this may prevent or hamper reinforcement of the British position in the Middle East, which may, if the invasion of Britain is given up, become for the moment the main theater of war.

The pact is, in fact, as is openly avowed in the nations concerned, aimed more or less directly at the United States, and (though this is soft pedaled) at the Soviet Union. It is doubtless conceived that the announcement of the pact will produce great division of opinion in the United States as to what ought to be done; that our people, never very attentive to undeclared and obscure foreign situations, will now begin to sit up and take notice, and that we shall have here a Tuscan army in which those behind cry "forward" while those before cry "back."

Some will say that we must now conserve all our munitions for ourselves against the inevitable war with Japan; others will be for keeping out of all foreign entanglements; and so on. It is shrewdly chosen in the matter of time, only a few weeks before a national election, when policy is likely to become a political football, if not between the principals in the contest—for Mr. Willkie has shown a praiseworthy tendency to avoid embarrassing the President in the conduct of current foreign policy—then between their various supporters.

DILEMMA APPEARS UGLY

Indeed, the situation thus created does seem, at first sight, to present this country with an ugly dilemma. If we do nothing in the Far East, the Japanese advance will continue, China's contacts with the outer world may be cut, Japan may possess herself of the whole of Indochina and the Netherland East Indies, as well as reducing China to submission and establishing herself as overlord of all east Asia. If we act to prevent Japan from doing all this, we may find ourselves entangled in far eastern complications at a moment when all our efforts may be needed in the Atlantic, where our interests are much more important, to save Great Britain.

Similarly, if Britain stands fast at Singapore, but does nothing to help China, or to protect the Dutch Indies, she may find the Japanese in Siam, on the frontiers of Burma and Malaya, find Singapore surrounded and cut off, Australia menaced; while if she does take strong steps—as strong as possible—to prevent these things, she may find herself unable to preserve her vital positions around the Suez Canal, which depend so largely for reinforcements on the resources of the British possessions around the shores of the Indian Ocean.

But as the clever Herr von Ribbentrop enjoys a hearty chuckle at the dilemma which he has presented to the English-speaking nations, he might continue a little further the rather short-sighted line of reasoning which has led him to these conclusions. For what the United States might not do alone, what Great Britain might not do alone, they can do together; and very far from having driven them farther apart, as the Axis leaders probably hoped, the announcement of the new pact has made much closer Anglo-American cooperation not only imperative but inevitable.

Take the military situation in Great Britain first of all, as the key piece on which all else, at least for the moment, depends: The basic fact here is that the Germans have completely and signally failed to overcome or even to diminish the fighting power, offensive and defensive, of the Royal Air Force, and that having failed to do so, and being utterly inferior in naval power, for them to attempt an invasion would be simply suicidal. This means that while these conditions endure, as they seem likely to endure, Great Britain will still be able to maintain the blockade of the German outlets to the sea and of the German-held portions of the continent. The British Home Fleet will still have a base and remain in being.

It is true that our assistance will contribute to the endurance of this state of affairs, but that assistance does not seem likely, for the coming winter, to be needed other than in the form of additional airplanes, certain munitions and supplies, and probably above all else in cooperation in the training of pilots and other flying personnel—this is, on the basis of late information, the greatest British need for the immediate future. It is hardly necessary to say that we should make available, and increase as may be requisite, facilities in Texas and other good-weather localities for this purpose.

In the Far East one member of the new triumvirate which is cut off from any possible contact with the others save by the tortuous route of the Trans-Siberian Railway. This nation, Japan is now engaged in a war on the continent of Asia which has already lasted 4 years and seems likely to go on still longer if the Chinese can be aided by arms and credits. The economic and financial structure of Japan is dependent almost entirely on its foreign trade. There is nothing at all that Germany and Italy can do to help Japan if Japan is suddenly confronted with a serious crisis. On the other hand, if Japan is allowed to wax and grow fat at others' expense, while China goes down, Japan will always be a menace and a check on us and on the British, for the short-sighted Herr von Ribbentrop has been unable to perceive that the Britain he is fighting is not "little England," but a world-wide empire.

HOW COOPERATION COULD WORK

Let us take a hypothetical case of Anglo-American cooperation in the Far East and observe what the two powers can do together, though neither could do it singly:

1. An absolute embargo on all trade with Japan is simultaneously pronounced by the United States and the nations of the British Commonwealth. This cuts off practically the whole of Japan's trade outside the "yen bloc"; that is, the whole of her foreign exchange; it stops almost all her imports of materials useful for the prosecution of war; it confronts her great business houses with imminent ruin; it sets a definite time limit on any military operations she may conduct, within which she must achieve overwhelming victory or acknowledge defeat.

2. The Burma Road is reopened by Great Britain, and British divisions in Burma are moved to the Siamese frontier. Australian troops are dispatched to Burma and Malaya. At the same time British and American economic pressure develops against Siam—and the British Empire takes five-sixths of Siam's exports, while the United States takes two-thirds of the remainder. Observe that this, like the first proposition, cannot be done by either country alone—Siam might fear the Japanese on the east more than the British on the west, did not the United States embargo on Japan give Bangkok pause.

3. Energetic steps are taken by both countries to aid China in every possible way—credits, supplies, support of the Chinese dollar, and such other means as may be devised—and can, with hearty good will.

UNITED STATES WARSHIPS TO FAR EAST

4. The United States dispatches to the Far East, perhaps to the vicinity of Port Darwin, or even to Singapore, certain reinforcements which will make certain that the Japanese dare not attempt an assault on the Dutch East Indies, or British Malaya, save by supporting the effort with their main battle fleet. These reinforcements might consist of such elements as cruisers, submarines, and patrol aircraft in such numbers as might be considered adequate.

5. Britain and the United States proclaim as their joint policy a defensive protectorate over the Netherland East Indies, and military and naval consultations are undertaken with the local Dutch authorities looking to the security of the islands.

6. The Australian Government undertakes the expansion and reinforcement of the base at Port Darwin, the increase of the defenses of Thursday Island and the improvement of interior communications with Darwin and other north coast points.

7. Steps are taken to establish seaplane and other naval facilities in the Solomon and Gilbert Islands and at other points protecting the north flank of the American-Australian line of communications.

It is contended that by this series of steps the Japanese are confronted with an insoluble problem, strategic and economic, from which they can escape in only one of two ways: By establishing a moderate government which will completely readjust the whole far eastern scene on reasonable conditions, including the Chinese problem, or by coming forth to wage war under conditions assuring their defeat.

It is further contended that this course of action is by far the best insurance against war in the Far East at all—the alternative, recession and appeasement, has been proven over and over again to have the opposite result—and insures that if war must be fought there, it will be a short and victorious war for the English-speaking peoples and perhaps the turning point from which other victories will flow.

It will be noted that as far as the United States is concerned, we are mainly involved with our fleet and naval aviation, and we need not curtail our aid to Britain in the meanwhile even if we do become a belligerent against Japan. The local resources of India, Burma, Malaya, and, above all, of Australia and New Zealand, are very great and will help us enormously. The one great risk is that Britain may go down while we are fighting Japan; but that risk is growing less, and in any case, if Britain does fall, our Atlantic danger will not be immediate.

There is indeed risk in anything we may do; there is a risk in sitting still and waiting on events. It is submitted that time is of the essence in modern war, that having learned this lesson we should use it to our advantage; that we have waited and delayed too long, and that the world should be shown that free peoples can act with the force and dynamism which has hitherto been the sole property of the totalitarian conquerors. It is probable that we have before us a winter of war in which Germany will grow weaker. Italy may falter, while China still fights on, while Japan has had no chance of recovery—and should be afforded none. One of our declared enemies is alone, and already weakened; it is we who are the fools if we allow him to grow strong and threatening again.

Also a letter appearing in the New York Times written by Livingston Hartley, dated September 11, 1940, suggesting additional bases in the Pacific:

ADDITIONAL BASES SUGGESTED—PACIFIC AND SOUTH ATLANTIC STATIONS HELD NECESSARY FOR HEMISPHERE DEFENSE

To the EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES:

In my letter you published on August 9 it was suggested that 50 of our over-age destroyers be released to Britain in exchange for bases at Trinidad, Jamaica, and Antigua. Under the agreement of September 3 five additional bases, among them positions so important strategically as Newfoundland and Bermuda, have been leased in exchange for the destroyers. So comprehensive an advance of our defensive frontier from our eastern seaboard constitutes an unprecedented increase in our North Atlantic security.

We have, however, other oceanic frontiers around this hemisphere which we must now prepare to defend. We have a South Atlantic frontier, nearer to Africa than to the Caribbean, which would be highly vulnerable to attack from West Africa if Germany won in Europe. And since we now share control of the Pacific Ocean with the Japanese Navy, we have a vital interest in improving our strategic position there.

It appears a propitious moment now to follow up this step we have taken in the North Atlantic and obtain additional bases in these other oceans. The war in Europe, the financial strain it has caused our sister republics to the south, and the widespread public approval of what has already been done create an opportunity which, neglected now, may not recur.

In the Pacific it may be possible to lease additional naval and air bases from the British in exchange for war materials now and later. Such bases in the Fiji and Solomon Islands would alter the whole Pacific balance to our advantage. Developed as an extension of the line from Hawaii to Samoa, they would provide us with a southern route westward to the Philippines, the East Indies, Australia, and Singapore which the existing bases of the Japanese Navy would not block.

On our own side of the Pacific we could add greatly to the safety of the Panama Canal by acquiring bases in the Galapagos and Cocos Islands from Ecuador and Costa Rica. Here we might lease the bases outright instead of in exchange for military or naval equipment.

Finally, we must recognize that successful hemisphere defense would require a fleet base on the bulge of Brazil at Rio de Janeiro or Bahia. If Germany should win the war in Europe, the need for such a base would become acute overnight. Here again we would be able to pay for the base in dollars, and so contribute to the prosperity and stability of Brazil.

Facing the present world situation it is not wise to dally in preparing to face any storms the next 12 months may bring. Common sense suggests that we should at once seek to expand the process begun with the destroyers into a comprehensive naval- and air-base program which will improve our prospects of maintaining peace in the Pacific and of keeping war away from the Americas on our Atlantic front.

LIVINGSTON HARTLEY.

VIEWS OF WINSTON CHURCHILL

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, when my good friend from Utah quoted Winston Churchill, I wish he had quoted some remarks of Churchill which I shall detain the Senate but a few moments to give to them.

We have recently seen a move to put a halo around the head of Winston Churchill as a great friend of America. I have compiled out of his writings and interviews comments about his viewpoint in regard to the United States of America which I feel the people should have. I just happened to have a few of them with me today. Here is one:

CHURCHILL BLAMES UNITED STATES AS CAUSE OF DICTATORSHIP

America's entrance into the war was disastrous not only for your country but for the Allies as well, because had you stayed at home and minded your own business we would have made peace with the Central Powers in the spring of 1917, and then there would have been no collapse in Russia, followed by communism; no breakdown in Italy, followed by fascism; and nazi-ism would not at present be enthroned in Germany. If America had stayed out of the war and minded her own business, none of these "isms" would today be sweeping the Continent of Europe and breaking down parliamentary government.

They want us again to go to their aid and get the same thanks again by Winston Churchill; and if they get into another war in the next 5 years he will come back and love us once again until we finance it but afterward we will be known as Uncle Shylock.

Now let me read what Winston Churchill said in his book on page 110 of The World Crisis. The quotation just given was made in August 1936. From his book, The World Crisis, page 110, I note:

Even in this month of extreme American effort, nearly four British, French, and Italian soldiers were falling every day to one American. The stake of the United States in the European scene was incomparably small.

CHURCHILL SAYS THAT UNITED STATES PLAYED SMALL PART

He does not say that today. He says, "Oh, come on over and help us out once again. You are a great savior," but afterward we would be told our part "was incomparably small."

In the same book, on page 450, I find this quotation:

In the peace conference—to European eyes—President Wilson sought to play a part out of all proportion to any stake which his country had contributed or intended to contribute to European affairs.

Churchill loved us; did he not?

Now, let us look at his book The Great War, on page 1365. Here is what he said:

The United States, which had lost but 125,000 lives in the whole struggle, was to settle down upon the basis of receiving through one channel or another four-fifths of the reparations paid by Germany to the countries she had devastated or whose manhood she had slain.

Wonder if the mothers of the 125,000 boys who gave their lives felt that the sacrifice was insignificant? If we follow Churchill's advice today, the 125,000 will be small in comparison with the number who will be slaughtered in another European war.

CHURCHILL CRITICIZES UNITED STATES FOR NOT ENTERING WAR EARLIER

In the same book, on page 1367, Mr. Churchill again paid his respects to the United States with these words:

If the United States had entered the war after the sinking of the Lusitania, they could have judged for themselves how far it was right to go to prevent Rumania being drawn into the orbit of the Central Powers. If even 2 years after the outbreak of war they had joined the Allies, they could have regulated at their pleasure any arrangements made with Japan about Shantung and China generally.

That is Churchill. What will he think of our advice after the war? The same as he did after the last one. This is what Mr. Churchill said about us in the last war, on page 1367 of his book The Great War:

One has a right to stand on the bank; but if one has exercised the right for a prolonged and agonizing period without even throwing a rope to a man struggling in the rapids, some allowance should be made for the swimmer, who now clutches at this rock and now at that in rough or ungainly fashion. It is not open to the cool bystander, who afterward becomes the loyal and ardent comrade and brave rescuer, to set himself up as an impartial judge of events which never would have occurred had he outstretched a helping hand in time.

Those are the words of Winston Churchill about the activity of America in the last war, which caused 100,000 American boys to lose their lives, saying that if we had stayed out Europe would have been in better shape; but now they are inviting us to come over once again. Around the head of Winston Churchill some are trying to put a halo. I ask: "Mr. Churchill, what did you think of us when you did not need us? Will you blame the bad world conditions on us again? Will you pass off as small the sacrifice of our boys on the battlefield? Will you ridicule the attempts to help you as a country that tried to set itself up as the judge of events thereafter? Mr. Churchill, you need us now. Does that make the difference? I agree with your expressed view that we should mind our own business."

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. STEWART. I move that the Senate do now take a recess.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate, pursuant to its previous order, took a recess until Monday, December 16, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCCORMACK.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We praise Thee, our Heavenly Father, for the eternal precepts enunciated by our Saviour and exemplified in His incomparable life and character. We draw near to Thee in prayer that we may feel His presence and be assured in our quest for a life of devotion to our holy faith, that humanity's hopes may be realized in the timeless Christ. O Blessed One, come to all oppressed hearts with their unfinished tasks, unsolved problems, and with their broken hopes. Give the Congress Thy benediction of grace and show us how to bring together, for the common good of all, the great currents of human life flowing side by side. We pray that our country may be wiser and all homes happier for our passing this way. Heaven's blessings upon all Good Samaritans the wide world over, who are binding up wounds, bringing strength to the strengthless and God to the godless. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, December 9, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Baldridge, one of its clerks, announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. TOBEY members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, as amended by the act of March 2, 1895, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of executive papers in the following departments and agencies:

1. Department of Agriculture.
2. Department of Justice.
3. Department of Labor.
4. Department of the Navy.
5. Post Office Department.
6. Department of the Treasury.
7. Federal Security Agency, Social Security Board.
8. Federal Works Agency, Work Projects Administration.
9. Library of Congress.
10. National Recovery Administration.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include with my remarks a speech of Mr. William Green at a convention of the American Federation of Labor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a short article from the Washington Star; and I also ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the previous special orders for today that I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Mr. Speaker, before very long there will fall upon this House the responsibility of determining whether or not the Dies committee is to be continued for the coming year. It is my opinion that the great majority of the Members strongly approve of the objectives and the general activities carried on by this group over the past 12 months.

One of the first acts of mine upon coming to Congress was to vote for the appropriation to carry the Dies committee along for 1940. At this time I want to reiterate my faith in that committee and to announce that I will strongly support the perpetuation of its work for next year.

I take this position because I have had a clear mandate from the people in my district that they desired the investigation of un-American activities to go on. At a time when there is being precipitated on the American people all kinds of Nazi and Communist propaganda, and when the general public is being subjected to the most subversive attacks, my people back home are anxious to see patriotic endeavors of this kind pushed.

I have never for one moment doubted the sincerity of the Dies committee. It is to my deep regret, therefore, that I observe an apparent coldness toward its work on the part of the executive department and among certain officials in the Department of Justice. Naturally I am in no position to read between the lines and discern an ulterior motive for this attitude. But I feel that it is bad judgment on the part of the executive department to even intimate to the people that there is a rift between parallel agencies of our executive and legislative branches in the method of performing their primary and patriotic duty to the American people—namely, that of eliminating un-American and subversive activities from our midst. Let me assure Chairman DIES and his committee, therefore, that I am in hearty accord with what they are trying to do and will stand unequivocally for the continuation of their patriotic work as long as they proceed as they are now doing. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a news release from the Bureau of Reclamation on the anti-speculation law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting a radio address in answer to the Dies investigation of un-American activities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes following the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and the previous special orders for today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an address by Frederic C. Walcott, president of the American Wildlife Institute, on the subject of pollution and other conservation problems.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from Fred Ater, of Rudyard, Mont.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

THE LATE N. B. DIAL

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, I have requested this time for the purpose of announcing to the House the death on last evening of a very distinguished South Carolinian. I refer to ex-Senator N. B. Dial, of Laurens, S. C.

Senator Dial was elected to the United States Senate in 1918, serving one term.

It was my happy privilege to serve in the House during the last half of his term, where I had the pleasure of working with him in the interest of South Carolina and our country as a whole.

Senator Dial was an outstanding businessman. He was practical and a very successful businessman and representative of his people.

He was a stanch friend of mine and, because of the type of life he lived, and just what his life work has meant to the people of the State and the Nation, not only shall I miss him but his death will be a great loss to South Carolina and to the Nation.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that our colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] may be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD in connection with the Army and the national-defense program, and to include as a part of his remarks an article appearing in a newspaper in his district.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein an address by R. H. Evans, delivered in Baltimore, on financing the farm program.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and other special orders of the day, if any, I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes on next Monday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS IN TRAINING CAMPS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a letter from The Adjutant General.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I presume Members of the House have, as I have, received a great many letters from constituents concerning the possible sale of intoxicating liquors in training camps and at Army posts. I thought it advisable to obtain an official answer from the War Department on this important matter, and I desire to present herewith a reply from The Adjutant General presenting the law and the view of the War Department concerning that very important subject. The position of the War Department concerning compulsory vaccination and inoculation is also presented.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DECEMBER 6, 1940.

Hon. CARL HINSHAW,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. HINSHAW: I have your letter of December 3, 1940, with which you enclosed the attached communications from Mrs. ——— ———, Altadena, Calif., and Mr. ——— ———, Glendale, Calif., relative to the vaccination and inoculation of men called for military service and the sale of intoxicating liquors at or near Army training camps or to men in uniform.

With respect to the question of vaccination and inoculation, the principles of preventive medicine and treatment in vogue in the Army are those taught in the leading medical schools of the country and accepted by the American Medical Association. It is considered essential for the health of the Army and the success of the military operations that exceptions to established practice should not be made.

The provision of law which authorizes the President to make regulations governing the prohibition of alcoholic liquors on or near military camps and made it unlawful to sell intoxicating liquors to members of the military forces in uniform was contained in section 12, act of May 18, 1917. This provision was repealed by section 203 of the act of August 27, 1935, Public, No. 347, Seventy-fourth Congress.

Federal statutes now in effect relating to alcoholic liquors as affecting military reservations and personnel are as follows:

Act of February 2, 1901 (31 Stat. 748, U. S. C. 10; 1350), which prohibits the sale of or dealing in intoxicating liquors upon any premises used for military purpose by the United States.

Section 289 of the Criminal Code of the United States, as amended by joint resolution of June 20, 1935, which in effect makes it illegal to do or to fail to do on a military reservation any act or thing which, though not made penal by any law of Congress, is made penal by the State law in which the reservation is located.

Act of March 22, 1933, which provided that nothing in the National Prohibition Act shall apply to beer, etc., containing one-half of 1 percent or more of alcohol by volume, and not more than 3.2 percent of alcohol by weight. This provision is deemed to have declared in effect that such beverage is nonintoxicating.

War Department regulations and instructions have for many years prohibited the sale of or dealing in intoxicating liquors on any premises used for military purposes. Beverage containing one-half of 1 percent or more of alcohol by volume, and not more than 3.2 percent of alcohol by weight, is not deemed intoxicating, and the sale of such beverage is authorized by post exchanges located on military reservations in any State or Territory whose laws permit such sale within its borders. The sale of such beverage is prohibited on reservations located within any State or Territory whose laws do not permit such sale within its borders.

It is believed unwise to deny a soldier, during his few hours of leisure time, the privileges which are enjoyed by other citizens. Experience has proven that permitting the sale of beverages as indicated above has accomplished excellent results. It has encouraged military personnel to remain on the reservation (their home) and enjoy refreshments under conditions far better than exist and are available to them off the reservation.

It would be harmful to the men in the service to direct a prohibition against them that did not apply to other citizens. To do so would inevitably lead to intemperance. As the matter now stands, members of the Army not on military reservations are subject to the same laws, both Federal and State, that govern the conduct of other citizens. They are also subject to the ever-present restriction that they must at no time do anything that will reflect discredit upon the service.

In recent years considerable success has been attained in the matter of control of the use of intoxicating liquors by military personnel through the wholehearted cooperation of responsible citizens in the vicinity of military activities. This is not only true in the vicinity of permanent posts and stations but in the vicinity of maneuver areas and other points of concentration as well. This manner of control has been found to be far more effective than strict prohibition, which furnishes a fertile field for bootleg operations.

Very respectfully,

E. S. ADAMS,
Major General, The Adjutant General.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes after the disposition of the special orders heretofore made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after other special orders, if any, I may be permitted to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, Mr. REED of New York was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to insert therein an address which I propose to make tonight over the Mutual Broadcasting System entitled "A New World Order."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I have two unanimous-consent requests. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Appendix of the RECORD an article entitled "Danger of War With Japan" and another entitled "World War Service Given Credit in Computing Railroad Retirement Benefits."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may address the House for 5 minutes after the conclusion of today's business and any other special orders.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

DILATORY TACTICS AND INACTION ON THE PART OF CONGRESS

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to offer my criticism as to the manner in which Congress has been conducting its affairs since it returned after election. The House, by a substantial majority, decided to remain in session. That was a wise decision. But even at that it appears that those in charge of the management of the House determined they would meet just from time to time, and adjourn just as quickly as they could, without taking any action on pending legislation. Mr. Speaker, there are bills on the calendar that are at least entitled to our consideration. Resolutions have been introduced since we came here 4 weeks ago and yet no consideration is being given to them. Committees do not even meet to talk them over. We have passed two or three measures and no more.

Mr. Speaker, I introduced a resolution about 3 weeks ago asking for a joint committee from the Senate and House to provide Congress with information about our defense program with a view of helping those responsible for carrying out this program. That resolution was referred to a committee and that is all.

What I want to say is this, Mr. Speaker, that while we are in session the least we could do is to give consideration to bills pending before the House, to which I have directed your attention. Not a hand has been turned to work on this program. Perhaps they should be supported, and possibly not, but we should vote on them.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, a great deal of publicity is being given to the fact that more revenues are going to be required to carry on the ever-growing obligations being charged against the Federal Treasury. The Members of this House know that, and yet our powerful Ways and Means Committee, that has the responsibility of providing for the raising of such revenues, has not held a single meeting in the last month. That committee should have been holding hearings and giving consideration to the most important question of providing revenues so we would have that information at the beginning of the next session.

It is extremely unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, that with all this pending legislation and in view of the complex problems that are facing this Congress and the people that we have not given the attention we should to the matters pending before us. This is no time for dilly-dallying. This is a time when Congress as well as the other departments of the Government should be giving their undivided attention to the ever-mounting and perplexing problems that are before us.

HITLER'S BRANCH OFFICES IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, on last Monday my colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] called the attention of the House to an article that appeared recently in the Reader's Digest entitled "Hitler's Branch Offices in the United States." I read that article some time ago and addressed a letter to the Secretary of State with reference to it, expressing concern. This morning I received a reply from the Secretary of State and a copy of a treaty between the United States and Germany entitled "A Treaty of Friendship, Commerce, and Consular Rights." The title of that treaty is open to some discussion, I should say, among Members of the House, and I am sure they will be interested in the reply of the Secretary of State. I shall ask permission to include it with my remarks.

"Diplomatic immunity" or "consular rights" may be a necessary part of any treaty between the United States and a friendly nation.

If, however, "consular rights" means freedom of action for saboteurs and spies within our borders, it seems to me it is time we changed the law. [Applause.]

DECEMBER 10, 1940.

The Honorable JOHN Z. ANDERSON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. ANDERSON: I acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 28, 1940, in which you call this Department's attention to a recent magazine article dealing with German representation in this country.

With respect to the questions treated therein, I feel you might wish to have the following information: The relations between the United States and most countries are generally established by treaty, and in the case of Germany and the United States the pertinent treaty is the Treaty of Friendship, Commerce and Consular Rights, signed at Washington, December 8, 1923, a copy of which is enclosed. This treaty still remains in effect with the exception of certain paragraphs of article VII, which were abrogated by a special agreement signed at Washington on June 3, 1935, a statement concerning which is enclosed with a copy of the treaty.

This treaty determines the status of German consular representatives in this country, and upon a reciprocal basis, of our consular representatives in Germany. I may observe that the privileges which are accorded the respective consular officers in articles XVII, XVIII, XIX, and XX of the treaty, and which were so accorded them for the appropriate exercise of their official functions, conform with general international practice, and do not constitute diplomatic immunity. I may also mention that treaties of a similar nature were subsequent to 1923 negotiated with several other governments.

The Department publishes each month, in the form of a diplomatic list, the names of all those diplomatic officers accredited to this Government, together with their immediate families. The regulations of the Department of State also require a record of the names of the members of the households of these diplomatic officers. The Department of State, furthermore, keeps a record of all foreign consular officers serving in the United States and United States territory; and a record is likewise maintained of all employees, both foreign and American, of foreign diplomatic and consular establishments. These lists are open to inspection by any Member of Congress.

Apart from the groups mentioned above, a record is kept of another category of persons who are associated with foreign agencies. This includes those persons, both foreign and American, who are required to register with the Department of State under the terms of the act of June 8, 1938, as amended August 7, 1939, to require the registration of certain persons employed by agencies to disseminate propaganda in the United States, and for other purposes. This list is open to inspection by the general public.

It may be mentioned that although there has been an increase in the staffs of the German consulates in the United States, these have not been out of proportion to increases in the staffs of other foreign government establishments in this country. In view of press assertions made with specific regard to the German Consulate General at New York, I might mention that the records of the Department indicate that as of October 1, 1939, there were 9 officers and 40 employees in that consulate, and that as of October 1, 1940, there were 8 officers and 40 employees.

This Department has not been unmindful of its responsibility to be informed of the activities of foreign consular representatives in this country, and of determining whether such activities conform with their official status and duties in the United States. In this connection I enclose for your information the Department's statement to the press dated July 5, 1940, regarding the German consul general in New Orleans.

I have endeavored herein to give you all possible information from the Department of State and other authorized sources, in the light of which you may be able to appraise any assertions alleging that the competent agencies of this Government are not closely following such activities within the United States as may be inimical to American interests.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks and to include therein my reply from the Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein excerpts from a speech delivered by Mr. John W. Scott, of the Federal Power Commission.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, since making the announcement I did a moment ago a number of Members have asked whether I intended to have reprints made of this letter from The Adjutant General. I do. If there are any Members who desire copies, communicate with my office and we will supply you.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a statement by Dr. Paul Taylor, of the University of California, on the migrant problem.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I am just as glad to see the Members as they seem to be to see me. [Applause.] But if we spend our time during the next 2 weeks as we did in the last 2, we might as well all go hunting or fishing in a cruiser. [Laughter.]

I rose at this time to comment on the statement made by the gentleman from New York, the Honorable EDWIN HALL, in reference to subversive activities in this country, and to mention the work of the Dies committee. I realize it is going to cost money to continue the Dies committee, but I say that such money will be well spent and cheap insurance measured against the protection it will afford the billions of dollars we are allotting to build battleships and armaments for 2,000,000 men, for the one thing spies and saboteurs cannot stand is his exposure to the light of public opinion. The Dies committee is ferreting out these subversive agents who are trying to undermine this country. More power to them. The committee is working with the help of the Government itself, the police, the F. B. I., the people, but somehow the same Government agencies have not been able to do what we want done in rounding them up. It takes an organization of the Congress to point these things out to the people of the country, and we have enough red-blooded, two-fisted Americans, who will see that they are locked up if we just point them out to them; good, sound Americans, too.

With the help, the aid, and the assistance of the good people of the country and the law-enforcement branches of the Government, we shall be able to put these fellows who are against our country behind bars, where they belong, or else put them up in front of a firing squad. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein an editorial from the Minneapolis Times Tribune.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MILLER] may be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

UNION MEN, NONUNION MEN, AS WELL AS MIGRANTS, SHOULD BE PROTECTED FROM RACKETEERING

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to learn that, at the suggestion of the First Lady of the Land, an investigation was made as to whether an unfortunate migrant, the head of a family, was denied here in Washington the opportunity to earn a livelihood because he could not comply with the demand of a union for the payment of a fee of $300.

The investigation showed that while the union fee was $300, the migrant was given the privilege of making a down payment of $50 and having the balance deducted from his wages by the union.

As a matter of principle, it is immaterial whether the fee was $300 or 3 cents, the point is that no one has authority in this land to levy a fee for the privilege of working. Again, it made no difference to the migrant whether the fee was 3 cents or $300, as long as he did not have it, he could not pay it.

It would be more satisfactory if the House would appoint a committee to determine whether not only migrants but union men and nonunion men were denied the privilege of working on the defense program because they did not have the cash to lay on the dotted line of a union's permit to work or dues card.

For several weeks the House has had before it ample evidence to show that our defense was being rendered more costly, was being delayed, American workingmen forced to pay tribute unjustly. The same facts have appeared in the public press.

The House, though it has been in session, has not seen fit to learn the actual conditions. Beyond question, although not only the occupants of the White House and Members of Congress have been fully advised of the un-American activities which were delaying our aid to England, slowing down our own defense work, no action was taken until the First Lady, appearing before the House committee studying migration problems, listened to the story of Mrs. Thomas, who charged that her husband, an electrician and a migrant, could not obtain employment at Fort Belvoir because he could not meet the union demand. Asked about this situation, the First Lady, put on the spot, suggested, in substance, that it would be well for the committee to call those who knew about the situation and learn the facts.

It is a strange commentary upon our vaunted democracy that although the injustice that was being done our workers and our needy was known to our executive officers, to the Congress, no action was taken until in a public hearing the situation was brought before an occupant of the White House.

Here in Washington, where are housed the Department of Justice, the executive department, and where Congress is in session, it has been a matter of common knowledge that hundreds of men have been just as effectively held up and their money taken from them by the practice of denying employment to those who are not members of a union, on Government jobs, as would have been done had they been robbed on the street at the point of a gun.

Yet no department of the Government, although the situation has been called to the attention of all, has had the courage or the disposition to take the initiative and end the practice or even to inquire into it until a member of the Chief Executive family had the situation bluntly put before her in such a manner that longer delay could not be tolerated.

Back in the early days of the automobile, cars lacked a self-starter; each had to be cranked before the motor would turn over.

It is regrettable that Congress will only move to ascertain the truth or the untruth of such charges as have been made on the floor of the House from time to time when spurred into action by a suggestion from the Executive Mansion.

The story to which the First Lady listened was not a new one. It was not a novel one. It was one which had been told on the House floor and in the press many times. Not as to migrants but as it affected members of unions, workingmen who were not members of a union, men who were on relief, men who would be thrown on relief if they were not permitted to work. More than one illustration of a similar situation was related by me on the floor of the House. Letters disclosing an unjust and deplorable a condition as that told by the wife of the migrant were placed in the RECORD.

Let me give you a few instances which show that the migrant, Mr. Thomas, is in no worse situation than are thousands of others. The complaints here laid before you were made to me either in person, by letter, or by phone call.

A Purcellville, Va., citizen, married, with two children who enlisted and served in the Navy from 1913 to 1920, then served in the Coast Guard, obtained work at Fort Belvoir only after going to the office of the carpenters union at Tenth and K Streets NW. and paying $27.10 for a permit to work. He agreed to pay $25 more in 30 days and $2.10 monthly. The wage rate was $13 a day. By working on a Saturday he made $29, as the pay for holidays is double-time pay.

A Washington City plumber and steamfitter joined the Association of Journeymen Plumbers and Steamfitters of the United States and Canada when living at Pittsburgh in 1909. Upon coming to Washington 8 years ago, he brought with him his union clearance card and dues book showing dues fully paid as required by sections 166 and 170 of the constitution, bylaws, and rules of his own union. He applied to Washington Local No. 5, which is governed by the same constitution, bylaws, and rules that governed the Pittsburgh union.

Under the constitution and bylaws he was entitled to membership in local 5. In violation of its own constitution, bylaws, and rules of its own local, local 5 refused to accept his application because, as its officers told him, its members here were without jobs. So he was barred from working on a union job. Being unable to work as a union plumber or steamfitter he went to work in an open shop. Then the local union assessed a fine against him of $250—$24 back dues and a new initiation fee of $150. A total of $424.

For 28 years this man was a member of the union, paid all dues, never had a fine assessed against him, and has held every office connected with the organization, including that of president and business agent. He is now 54 years of age, in good health, and able to work.

He made this statement:

Fort Belvoir is a closed shop; the work at Bolling Field is an open shop. The union will not permit any to work at Fort Belvoir until he pays the fine and the back dues of $250, new initiation fee of $150, a total of $424, but at the same time it permits its own members to work side by side with nonunion men on the open shop at Bolling Field.

He says:

There are four in my family. I am out of a job and I would like to know why it is that I cannot go to work on the defense program.

A retired major of the Signal Corps, a man with a record of 25 years' service who came up through the ranks, who served 16 years in the Navy, when he applied for a job at Fort George G. Meade was granted a permit to work by Local 101 of the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners only on the condition that he agree to pay $23.50 out of his first week's wages and $8.50 weekly thereafter until $57.50 was paid.

Get the situation. It is true this man is not a migrant, but he wanted to work. He served in our Navy for 16 years. He had intelligence enough—he had ambition sufficient to come up from the status of an enlisted man to the rank of major—and yet when the country finds itself in danger of invasion and he desires again to serve it, he can do so only if he agrees to pay an unjustifiable tribute. Strange treatment for a democracy to mete out to one who served her in her time of need.

Another man belonged for 20 years to Local 58 of the Upholsterers and Draperies Hangers. He said he always paid his dues. He is married and has three sons. He was given a permit to work upon his promise to pay the union, and worked 56 hours in 7 days, but because his name did not appear on the pay roll did not receive his pay until the 18th of November, while his permit to work expired on November 9. He could not and did not pay his dues because he had not received his money. He was discharged. When he inquired was told that his job as foreman had been given to a friend of another worker.

Another union man, 40 years of age, married, with two children, came to Washington from Akron, Ohio, about 3 weeks ago. He had been a plumber since he was 16 years old; was a member of a union at Akron, Ohio, where he paid $55 in 1937 to Local 219.

He applied for work at Fort Belvoir on Saturday, December 7. Finally he saw the superintendent for Potts & Callahan Construction Co., who told him he would have to see the union. He saw the union steward who was on the job at Fort Belvoir and was sent to Local No. 5, located at 527 Ninth Street NW. There he was told by E. S. Ott that he would have to pay $12 before he could go to work.

He did not have the $12, so in his behalf I called a District welfare organization, and, finally, through the activities and whole-hearted cooperation of one of its officers, arrangements were made so that this plumber could go to work and with his family stay off the relief rolls. It was agreed that he might pay the union out of his wages, though whether the union waived payment on the dotted line, or whether some charitably inclined person or organization advanced it, I do not know.

Mr. DISNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. DISNEY. I understand on reliable authority that at Fort Sill a man cannot get a job unless he first puts up $50 with the union.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is true all over the United States.

Mr. DISNEY. I only know of conditions in my own State. Has the gentleman gone far enough to find out what is done with this money after it is paid into the union?

Mr. HOFFMAN. No. That was the purpose of the resolution I offered on September 24, which the majority party has not seen fit to take up and put through. That was one purpose of the resolution. I wanted to find out how much was collected, what they did with the money, and if there is any reason why an American citizen cannot exercise his constitutional right to work without paying. I wanted to get this information so that then we might enact legislation which would permit American citizens to work when they wanted to.

A Severn, Md., worker, relates his experience:

I see by the press reports that you are opposed to the shake-down rackets of the various unions on national defense projects.

I would like to call to your attention the fact that the carpenters union, Local No. 101, is using the same shake-down racket at Fort Meade, Maryland, that is being used at Fort Belvoir, Virginia, and other Army posts.

Under this hurry-up of construction at these various posts, good carpenters are at a premium, and they are hiring anything that calls himself a carpenter.

The union is charging these men $57.50 to join the local. They seem to have some sort of working agreement with the contractor to keep them on until their union dues have been paid, and then quite a few of them are laid off and a new bunch is put on.

I am a carpenter and have been working at * * * and other Army posts under temporary civil-service appointments for the past * * * years, and have a good record at all of them at which I have worked.

I am employed by contractor building barracks at * * * at present time. Have been there over 2 weeks. There was nothing said at the time of my employment by contractor or anyone else that I must join the union. Now I am told by union representative that I must join the union and pay $57.50 or lose my job.

This union representative is supposed to be a carpenter working on the job, but the Government is paying him $10 per day and $20 on Saturday and Sunday to work, but all he does is walk around with a book and pencil, trying to scare all of the workmen to pay this kick-back to the union.

To date, to my knowledge, this union representative has cost the Government, for salary alone, $220 since I have been employed here.

I understand there is a representative in each unit and there is about seven units here.

There is one thing that I would like to know. Is this union representative supposed to go around on a Government reservation and at the Government's expense trying to force men on a national-defense project to join the union and pay this kick-back, and can a man be discharged for not paying it?

I understand that there has been quite a few men laid off for this reason, though the books show them to be laid off for other reasons.

I am not opposed to unions if they are run right, but I am opposed to paying a Communist-controlled union for the privilege of working for my Government.

Here is a letter from another Washington carpenter, who could not get work because he did not have the union fee:

> The article I read tonight in the Washington Times-Herald is absolutely true. I tried to get a job last week at Fort Belvoir, Va., as a carpenter. But I was turned down because I couldn't pay the fee the union demanded. I have been out of work for a long time, but I do not want to go on relief if I can help it.
> Over at Fort Meade, Md., I was told last week there wasn't any more carpenters needed. But it is common knowledge that if you have the price you can get a job.
> How much longer are honest American workmen going to be idle because they haven't the price for a job? I and my family must live in one room because I haven't the money to pay the high rents here in Washington.
> Something should be done about getting the unemployed back to work before this, our native land, thinks about embarking upon another European war that will leave us all broke in the end.

As has been stated here on the floor of the House on prior occasions, the Government needs these men. They need the work. The union demands cash down for a permit to work. Now, get that—"permit to work." Where does the union get authority to say that a man shall not work until he has a permit from it?

Congress blanketed into the Federal service a few hundred thousand employees. Postmasters were given jobs for life. But here in Washington are men—family men; men in need; men who, unless they obtain employment, must go on the relief roll or be helped by private charity. These men are not shirkers. The Government needs their services, but they cannot get the Government jobs which are available. There is just one reason: An organization refuses to permit them to work.

Talk about the employer's blacklist, of which organized labor and the Senate Civil Liberties Committee complain so bitterly. Here is a labor organization which has a blacklist of its own. The theory is that you can get on that list if you have the price. Talk about special privilege. Talk about the privileged few. Talk about the economic royalists. Condemn them all as bitterly as you will, and where the criticism is just I will go with you.

Here is a labor organization using every practice which they have condemned when used by the employers and adding to the unfair labor practices of the employers the burden of the payment of a tribute which they have no right to exact, and which, all too often, their fellow laboring men cannot pay.

I ask the executive department, By virtue of what social legislation does one group of workingmen levy tribute upon another?

I ask the Attorney General and the Department of Justice, Where in the Code of the United States, where in the Statutes of the United States, is there authority which permits John Doe, standing at the gate of a factory, to compel Richard Roe to pay a fee before he can enter to work on the job which is awaiting him?

I ask the Work Projects Administration—charged, as it is, with finding jobs for the unfortunate, those who lack food, clothing, and shelter—Why do you submit to the actions of those who deny an opportunity to work to men who, if they cannot work, must, with their families, be supported by your organization?

I go back, and I say to the Department of Justice, which justifies this extortion, Why is it, charged with the execution of the law, with the prosecution of those who violate it, you take no action?

I turn to the Department of Labor, call its attention to the National Labor Relations Act, which provides that every man may bargain through representatives of his own choosing, and I ask the Secretary of Labor, Why is it that, before men can work, they must meet the demands of those who were never chosen by the workers as their bargaining agents?

Again, I ask the Department of Labor, Have you joined forces to compel all workers in America, if they would support themselves by their toil, to join a union, to pay the fees exacted by that union? Or is the right to work here in America still one to be exercised without cost?

I ask the President of the United States, who would have us preserve the democracies of the world, Why is it that, here in Washington and throughout our land, the God-given right to work, the right to work guaranteed by our Constitution, is denied to American citizens? Why is it that American citizens are denied the right to work in defense of their Government, while they are conscripted to fight for it?

Do you speculate as to why, on occasion, men are denied membership in a union even though they are willing and able to pay? The answer is plain. If the number of carpenters or plumbers or steam fitters at work at Fort Belvoir and these other jobs can by hook or crook be limited to members of the unions, then the union members limited in number, those union members are in the class of the privileged few, who get not only a job at a good wage but time and a half for overtime, and for Saturday and Sunday double time. Do you get the point? If you do not, those who are running the unions' business, those who are skimming the cream from Government defense projects, see it and get it.

Another phase of the situation came to notice this past week. A letter came in which stated that two men employed by the District had taken leave, presumably the 30 days and 15 days leave granted Government employees—one without pay, the other with pay—and were working at Fort George G. Meade.

Billions of dollars have been appropriated for relief to create Government jobs for the unemployed. Government employees never miss a pay check. They never have a reduction in their salary. They are secure in their jobs. The Government grants them 45 days' sick and vacation leave. Some of them take that leave, though they are paid for their time, and go out and deprive a man who needs a job of the opportunity of working.

One of these District employees is married, has two sons. He does not own his own home. He stated that he had 52 days' accumulated leave to his credit and, as he wanted to earn money to purchase a home, he took his Government leave and sought employment at Fort George G. Meade, where he received $1.50 per hour. He joined the Baltimore union, and, so far, according to his statement, but 55 cents has been deducted from his 2 days' pay. Quite in contrast to the policy of the local union as testified by C. F. Preller, business agent of the Electrical Workers Union of Washington, who said that their union fee was $300, $50 of which must be paid in cash.

This District employee stated that another man, a painter by trade, employed by the District, took leave without pay and was now working as a carpenter operating a power saw on the job at Fort George G. Meade.

I am not giving the names of these men, for I have no desire to cause them any embarrassment, but in justice to other men who are out of work it does seem proper to call attention to section 58 of title 5 of the United States Code. That section reads as follows:

> Unless otherwise specifically authorized by law, no money appropriated by any act shall be available for payment to any person receiving more than one salary when the combined amount of said salaries exceeds the sum of $2,000 per annum. (May 10, 1916, ch. 117, sec. 6, 39 Stat. 120; Aug. 29, 1916, ch. 417, 39 Stat. 582.)

My information is—and it may not be accurate—that each of these men received $2,100 per year. The money to pay that salary is, in part at least, appropriated by Congress. So, too, is the money which they receive at Fort George G. Meade. It would seem advisable that we either repeal this law or that it be enforced, and that we learn through an investigation just how many Government employees, who are entitled to a 30-day and 15-day leave, are working on these Government jobs in competition with men who have no regular employment or who are on relief rolls.

Inasmuch as the Select Committee to Investigate the Interstate Migration of Destitute Citizens (H. Res. 63 and H. Res. 491) was appointed to inquire into the interstate migration of destitute citizens and matters affecting them and has no authority to inquire into matters affecting other citizens, it is apparent, in view of the information which has been given the House, that another committee of the House should be appointed, as was requested in House Resolution 612, introduced by me on September 24, to inquire into the activities of those who are delaying work upon our defense program, rendering that work more costly, a greater burden to the taxpayers, and exacting an unjustifiable tribute from American labor.

In support of such a resolution, either the one offered by me or one introduced by a member of the majority, your support is earnestly solicited. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the remarks I made may appear in the Appendix of the RECORD instead of the body of the RECORD, in order that the insertions may go along with it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] is recognized for 15 minutes.

LABOR AND THE DEFENSE PROGRAM

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the President of the United States has asked for unity in connection with our defense program. I feel that my record in connection with the defense program entitles me to ask for unity from the President of the United States, that he may force those in the departments and agencies of the Government to conduct themselves in such a manner that patriotic Americans can give unity to the defense program. For my own part, I have supported appropriations for defense in cash amounting to $8,500,000,000 and in contract authorizations amounting to $3,500,000,000, to be used during the fiscal year 1941.

What is our current situation? The barracks for which we provided the money and the camps in which the boys who are drafted and the guard boys who are taken under the resolution that we passed will be placed are not being constructed according to schedule because, they say, we are unable to get skilled help. The work in the factories is not going along as it should and as Americans are able to make it go in the construction of airplanes and munitions and ammunition because they are unable to get skilled help. Why is it they are unable to get skilled help?

You read the other day of the hearing before the Select Committee to Investigate the Interstate Migration of Destitute Citizens in which it was testified that an electrician was unable to secure employment becauses he was asked to pay $300 to join the union. You have heard of many other cases, to which the gentleman from Michigan has called attention, where people were unable to secure employment because they were required to pay exorbitant fees to join the union.

In connection with the construction of barracks all over this country carpenters have been required to pay as high as $75 and $85 to a union in order to be permitted to go to work for a few weeks. Masons and plumbers are required to pay several hundred dollars as an initiation fee. As I understand, it runs up as high as $400 and $500. A man who wants a job as a common laborer in the District of Columbia is required to pay $87 to join the union.

The other day in a camp just outside of Washington a man who had been out of work for a long time applied to the contractor for a job. He was told that he could go to work in the storeroom in charge of the tools. He moved in there, and in a few minutes he was told that the foreman's son had to have that job and that he could go to work as a laborer. He was told that he would receive $6 a day and would have 15 days of work.

He had been at work a couple of hours and dug a couple of holes in the ground, when the walking delegate came around and told him that if he was going to stay on the job he would have to pay $56 to join the union. He might receive 2 weeks' work, 5 days a week at $6 a day; he might receive $60 for his work, but he would have to pay $56 to join the union.

Up in my territory they were told that they would have to pay $75 to join the union and a couple of dollars a week dues to get jobs for 30 days, so that the fees they would have to pay to the walking delegate would be $83 out of a total they might receive of $160. Of course, they could not afford to pay it.

This entire labor program and this entire program we have been told is for the benefit of the workingman has been allowed to degenerate under the operations of the administration into a scheme to promote the welfare of the walking delegates. It is about time that the Secretary of Labor was instructed by the President that those regulations were intended for the benefit of the workingman and not for the benefit of the walking delegate. The entire scheme for privileges for the workingman is going to collapse unless it becomes a scheme for the benefit of the workingman and not of the walking delegate.

We cannot go on and have these things done which prevent our people from being employed, prevent skilled laborers from going to work, and keep them on relief at a time when the Government is anxious to procure workers. I do not know whether or not we have any sense of responsibility here in the Congress, but I think that it is time we take deliberate and progressive action toward putting an end to that situation.

Now, while I am at it, I want to call attention to another situation that I think is absolutely ridiculous. We have created by law an Advisory Commission to the Council for National Defense, and on that Advisory Commission, Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius and a good many others are employed. I make no criticism of Mr. Knudsen or Mr. Stettinius or the others in this connection, but all the power that has been given to them has been that they are to be an Advisory Commission to the Council for National Defense. Now, what is the Council for National Defense? The Council for National Defense is made up of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce. When we call men of the type of Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius into the Government of the United States, they ought to have a position of authority so they can do something and accomplish something for national defense. [Applause.] They are the men who ought to have the power to let contracts. They are the type of men who, because of their experience, are in a position to check whether or not the contracts are being performed in the interest of the Government.

Is it not time now that the set-up of the Government of the United States was put on a basis so that when we call into the Government service the ablest men in industry we give them a chance to do the job?

I am saying here that the most important thing we can do, and the most important thing that the President can do, to promote unity in the Government of the United States and amongst the people of the United States is to put the Government's house in order, so we can have honest-to-goodness defense and so we can get into shape to protect the United States of America from all enemies within and without. The President asked for unity. Let him show the way to unity. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarks made by my good friend and colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN A. HALL], and also by my good friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], I believe it is apropos to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial in the morning Post.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

THE DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, originally I intended to talk on some other subject, but I shall have to get to that a little later. Sitting in the chamber and listening to the eloquent speeches made by my colleagues the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], and by my good friend the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN A. HALL], in which they come to the defense of the Dies committee, giving their position on the committee's work and warning us that now they are going to give them another blank check for one or two million dollars, I want to ask the gentlemen or any other gentleman in this Chamber a question in all fairness and sincerity. I do not know how else I can clarify the problem before us. I am more than willing to support any legislation to rid this country of all the so-called "fifth columnists," Communists, or Fascists, whether foreign or domestic, but in two long years——

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I would prefer not to yield just now.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I wanted to call the gentleman's attention to a statement that I do not believe is accurate about these two Members.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If that is what the gentleman wants to call my attention to, I shall be glad to yield. They made the statement that they are going to support a Dies inquisition for another year or two.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The Dies committee—they did not say "inquisition" at all.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I will withdraw the word "inquisition."

Mr. HOFFMAN. How about the statement the gentleman just made that they said they would stand for a million or two million dollars of appropriations?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No; they did not use that term exactly. But since they are supporting the gentleman from Texas, Mr. DIES, and he has asked for a million or more appropriation, I assumed they would support him all along the line.

Mr. HOFFMAN. All right; let us keep the record straight.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I want to ask those gentlemen and any other gentlemen who are stanch supporters of the Dies investigating committee, including any member of the committee itself, after 2 years of investigation, how are you going to deal with a "fifth columnist"? I think if you had one right in your room you could do nothing with him. What laws have you on the statute books today whereby you could destroy a "fifth columnist"; and what is the definition of a "fifth columnist"? What must he do to be classed in this category? What overt act must he have committed to be defined as a "fifth columnist" within the statutory provisions of our laws?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. In just a minute I will yield for a question.

Is there any law on the books today that defines a "fifth columnist" and states what overt acts he must have committed in order to be arrested and convicted and destroyed? Refer me to one statute.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; for that purpose.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. For a felony. Harry Bridges committed a felony, and he may be deported, and there has been no action taken.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am talking of a "fifth columnist."

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. He is a "fifth columnist."

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Harry Bridges is known as a radical, who may be just as bad as a "fifth columnist," but that does not answer my question at all, because as an immigrant Harry Bridges would come under the general deportation laws. I am talking of laws to apply to "fifth columnists" and saboteurs.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Well, why is he not deported?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Well, I do not want to get into an argument about that again.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. He can be deported for having committed a felony.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. We will get to that later on if I have time. I am asking you, the Congress, what law has the Dies committee brought in in the last 2 years to justify the spending of $235,000 in actual money, plus thousands of dollars which the printing bill will amount to? Their only concrete accomplishment was front-page publicity, issued from Orange, Tex.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I gladly yield to my colleague.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I would rather not try to answer the gentleman's question in his time, but if he will yield to me for that purpose I would like to ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes at the conclusion of the other special orders.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. You can get time. I am asking you the question now.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am going to answer it when I get my 10 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have an engagement upstairs. Can you possibly tell me and the Congress if you have brought in any law on "fifth columnists," that you have been talking about, and the spies that you are talking about? Have you done anything constructive by which the Government can pick up these so-called "fifth columnists"? That is all I am asking you.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes. The question cannot be answered in just a sentence, I will say to the gentleman from New York. In the first place, one law has been passed. That is the so-called Voorhis Act, which requires the registration of organizations of a political nature with foreign connections and foreign control. The enforcement of that will give information to this Nation and to the people of this Nation and will enable the Department of Justice to make investigations regarding such organizations, which are very important.

Now, the gentleman asked for a law to define what a "fifth columnist" is. I would like to know how the gentleman is going to write a law which will describe how you are going to separate the mental processes of a person who thinks one way from the mental processes of a person who thinks another way, and make it technically admissible evidence. There are two problems here, not one. One problem——

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Well——

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman asked me a question.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. All right. Go on, but do not make a long speech in my time.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I have asked for time on my own account. That is what I want.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. All right. Answer the question.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. There are two problems. One is the problem of apprehending people who are violators of laws that we have on the statute books. The other problem is the problem of exposing the activities of agents of totalitarian powers which are operating in this Nation with a view to propagandizing their opinions. That is a job where there is not necessarily a violation of law involved, and the only remedy that a democracy has got is the exposure of that kind of thing. [Applause.]

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Now let me answer the gentleman, if I may. The gentleman knows that I have a high regard for him and his ability as a Member of this House, as I have for all other Members of this House. In the first place, I object to the Dies committee's taking credit for the registration of aliens in this country. There sits the man, the Speaker of this House today, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. JOHN W. MCCORMACK, who is responsible for that Registration Act. It was he, myself, and other members of his committee who fought hard to put the Registration Act, to register foreign agents in this country, on the books.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I am answering your question.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. But the gentleman puts an entire misconception on what I said.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. You said that the Dies committee put the Registration Act on the books, to register all foreign agents. Am I correct?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. It was my own bill that was passed recently. The bill of the gentleman who is sitting in the Speaker's chair, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr.

McCORMACK], we all feel is one of the most important statutes that has been passed for a long time, but the bill I referred to is one which I myself introduced, and is a different bill from the McCormack Act. I will explain it if I can get the time to speak. I have already explained it before.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Now, the second question is, Have you convicted one saboteur or "fifth columnist" in 2 years? As far as Browder is concerned, it was upon his own confession that he had committed an overt act that he convicted himself without the help of the Dies committee.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Does the gentleman yield to me in order to answer the question?

Mr. HOFFMAN. You do not mean that anyone has come in voluntarily and confessed, do you?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Well, he did not come voluntarily. But he gave them all the necessary information himself.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh——

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman yield to me to answer that?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I will be glad to yield to you to answer the question without taking up all of my time. I have something else to discuss.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman asked me the question whether the committee has convicted anybody.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The committee is not a law-enforcing body, it cannot convict anybody; that is the job of the Department of Justice.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. But the committee was acting as a law-enforcing body and telling everybody what should be done and how it should be done. The committee was holding itself out as such.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. No; it is not so.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Just the other day, if the gentleman will yield, he said the committee was only a publicity organization. Now he says it is a law-enforcement organization.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I said the committee tried to act as such. It was the committee itself that tried to take upon itself the prerogatives of a law-enforcing body. I still think they are only a publicity organization.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is two things.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. And it may be three.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I cannot yield. Mr. Speaker, I cannot spend any more time on that. I have another important matter to speak about.

The grand kleagle of the Klan was in town a few days ago and, Mr. Speaker, from him I received one of the finest compliments imaginable, and that was his statement that he did not like me very much. He said so in a release he made on December 11.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Maybe they are mistaken, maybe they just think they do not like the gentleman.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is all right. I still consider it a compliment. I have never received such a compliment in the many years I have been in the Capitol, as a statement coming from the K. K. K. that they do not like me.

Now, this new imperial wizard, James A. Colescott, a horse doctor, has taken over the business of the K. K. K. Whether or not he has any stock in the shirt business I do not know. What made me discuss this question today is the fact—important in my estimation—that he has the audacity, the temerity, to make a statement in the public press—now, listen to this—that "many Members of Congress belong to the Klan, running from 10 to 75 percent of representation in some States." I defy him to produce the proof. I defy him to present such evidence. I do not believe it, I do not believe it, Mr. Speaker; and I think it is very improper for any group or organization to bring in Members of Congress as members of any organization, because that is each person's own individual business. But here a man deliberately, in a statement given to newspaper reporters, makes such an accusation. I have the statement right here. Yesterday, Wednesday, December 11, the imperial wizard issued a statement in which he said among other things that he likes the gentleman from Texas, Mr. DIES better than he likes me. Well, that is all right; he is entitled to his views. In fact, however, he is asking the Congress to continue the Dies committee indefinitely; to continue them as long as they want to function. That is one of the points of the program of the K. K. K. for which he came to Washington. Another press release appeared in the Evening Star of December 11. By the way, I did not have a chance to meet the imperial wizard yesterday, even though he claims he conferred with Members of Congress in the Capitol.

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that while we are focusing our great efforts on ridding the country of foreign agents, "fifth columnists," saboteurs, and spies, the domestic crop of undercover wreckers is creeping up on us in certain parts of our country. The K. K. K. is doing a smashing business and has been this past year. While there was an investigation—and I ask the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] to correct me if I am wrong, for I do not seek to throw any slander or malice upon any committee or any Member—the K. K. K. claims that the Dies committee exonerated the K. K. K. in the State of Pennsylvania in the last meeting of that committee when they were looking for saboteurs who destroyed one of the Hercules powder plant units in which 250 people were killed.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman is in error.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If I am in error, then I apologize. But I have some evidence which I would be glad to show the gentleman which indicates that the Ku Klux Klan is spreading the information that while the committee was making some sort of investigation in New Jersey a member of the committee exonerated the K. K. K. and all the little kleagles—while they were conducting an investigation for saboteurs.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Certainly I yield.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman has made a very serious statement which should not go unchallenged. The purpose of the committee in its inquiries in that instance was to bring out the fact that there had been in New Jersey a joint meeting between the bund and the Klan. I was there; I was a member of the subcommittee that held hearings on that matter.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. All I can say to the gentleman is that my information is to the effect that the Klan claims that an exoneration was made on behalf of its organization in the State of New Jersey in the last hearing of the committee.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. It was the opposite of an exoneration, I may say to the gentleman from New York. As I say, I was at that meeting. The facts that were brought out did not appear to us as being very complimentary.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. France fell not alone through the machinations of Nazi agents but through the lack of willingness to fight for democracy on the part of its native Fascists and Communists. Let us not make the mistake here of prosecuting a few minor Nazi agents while the really dangerous "native Fascist" groups go unmolested, free to ply their anti-democratic wares in the market places of the Nation. I think it is important for the American public to realize this fact at a time when some of the worst elements in our country are suddenly asserting that they are ardent anti-Nazis. They were not anti-Nazi until a few short months ago. Suddenly they shifted—and while preaching the same things which the Nazis want—restriction of the rights of labor, anti-alienism, anti-Semitism, discrimination against the Negro; they claim to be anti-Nazi. Judge a man by his deeds, not by his words. The Ku Klux Klan, whose traditions of fascism are the oldest in the United States—it was linked to the Black Legion, a terror organization resembling the Thugs of ancient India and the Iron Guard of Rumania today—has suddenly announced that it is fighting the bund. Last August 18, the Ku Klux Klan held a joint rally with the German-American Bund at bund-owned Camp Nordland, in Andover, N. J.

The American people were disgusted with that love feast between native and foreign Fascist groups. Realizing this, the Klan decided a few days later that it had to clear itself somehow. It therefore announced that the joint rally was held in an attempt to Americanize the German-American Bund. What was obvious to every intelligent American—that an attempt had been made to unite foreign and native Fascist groups under an American flag which would hide the swastika—could not be admitted, of course, by the Ku Klux Klan. The Klan leaders in New Jersey who were supposed to have been removed from the Klan by higher officials of that secret order are still in power. Despite the attempt by higher Klansmen to clear themselves by announcing that these New Jersey Klansmen would be banished for having held the rally with the bund, these same Klansmen still hold office in that State. These same Klansmen are now going about announcing that they are against the bund in an attempt to whitewash themselves of the stain which was left by their intriguing with their country's enemies. It is easy to say you are against the bund when the whole country is against the bund. But it is not so easy to whitewash yourself when you still stand for all the things the bund wants—as does the Ku Klux Klan. Even the information spread by the Klan claiming that the Dies committee had cleared the Klan will not deceive the American people.

With the lesson of what happened in France before them, the American people know that the native Fascist groups and their financial backers, the industrialists who want to appease Nazi Germany, present the greatest danger to our democracy. When the Klan suddenly announces that it is against the bund, after holding a joint rally with it officered by uniformed bund storm troopers and marked by expressions of cordiality between bund and Klan leaders, we all know that the group is attempting to make up for some of the discredit into which it fell after the rally. When the Klan and other groups like it attempt to restrict the legitimate rights of labor by terrorism and intimidation and to persecute aliens for the most part innocent, when their members themselves are the greatest danger to democracy, it is time to investigate and expose them and their backers. When I say expose them, I mean a real investigation which will show the sinister ambitions and the carefully hidden aims of all the secret terror groups. To quote Jay Field:

> It is, of course, imperative to take measures against the foreign and openly Nazi organizations and individuals, but it is equally vital to guard against the native Fascists and Nazi sympathizers who wrap the American flag around them to hide the swastika beneath.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the other special orders for today, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] is recognized.

INTERNATIONAL ASPECT OF PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, in the 3 minutes allotted to me, I simply wish to call the attention of the House to our Philippine problem.

The situation in the Far East is today extremely delicate. It is potential of grave possibilities. The Philippine Islands are in the midst of that region. Our flag still flies in sovereignty over that archipelago of 114,000 square miles and over 16,000,000 people.

Our Government is determined to give total defense, not only for its continental domain but also for its outlying Territories and possessions, and it appears we may go so far as to extend our defense to all Latin America and the British Empire.

It is gratifying to note that Filipino leaders in public and private life have publicly expressed their undivided loyalty to and cordial cooperation with the United States in any emergency that may arise. If war comes, it is well to know that the Filipinos are an important element in our inventory of assets.

In a statement inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a few days ago by Senator ERNEST W. GIBSON, whose late father was a real friend of the Philippines, Mr. Manuel Roxas, secretary of finance of the Philippine Government, with the explicit approval of President Manuel L. Quezon, said that the international events are giving the Filipinos grave worries, that they appreciate the regime of liberty and peace in their country under the American flag, that they are eager to serve under that flag in defense of America in the Philippines, in the Orient, and anywhere, and, finally, that the 10-year economic transition period has proved too short and should be extended.

I am inserting in the RECORD, if permissible, Mr. Speaker, a most illuminating exposition of the international aspects of Philippine-American relationship by a prominent businessman in Manila, a trustee of the University of the Philippines, an authority on Philippine economic problems, and a close and careful student of national and international questions. He is Mr. Horace B. Pond, whom I had the pleasure to meet when I visited the Philippines 5 years ago. I commend to the other Members of Congress the reading of Mr. Pond's profound and timely thesis, for it raises questions that have been but superficially dealt with heretofore in congressional committee hearings and in the public prints and debates. The matter referred to is as follows:

PHILIPPINE NEUTRALIZATION, NAVAL BASES, AND TRADE PREFERENCES

On July 4, 1946, under the provisions of present law, the President of the United States is required by proclamation to "withdraw and surrender all right of possession, supervision, jurisdiction, control, or sovereignty then existing and exercised by the United States in and over the territory and people of the Philippine Islands" and to "recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands as a separate and self-governing nation and acknowledge the authority and control over the same of the government instituted by the people thereof under the constitution then in force."

The President of the United States is also required to "notify the governments with which the United States is in diplomatic correspondence" of such action, and to "invite said governments to recognize the independence of the Philippine Islands." This is not discretionary but mandatory.

The future political status of the Philippines has thus been definitely determined. This, of course, is still subject to change if Congress wills it. There are, however, three questions of vital interest to the Philippines which, under the provisions of present law, must still be determined—they are neutralization, naval bases, and trade preferences.

The question of trade preferences has for several years been much debated. The question of neutralization has recently been raised. The question of naval bases has been little discussed publicly, either in the Philippines or in the United States. These questions are not simple; they not only are difficult, if not impossible, to answer but to a considerable extent are interrelated. Regarding them there has been much confusion, not only in terminology but even more as to their implications and effects.

It is not my intention to suggest answers to these questions, but rather to present the difficulties in the way of satisfactory answers, for it is only by understanding the difficulties that the questions can be intelligently considered.

NEUTRALIZATION

Section 11 of the Philippine Independence Act provides that "the President (of the United States) is requested at the earliest practicable date to enter into negotiations with foreign powers with a view to the conclusion of a treaty for the perpetual neutralization of the Philippine Islands, if and when Philippine independence shall have been achieved."

Two questions present themselves. First, will a neutralization treaty give security to the Philippines, and, second, is it possible to negotiate a neutralization treaty by which foreign nations will agree to respect or to guarantee the territorial integrity and the independence of the Philippines?

There are two general types of neutralization treaties. Both are agreements among several nations regarding the status, rights, and obligations of a particular nation. One type is merely an agreement to respect the territorial integrity and the independence of a particular nation—a sort of nonaggression pact as to that nation; the other is an agreement by which the signatory nations mutually guarantee the territorial integrity and the independence of a particular nation. The latter type seemingly would give greater security to the nation most concerned than would the former.

It must, however, be admitted that in the world of today there is little respect for, belief in, or reliance on international agreements as a means of checking aggression or of providing security. This is not surprising in view of the failure of many nations to respect such treaties. In the last World War a treaty for the neutralization of Belgium was violated; it was treated as a mere "scrap of paper." The Treaty of Versailles, which ended that war, and the Locarno agreements, which corrected some of its defects and inequalities, have been torn to shreds. The Kellogg Pact, which outlawed war as an instrument of national policy, is neither effective nor has it been observed. The Washington treaties, by which nations having interests in the Far East agreed to respect the territorial integrity of and the "open door" in China, have been violated. Germany by treaty agreed to respect the territorial integrity of Poland, but has now seized Poland and divided it with Russia. Italy has seized Ethiopia and Albania. Russia has by pressure limited the sovereignty of Latvia, Lithuania, and Esthonia, and has now attacked Finland because Finland was unwilling to be a puppet state of Russia. The aggressor in each case was, and in some cases still is, a member of the League of Nations, and all are signatories of the Kellogg Pact. International agreements today seemingly are far too often observed only as long as self-interest is satisfied or it is advantageous to restrain the greed for power.

Will the present wars change world attitudes and national policies so as to bring stability to international relations and security for those nations which are relatively weak in armaments? No one, of course, can answer that question, for the wars are still in progress. But should those nations which profess a desire for order and decency and a respect for international engagements finally win, there still might be no assurance of stability or of security for small nations, for even the winners are likely to be mentally, physically, and financially exhausted, and thus unlikely to fight for the rights of others when strong self-interest is not involved. Even before the present wars the desire for peace was stronger than that self-interest which considered necessary the independence and territorial integrity of Austria and Czechoslovakia. Although France was under obligations to Czechoslovakia, France did not go to war when Germany insisted on taking over Sudetenland, nor when, in violation of the Munich Accord, Germany finally took over all of Czechoslovakia.

None of the occidental nations which signed the Washington treaties has considered that its interests in China, which have been affected by the action of Japan contrary to those treaties, are worth the cost of a war.

If a neutralization treaty for the Philippines were to be concluded, is there any more reason to believe that the occidental nations which might be parties thereto would consider their interests worth fighting for if the provisions of such a treaty were violated?

While no categorical statement can be made as to the value of neutralization for the security of the Philippines, it does seem that in the world of today a neutralization treaty by which the signatories merely agreed to respect, but not to guarantee, the territorial integrity and independence of the Philippines would be a slender reed indeed on which to depend for security.

If Europe were in a state of war, or even if diplomatic tension, if the United States were completely out of the Philippines, and if a major power should attempt to seize the Philippines or to limit its sovereignty, the United States, or any other nation, probably would not fight the aggressor.

But would a neutralization treaty by which the signatories guarantee the territorial integrity and independence of the Philippines give security to the Philippines? It probably would if the United States were a party to it. But, considering the state of public opinion in the United States, it is hardly conceivable that the United States, once it retires from the Philippines, would be willing to assume obligations to oppose with force any nation which might threaten Philippine territorial integrity or independence. Nations go to war only for the defense or the enforcement of rights or interests which they consider to be vital. The maintenance of Philippine territorial integrity and independence is not likely to be considered by the United States a vital interest or as involving national honor. The Filipino people undoubtedly would have the sympathy of the people of the United States, but hardly the support of its Army and Navy.

Japan also is unlikely to enter into a treaty to guarantee Philippine independence and territorial integrity. In fact, in January 1936 the spokesman of the Japanese Foreign Office stated "the Japanese Government renounces the idea that the great powers should conclude agreements guaranteeing the freedom, integrity, or neutrality of another nation." This was interpreted at the time as indicating that Japan will not be a party to any Pacific pact for the neutralization of the Philippines.

It is evident that without the United States and Japan a Philippine neutralization treaty would be valueless.

Thus it would seem that any international agreement for the neutralization of the Philippines which it may be possible to negotiate is not likely to give security to the Philippines; and that there is little prospect that a neutralization pact which might ensure security can be concluded, partly because the United States probably would not be willing to enter into any pact by which the United States would guarantee Philippine territorial integrity and independence, and partly because Japan has renounced the idea of any pact to "guarantee the freedom, integrity, or neutrality of another nation."

NAVAL BASES

On the other hand, the retention by the United States of naval bases in the Philippines after independence would in effect guarantee Philippine independence.

Section 10 (b) of the Philippine Independence Act authorizes and empowers the President of the United States "to enter into negotiations with the Government of the Philippine Islands, not later than 2 years after his proclamation recognizing the independence of the Philippine Islands, for the adjustment and settlement of all questions relating to naval reservations and fueling stations of the United States in the Philippine Islands," and that "pending such adjustment and settlement the matter of naval reservations and fueling stations shall remain in its present status."

The United States may thus retain naval bases in the Philippines after independence. The question is, however, whether the United States will consider that its interests will be served by so doing. Opinion on this question is divided. Some authorities contend that naval bases in the Philippines are a source of weakness as they could not long be defended, and that they will eventually be the cause of trouble with Japan. Those who hold this opinion contend that the United States should, at the earliest possible date, get out of the Philippines and retire to the east of a line drawn from the Aleutian Islands west of Hawaii to the Panama Canal; and that when the United States gets out of the Philippines it should stay out and assume no further responsibility for them, regardless of what happens to the Philippines.

Those who hold the contrary view contend that there are strong advantages in advanced naval bases far from American shores; that the question of naval bases in the Philippines is incidental to larger questions of policy in the Far East; that the abandonment of the Philippines would also probably make necessary the abandonment of Guam; that, as a result, the maintenance of treaty rights would be impossible, thus making necessary the withdrawal by the United States from all interests in China; that it might, and probably would, ultimately result in the Philippines coming under the hegemony of Japan; that the abandonment of Philippine naval bases would be a reversal of the century-old policy that such bases are necessary to match those of other powers; that such abandonment would even further upset the status quo in the Far East and precipitate an international crisis which might lead to war; and that international good behavior and obligations to the Filipino people, deliberately assumed or developed, would make it necessary for the United States at all times to protect them.

I shall not discuss the questions of naval strategy which are involved in these conflicting opinions, for I am not competent to do so; nor shall I discuss the moral issues which have been raised. That is not my present purpose, which is merely to present the problems which enter into a consideration of the question of naval bases in the Philippines.

Naval bases in the Philippines, after independence, would place a definite responsibility on the United States. They would make it necessary for the United States to protect the Philippines from outside aggression, and thus to maintain Philippine independence. The imposition by another power of its sovereignty over, or any encroachment on the territorial integrity of, the Philippines would make valueless United States naval bases therein. The United States also would necessarily assume responsibility for internal peace and order, for the United States could not permit another power to intervene in the Philippines. Is it likely that the United States, with no authority in the Philippines, would assume such a responsibility? If such responsibility were to be assumed, then the United States probably would require some control over foreign relations; otherwise treaties made by the Philippines might result in complications which would make untenable the Philippine naval bases of the United States. The United States also probably would require at least such reserve powers as to Philippine internal affairs as would be commensurate with the responsibility which naval bases would impose. As complete independence has been definitely provided for, naval bases of the United States in the Philippines would seem to be untenable.

It has been argued that the United States, without political authority, has a naval base at Guantanamo, in Cuba. From the point of view of the United States the situation as to Cuba is not comparable with that of the Philippines. A base in Cuba not only is important for the protection of the mainland of the United States and the Panama Canal, but Cuba comes within the scope of the Monroe Doctrine. The United States, under that doctrine, would not permit any nation to encroach on the territory or the independence of Cuba. The Philippines, however, is some 8,000 miles from the west coast of the United States, making protection of the Philippines difficult and costly, while the Monroe Doctrine does not apply to the Philippines. The reason for a naval base in Cuba cannot, therefore, by any stretch of the imagination, have any application to the Philippines.

TRADE PREFERENCES

Section 13 of the Philippine Independence Act provided, as originally approved and accepted, that "after the Philippine Islands have become a free and independent nation there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles coming into the United States from the Philippine Islands the rates of duty which are required to be levied, collected, and paid upon like articles imported from other foreign countries." The amendments to the act which were approved and accepted in 1939 did not change this provision.

Thus, on and after July 4, 1946, as the law now stands, there will be no trade preferences in the trade relations between the Philippines and the United States.

The act, while providing for no trade preferences after independence, did, however, require a later consideration of Philippine-American trade relations after independence by providing, in effect, that at least 1 year prior to July 4, 1946, there shall be held a conference of representatives of the two Governments "for the purpose of formulating recommendations as to future trade relations between" the United States and the Philippines after independence.

As the act definitely provides for no trade preferences after independence, this provision for a conference can only be interpreted as indicating that the question of trade preferences after independence would again be considered. Statements by President Roosevelt when he recommended the approval of the act by Congress, and by the Philippine Legislature in its resolution accepting the act, also makes this clear.

Accordingly, early in 1937, a joint Philippine and American committee was set up "to study trade relations between the United States and the Philippines and to recommend a program for the adjustment of Philippine national economy." This was within the requirements of the act, which imposed no limitations whatever to the trade relations between the two countries which might be considered or recommended by the conference which Congress authorized.

Unfortunately, however, the executive departments of the two Governments, although not required by law to do so, undertook to limit the scope of the work of the committee by stating that "it was further agreed that preferential trade relations between the United States and the Philippines are to be terminated at the earliest practicable date consistent with affording the Philippines a reasonable opportunity to adjust their national economy. Thereafter it is contemplated that trade relations between the two countries will be regulated in accordance with a reciprocal trade agreement on a nonpreferential basis." This is taken from a joint statement signed by the present High Commissioner, Mr. Francis B. Sayre, who then was Assistant Secretary of State, and by President Manuel L. Quezon.

The Joint Preparatory Committee on Philippine Affairs, limited by these instructions, formulated recommendations for the extension of trade preferences after independence in accordance with a plan by which they would each year after independence have been progressively reduced until by the end of 1960 they would have been completely eliminated. These recommendations were embodied in a bill which was presented to Congress early in 1939.

In support of the principle which was laid down in the joint statement above quoted, Mr. Sayre stated at hearings on the bill before the Senate Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs: "It has been the historic policy of the United States for more than a century to carry on its trade and commerce with foreign countries on the most-favored-nation basis, or, in other words, on the basis of equality and nondiscrimination. Every preference granted exclusively to one nation constitutes a discrimination against all others; and discrimination invites retaliation, counterdiscrimination, and rising trade barriers. A preferential trade arrangement between nations is a form of barrier which, particularly in recent years, we have been striving earnestly to eliminate. To continue indefinitely, or to declare that we intend to continue indefinitely a preferential arrangement with the Philippines after their independence would, therefore, be in a direct conflict with our fundamental commercial policy of nondiscrimination and trade liberalization. The single exception to our historic policy is the case of Cuba. Such an exception should not be extended."

The National Foreign Trade Council of the United States "took issue with the principles enunciated * * * which had restricted the recommendations of the Joint Preparatory Committee, and clearly showed that severance of preferential trade relations with the Philippines would cause far greater injury to our trade relations than would their maintenance."

While, theoretically, the recommendations of the committee provided for a continuation of trade preferences until 1961, practically that would not have been the case, for long before 1961 the preferences would have been of little value either to the United States or to the Philippines. Long before the full duties were applied and preferences were terminated most Philippine industries which are dependent on the American market would have found the preferences insufficient to permit survival.

The Senate committee tabled the bill as to trade relations after independence. Congress did, however, approve a bill amending the provisions of the Philippine Independence Act as to trade relations until independence, and, further, amended the provision for a conference to the effect that a conference shall be held at least 2 years prior to July 4, 1946, and that of the American members three shall be Senators appointed by the President of the Senate, three shall be Representatives appointed by the Speaker of the House, and three shall be appointed by the President of the United States.

This means that a new conference is to be held between representatives of the two Governments for the consideration of trade relations after independence.

Whether the recommendations of the Joint Preparatory Committee as to the trade relations after independence were tabled because the Senate committee was unwilling to endorse the principle enunciated as to trade preferences or the particular plan which was recommended by the committee or whether from the point of view of the Philippines for sinister reasons is immaterial. The fact is that the principle has not, as to the Philippines, been approved by Congress and that a new conference is to be held. Thus the question of trade preferences has not yet been finally determined.

Nevertheless, we must recognize that the policy of the United States as to trade preferences as enunciated by Mr. Sayre is the historic policy of the United States, and that under that policy trade preferences and independence are incompatible. On the other hand, there are authorities who state that world conditions during the past 3 or 4 years have not been such as to make reciprocity successful when it is based on the most-favored-nation principle; that is, on the principle of nondiscrimination. This historic policy of the United States may not be adapted to the abnormal conditions now prevailing in the world and which may continue to prevail for a generation or more to come.

Trade preferences and trade reciprocity are not the same. Trade preferences imply discrimination against other nations, while trade reciprocity does not. In fact, all reciprocal-trade ageements entered into by the United States contain the most-favored-nation clause, so that, with the sole exception of Cuba, a reduction of the duty for the products of one nation applies automatically to the products of all other nations which in their trade relations do not discriminate against the United States. Thus a reciprocal-trade agreement between the United States and the Philippines would give no trade preferences to the Philippines, for whatever concessions were granted to the Philippines would be equally applicable to most other countries.

It is on trade preferences, rather than on trade reciprocity, with the United States that Philippine economy has been based, and it is the loss of trade preferences which would result in disaster to the Philippines.

RECAPITULATION

It thus is evident that for the Philippines' neutralization, naval bases and trade preferences are real problems which will not be easy to solve. Furthermore, none of these problems can be solved independently of the other two, for, as I have said before, all three problems are interrelated and the solution of one affects the solution of the others. Thus, should neutralization be effected, United States naval bases probably could not be retained by the United States in the Philippines, for neutralization and naval bases are incompatible. This was recognized at the time the original Philippine Independence Act was drafted. President Hoover, in his veto message, stated, "The bill makes no effective provision for the maintenance of their independence thereafter from outside pressure, except a promise of effort on our part toward neutralization. We have the option to continue the maintenance of military and naval bases. Other nations are unlikely to become parties to neutralization if we continue such bases, and neutralization is a feeble assurance of independence in any event unless we guarantee it."

Former Senator Cutting, one of the sponsors of the act, in commenting on the message of the President, said, "I do not think there is any inconsistency in the option given the President of entering into a neutralization agreement or of maintaining military and naval bases. He does not have to do either one. Obviously he cannot do both. If at any time the United States should enter into a neutralization agreement with other nations about the Philippines, one of the terms of such agreement would certainly be our withdrawal from our military and naval bases. It is impossible to argue to the contrary."

This reasoning applies with equal force to trade preferences, which, if granted, must be reciprocal. Neutralization presumes equality of treatment for the products of all nations which agree thereto. If the United States were given indefinitely trade preferences in the Philippines it is doubtful whether other nations, whose products would thus indefinitely be discriminated against in the Philippines, would be willing to assume the obligations which neutralization presumes. No other nation can be expected to guarantee a preferred economic position for the United States in the Philippines; and, therefore, the United States is not likely to seek such guaranty.

On the other hand, if the United States were to retain naval bases in the Philippines, it would be in the interest of the United States to continue, at least for a considerable period of time, trade preferences in the trade relations with the Philippines.

Most students of Philippine economy agree that if such trade preferences are terminated when Philippine independence is recognized, Philippine economic and social stability will be jeopardized. With naval bases in the Philippines the United States would have a real interest in such stability, for instability might require intervention and, with naval bases, the United States could not permit intervention by another nation.

The best assurance of stability is the maintenance of the Philippine level of living. If that falls as a result of the closing of the United States tariff door to Philippine products, and if, at the same time, there were to be a curtailment of social services, internal difficulties might quickly develop. The events of the last 10 years show that in many countries economic distress has led to disastrous social upheavals, revolutions, or dictatorships; demagogs thrive on dissatisfaction and poverty.

Thus, like a dog chasing his tail, we go around in a circle. Neutralization is not likely to afford security or to be attainable, and, if it were, neither naval bases nor trade preferences could be retained. Naval bases, while probably making necessary the continuation of trade preferences, probably are not feasible for the United States after complete independence. Naval bases are incompatible with neutralization and independence. Trade preferences are contrary to the century-old policy of the United States and thus may be incompatible with independence.

The complete independence of the Philippines seemingly is assured. But the problems of neutralization, naval bases, and trade preferences have not been solved.

From the maze of inconsistencies and incompatibilities it may be possible to extract a solution, but one would be foolhardy who today would predict what that solution will be.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] is recognized for 5 minutes.

THE C. I. O.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I have just cut out of the Santa Monica Outlook an article dated December 6, headed Sound Truck Used by the C. I. O. in Effort To Win Over Workers at Douglas Aircraft Co. Factory. I presume you men know that these agitators work day and night to cause all the unrest, dissatisfaction, and dissension that they can. What is behind all of this C. I. O. program, to have the C. I. O. take over and run the aircraft factories, our shipbuilding industry, our lumber industry, steel, automobiles, and all of these plants that are so necessary to carry on the program of our national defense?

Let us become realists and look this thing in the face. The C. I. O. opposed the national-defense program from its inception. They opposed the Neutrality Act. They opposed conscription, and I believe it will be conceded that by their every act they have done everything they possibly could to disturb, disrupt, and destroy the national-defense program.

We all know that many of these so-called leaders—but, really, the misleaders—of the union movement have been made up of racketeers, highjackers, Communists, and dangerous alien criminals, such as Harry Bridges. We all know that these misleaders of men in these destructive labor unions are Communists, fellow travelers, or persons who hold views that would destroy this Government, and that now that their golden opportunity is here to destroy our national-defense program, they are going to make the most of it. Let us look at the facts. In their attempt to destroy airplane production they called a strike at Vultee; they stopped delivery of planes that are necessary to our Army for training of our men; they are striking against the shipbuilding operators; there have been jurisdictional strikes that have slowed down and interfered with our national-defense program; they are advocating and putting into effect strikes in the forests, interfering with our lumber industry; they have made the statement that they are going to take over all industry, including air plants, automobile plants, shipbuilding, steel plants, lumber industry, and shipping; and I understand the substance of a remark made by Mr. Sidney Hillman was that "industry had better get aboard or take the consequences." Does it seem possible, in what has been called free America, that, through the leadership of the C. I. O. and Sidney Hillman, this program can be stopped, our national-defense program sabotaged, and this country not only left defenseless but eventually turned over to the Communists?

Does it seem fair that the C. I. O. group, no matter what the wage schedule is, appear to want more? That no matter what the working conditions are, they can take exception to them and cause trouble, riots, strikes, and dissension, and get away with it, while, on the other hand, this country has drafted the manpower of the country and hundreds of thousands of men have had to leave their businesses, which they have built up, upon which they were making hundreds of dollars a month, and willingly and patriotically accept $30 per month? Contrast these men who are willing to lay down their lives for their country, to make the supreme sacrifice to defend the country, with the racketeers and saboteurs who refuse to cooperate in a program to furnish them with materials with which to defend the country. If there is no place else to put them, every one of them who is spreading this dissension should be placed in a concentration camp, where they will be safe; but not in the Army, where they may further carry on their program of sabotage.

I should think that every mother and every father and every relative of every man who has been drafted would rightfully resent the demands of this destructively communistic C. I. O., European labor movement.

These men who have gone into the draft have willingly and patriotically made their sacrifices, but not the C. I. O. group. They are going to make the defense program of this country cost as much as possible in their correlated program to first destroy the financial structure of this country and then take it over and make it a communistic republic, if possible.

This destructive program of the C. I. O. goes against my grain, and I say here and now that I would like to see this Congress snap these people back to the position in which they belong.

I want to say for the benefit of the Congressmen that they need not fear this group; that they do not represent a majority of our people, nor anywhere near a majority; but they are the loud-mouthed, noisy minority, well organized. We have had plants employing a thousand employees wherein less than 100 have made their wishes prevail over the majority. These people, therefore, do not represent the constructive labor movement. They never have and they never will. The only way that they have gotten by is through their ruthless tactics of coercing and beating up men, threatening men, throwing stink bombs into men's homes, threatening to attack their families, and a program of general destruction. They do not represent 5 percent of labor, but, through their noisy, loud-mouthed representations, one would think they were a majority. The time has come when the C. I. O. movement, with their sit-down strikes, their communistic, European tactics, will have to go; and I hope before this program goes much further, before it is delayed and sabotaged, that legislation will be enacted which will throw these C. I. O.'s out of their now dominating position. Meeting the question fairly, it resolves itself into this: Is this a country still of the American people, by the people, and for the people, or is it going to be run by a bunch of European Communists, of the C. I. O., by the C. I. O., and for the C. I. O.?

[From the Radio Officers Union, San Francisco, Calif., December 6, 1940]

To West Coast Radio Officers:

It may interest radiomen, particularly A. C. A. men, to learn that on or about November 8, 1940, A. C. A. Marine Local 6, Seattle, was raided by a person or persons unknown and a large amount of printed Communist propaganda was removed from the premises. A clean sweep was made of the place, taking down posters, pictures, magazines, pamphlets, books, and just about everything in sight that smacked of Moscow. The Local 6 secretary, T. J. Van Ermen, who has been such a diligent worker for Joseph Stalin for many years, lost his entire library, which included the complete works of Earl Browder, Z. R. Foster, and many other pro-Soviet writers. Included in the loot were complete lists of "who's who" in the marine division of A. C. A. and a much-thumbed book containing a plan to sovietize America. This plan pointed out the positive necessity of seizing control of communications and transportation in order that at a given signal from Moscow Communists could completely tie up the entire country.

Immediately after the raid Mervyn Rathborne resigned from the A. C. A. and the C. I. O. Jake Winocur, Boston A. C. A. delegate, also disappeared when news of the Seattle raid reached the east coast. Roy Pyle, Herr Hanson, and F. W. Robinson, ex-secretary of Local 2, New York, probably having received word that the raids were coming, ducked out of sight long ago. Chester Jordan and Comrade Yurgionas are now feeling the heat of a Government investigation and, along with Van Ermen, will no doubt turn up missing shortly. Does all this make sense? Is it not a fulfillment of what the C. T. U. long ago promised would eventually happen?

The question now is, Who is pulling these raids on A. C. A. marine division locals? Is it the F. B. I.? We wouldn't know. But we do know that much evidence is being collected, and for a purpose. We also know that C. T. U. members and the many A. C. A. men who have secretly joined C. T. U. will not become involved in the coming purge.

These are indeed serious times. Communist traitors disguised as labor leaders have for years been undermining our democratic form of government. They have attacked the Dies committee because Mr. DIES has exposed them. They have attacked the Department of Justice for the same reason. Their attack on the A. F. of L., and particularly the C. T. U., has come as a direct result of our fight to purge Communists from the American merchant marine.

It has often been said that radiomen are meek, timid, and cowards. But have you heard anyone lately saying that about C. T. U. members? You bet you haven't. We took on a fight against tremendous odds when the A. C. A.-N. M. U. combine was going to town. Many of us took beatings at the hands of N. M. U. goon squads. Many of us lost our jobs when the A. C. A.-N. M. U. forced shipowners to fire us. That was 3 years ago. Today we are on top. The C. T. U. is the dominant radio officers' union, and in control on the east and Gulf coasts. The "Commies" are now on the run.

Our fight to purge the American merchant marine of Communists is nearly won. It will be completely won when west coast radio officers throw off their fear of the Rathborne-Curran-Bridges clique and join hands with C. T. U. men as free Americans. We will then have unity—the American kind.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a radio officers' union publication, dated December 6, to follow consecutively the remarks I have just made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOOK). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

DEFENSE PROGRAM AND LABOR

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like 10 minutes to answer the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] and 10 minutes to comment on the speech the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] just made, but I am going to do the latter first.

If I were to get up here and make a speech about a man connected with a prominent oil company who was recently shown by the newspapers to have had very close contact with Nazi agents in this country and then proceed to say that people like that represent the employers of America, therefore we ought to kick out all employers of America, I would be making a speech with just as much reason to it as the speech we have just listened to. Unfortunately it is true there are Communists in the C. I. O. They do not belong there and they ought to be gotten rid of for the sake of the unions themselves. But my best judgment is they constitute no more than 1 percent or 2 percent of the membership at most.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD].

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Does the gentleman advocate such leaders as Harry Bridges, who has been shown by his own confession to be the head of a labor movement, and does the gentleman support him?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman knows very well I do not. The gentleman also knows that I have made statements on the floor of the House when there was an instance brought up where I knew about the facts of the situation and where I knew there were Communists in control of any labor organization, and I will do it again when occasion calls for it.

But I take exception to the fact that the gentleman begins with maybe 1 or 2 percent of people who are in a place where they ought to be got out of and where I agree with him they ought to be got out of, and he winds up with Sydney Hillman, a member of the National Defense Council, and lumps them all together and says they are all out to take over industry, are against the defense program, and a whole lot of statements like that.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Will the gentleman explain Sydney Hillman's suggestion, then, that they had better get on the train or else? What kind of a suggestion is that?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I did not hear Mr. Hillman make any such remark, and I do not know anything about it, but I do know that Mr. Hillman was the man who went before the C. I. O. convention and told the C. I. O. convention that the first business of labor in America is the business of national defense, and that they had better get on that train. I know that it was one of the most important steps that has ever been taken by an American labor leader. I would recommend to the gentleman that he might have gone to the dinner given by the American Federation of Labor down here the other night. It might have done him good to listen to the speech that Mr. Green made that night.

I can tell the gentleman this, furthermore, that so far as the real Communists are concerned, the greatest service he can render them is to enable them to go to the rank and file of labor and say to the rank and file of labor, "You are all going to be put in the same boat with us by certain people. It does not make any difference whether you are Communists or loyal Americans. They will talk about you in just the same way, therefore you have nothing to lose if you follow us."

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. If the gentleman had listened to my speech, he would have noticed that I referred to the minority of saboteurs who are trying to destroy our defense program. The gentleman is commenting on my speech. Therefore, is the gentleman coming to the defense of those whom I mentioned specifically as are trying to destroy our program? Is the gentleman defending them?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Of course, I am not.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Then the gentleman should have listened to my speech.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I did listen to the speech with great care. I am taking exception to the part of the speech where the gentleman lumped together the entire organization.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Including Sydney Hillman.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes. I could take the gentleman to one of the greatest unions in southern California—the United Rubber Workers of America. If the gentleman would read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD he would see a resolution of that organization that I put in the RECORD myself, expressing the most patriotic attitude toward this country that any group could possibly express.

Unless we are going to be careful here; unless we are going to be fair; unless we are going to be accurate; unless we are going to speak from knowledge that we actually have; unless, indeed, we are going to do the thing most important of all, namely, to emphasize the essential and necessary unity of every single person in the United States whose loyalty is to the United States, and draw the line between that group of people and people whose loyalty is to other nations and dictators and forces in the world besides the United States, we are going to fail to establish the national defense and the national unity upon which our whole future depends.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. If the gentleman will yield further for just one comment, may I say that it is singularly peculiar that every time we attack these subversive interests, these people who would destroy our program, somebody comes to their defense.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The gentleman knows perfectly well that he speaks something at that moment that is absolutely unjustified and untrue. I have come to the defense of nobody who is subversive. Indeed, I have, perhaps, worked longer hours than the gentleman has, to try to bring out the facts regarding such forces.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Does the gentleman want me to give him examples?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I have made my position abundantly plain.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I can give the gentleman plenty of examples.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman referred just a moment ago to the speech made by the president of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. Green. I had the honor and the pleasure of sitting within 30 or 40 feet of Mr. Green as he made that speech. I heard him lead up, in a very patriotic manner, to the statement, in substance and effect, that come what may, industry should see to it that there is no suspension or delay or interference with our national-defense program. That is correctly quoted, is it not?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is right.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I understand the gentleman was there. When Mr. Green made that statement, did the gentleman hear one word or one sound of applause?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Why, I certainly did.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I sat within 30 feet of him, and I did not hear anything like that. Three or four other Members of the House sat near me, and we commented on it. We were surprised and amazed that the statement was not loudly applauded.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I happened to be there that night myself.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman was right back of where I was sitting.

Mr. McCORMACK. I saw the gentleman from Michigan. It was a case where there was considerable said that those who were present carried with them. Some very able addresses were made. I have a distinct recollection that many utterances were made there which on other occasions would be applauded but which were not applauded because it was a very serious address that was made by the guest of the evening and also by Mr. Green. The applause was very limited, because there seemed to be a consciousness on the part of all that it was something more than a mere speech; that it was an occasion where those who were present, whether or not they agreed with what was said, were really receiving valuable information. As I recall, the applause was very limited other than at the time of the introduction of the speakers and the ending of the remarks made by the several speakers.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts is correct, and there was no applause at that particular time as to that particular statement, which I heartily approved. There was loud applause when the statement was made by the gentleman from Great Britain that we should aid England—very loud applause.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. There was no applause after Lincoln's Gettysburg speech, either, I understand. I think that anybody who has taken the trouble to study the position taken by every responsible labor leader in America will know that if there is any group in this country that realizes the importance to it of the defense program and has pledged its support to that program, it is the labor movement.

Now, I agree with my colleague from California that there are places in that movement that need cleaning up. I agree that some of those places are in our own State. I would like to see Mr. Bridges gone. What I am after—and perhaps I have spoken with too much feeling this afternoon; and if I have, I am sorry—but what I am earnestly concerned with is the building of a spirit of unity in our country. If we are to do that, it is most important that we know the difference between our own loyal people, of whatever economic group—farmers, employers, workers, professional people, who stand ready to make their sacrifice for the national interests, who would want to see that all other groups did the same thing, who in perfectly human fashion seek to protect their own interests and that of their wives and families, on the one hand, and people who do not wish the United States well, on the other hand.

Mr. Speaker, the national defense of America is going to depend inevitably upon the will of a free people to stand together to defend that liberty and the institutions for which this country stands. You cannot get that will by means of compulsion. You cannot get that will by pointing a finger of scorn at a great group of citizens. You can only get it as you say, "Listen, this is your problem. You have your part of the responsibility." Say that to the heads of the labor movement, and you will get response, just as England has. In England, Government said to labor, "You have responsibility the same as everybody else, you have a job to do the same as everybody else, and how are we going to accomplish it?" The important part of it is the word "we."

I did not expect to speak today, and my primary decision came because of some of the things the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] said.

I am a member of the Dies committee. Taking everything into consideration, I believe sincerely that the committee ought to be continued. I cannot, of course, stand up here and say that I have always agreed with everything connected with the committee. It is a committee of seven members, and no one member can always have his way. But I think that, by and large, the impact of the work of that committee has been to show to the American people just how it is that in this free Nation there are agencies at work composed of people essentially not free, who have been trying to work the will of totalitarian dictators—Communist, Nazi, or any other kind, I do not care what—in this country.

This is a different kind of a problem from the old problem of free speech that liberals used to talk about when it was a case of dissident minorities that have a different idea from what the majority of the people hold about current questions. I hope the time will never come when people in the United States who are basically devoted to their country will have to be afraid to hold and express views about economic and social questions which differ from majority views. But, indeed, it is true to say that these pro-totalitarian groups are people who fall in an entirely different category. It is almost true to say they hold no ideas themselves at all, because the ideas they pursue are ideas ready made and patterned for them from across the sea. One of the difficult parts of this problem is that many, many of the activities that are carried on by such people are not technically violations of law. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN], in substance, asked for a law so that we could arrest people. Of course, we must have laws against sabotage, espionage, and things of that sort. But it is no easy matter for a democracy to devise a law to protect itself against propaganda and clever organizational activity. But I did draw one law and, with committee approval, introduced it, and it was passed, and it is now on the statute books. Frankly, I think the Senate narrowed its scope too much. I think it would have been a much more effective measure had it become a law in the form in which the House passed it. That is a problem that will have to be dealt with in the future.

The act says that any organization which attempts to enter the political life of the United States in order to try to control our Government and which has any foreign control exercised over it, or which engages in any military activities among its members, or which seeks forcefully the overthrow of the United States Government, shall register with the Department of Justice all the pertinent facts, including the source of every dime of money that it receives. In my humble judgment, if a democracy could say to a person, "You can exercise free speech, but you have got to tell us who you are when you exercise it every time," you would go a long, long way toward removing any possible deleterious influence. But here is what we come to: Just as soon as you attempt to write laws to cover all this field of propaganda activity, you run into the greatest difficulty. A dictator of course experiences no such trouble. Anyone he happens not to like has ipso facto disobeyed a "law" and is promptly punished. But one of the essential ways in which a democracy is different is that it frequently must depend upon the good sense of its people to work out some problems which the dictator deals with by summary executions. As an example, here comes somebody and tries to get members into the "society for sweetness and light," or something like that. A lot of people join the "society for sweetness and light," and lo and behold, it turns out that the "society for sweetness and light" has been organized away back in the beginning for the purpose of trying to spread Communist or Nazi propaganda. Should there be a law that anybody who belongs to the "society for sweetness and light" should be put in jail? What course then remains? The course of exposing mercilessly to the light of public knowledge the activities of persons and groups whose purpose is to serve totalitarian causes here in America. You have got two jobs. You have got the job of apprehending and catching and punishing people who commit acts of sabotage or espionage or anything like that against the United States. That is a job the Department of Justice has to do, and in the doing of which they should have the full support and cooperation of every other agency of the Government, including the Dies committee. I for one believe the F. B. I. has done and will continue to do a good job in this all-important field. But you have got a great realm of activity which does not constitute technical violations of law. Some new law of an effective nature can perhaps be devised but it can never cover this whole field, in my opinion.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. In that realm it seems to me that the basic remedy of a democracy is careful exposure of the facts of the situation. I could name you a considerable number of organizations which have folded up in the last year or so as a result of that. I think it is up to people like myself, who have always been all through their lives what you might term progressives, to stand four-square on this question in uncompromising opposition to any infiltration of totalitarian forces—Communist, Nazi, or any other sort—or totalitarian persons into any of the organizations of the American people upon which they depend.

I think likewise it is the duty of conservatives to have no traffic whatsoever with people who hold no real devotion to democracy and no fundamental belief in the common people of this country, but who really would serve a Fascist state if they could. The truth about these matters is a thing of paramount importance. If we can bring out that truth, it is going to be effective, I fully believe.

But underneath it all there have to be two things, a devotion on the part of every thoughtful American to the welfare of other groups of people besides his own; a consciousness that we together are engaged in a great national effort whose major purpose is to keep alive in this world a government of the people, by the people, and for the people, and that we mean all of that. To do that thing requires more than making speeches like I have made today or like some other Members have made from time to time in recent days. It requires also the making of constructive speeches and the passage of constructive legislation that will open the way to a solution of every problem faced by the American people. For they must know that the cause of America is the cause of all its people and that at the end of this period of trial they can look forward not to great depressions and unemployment but to a better time when wisdom and courage will have been applied to enable us to all share together the rich heritage God has given our country. [Applause.]

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may have 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. PATRICK. The gentleman from California has given an excellent slant on this. I believe that the average Member of this House has great confidence in the purposes and even the results of the Dies committee and also has great confidence in the F. B. I.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is right.

Mr. PATRICK. I realize that the two fields of activity are different. I would like to ask the gentleman if at this time there is any great point of controversy between the F. B. I. and the Dies committee as to matters of publicity given, as has been charged in some instances, in which it would be stated by those in authority that releases were given too soon by the Dies committee that handicapped the results of the work of the F. B. I.?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I do not know in detail about such instances. It could happen, of course, without the committee knowing it was exposing something on which the F. B. I. was working. All I want to say about that matter is that at this time I am personally convinced there is no reason at all for conflict between these agencies; that I have the utmost respect and confidence in the work the Department of Justice is trying to do; and that I am deeply hopeful that each agency doing the job it is supposed to do will go forward on the common purpose of attempting to keep our Nation protected properly from elements and people who do not wish it well. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from the World War Veterans of the United States Merchant Marine and a poem by Alexander C. Corkum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker pro tempore:

H. R. 658. An act for the relief of the estate of Dr. B. L. Pursifull, Grace Pursifull, Eugene Pursifull, Ralph Pursifull, Bobby Pursifull, and Dora Little.

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced his signature to enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 3729. An act for the relief of Hjalmar M. Seby;

S. 3765. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg., and for other purposes;

S. 3934. An act authorizing the State of Michigan, acting through the International Bridge Authority of Michigan, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the St. Marys River from a point in or near the city of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., to a point in the Province of Ontario, Canada;

S. 4135. An act to legalize the construction by the State Highway Board of Georgia of a free highway bridge across the Withlacoochee River between Valdosta, Ga., and Madison, Fla., at Horns Ferry;

S. 4370. An act authorizing the President to appoint an Under Secretary of War during national emergencies, fixing the compensation of the Under Secretary of War, and authorizing the Secretary of War to prescribe duties; and

S. J. Res. 306. Joint resolution extending the time for submitting the final report of the Temporary National Economic Committee.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House, pursuant to its previous order, adjourned until Monday, December 16, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

2067. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting a report of awards made under the act of March 5, 1940 (Public, No. 426, 76th Cong.); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2068. A letter from the Acting Secretary of War, transmitting a report of awards made under the act of March 5, 1940 (Public, No. 426, 76th Cong.); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2070. A letter from the Acting Postmaster General, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend the act of August 5, 1939, entitled "An act to provide for the disposition of certain records of the United States Government"; to the Committee on the Disposition of Executive Papers.

2071. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a statement of the fiscal affairs of all Indian tribes for whose benefit expenditures from public or tribal funds were made during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1940; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PACE:

H. R. 10723 (by request). A bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, for the purpose of regulating interstate and foreign commerce in peanuts, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. PATRICK:

H. J. Res. 622. Joint resolution designating the first Thursday following the third Sunday in November of each year as Thanksgiving Day and declaring such day a legal holiday; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of California, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to consider their Senate Joint Resolution No. 2, dated December 4, 1940, with reference to purchase of woolen material and products for national-defense program; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII,

Mr. KITCHENS introduced a bill (H. R. 10724) for the relief of Marvin C. Allder, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9405. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Disabled Philippine Constabulary Veterans of the Philippine Campaigne, Lucena, Tayabas, petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to pension and hospitalization; to the Committee on Pensions.

9406. Also petition of the Beaumont Trades and Labor Assembly, Beaumont, Tex., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to un-American activities; to the Committee on Rules.

9407. Also, petition of the Dallas Homing Pigeon Club, Dallas, Tex., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to House bill 7813, safeguarding homing pigeons; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE

MONDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, November 19, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou whose commandment is in all the earth, besetting us behind and before, from which there is no escape: Let it never be hidden from us, nor let us ever seek to hide ourselves from it; for our discernment of Thy will fills us with light, and our willing surrender to it brings us liberty. In these hazardous days, knowing that the wings of our life are plumed with death, that time hasteth and will not return, help us to realize that the sacred meaning of life is to be found not merely in the fulfillment of cherished dreams and aspirations, however lofty they may be, but in devotion to duty and to the right, with morality revealed as valor in the battle of life.

So help us to be fine and strong in character that we may fitly serve our country, and bring to all mankind the knowledge of Thee and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. MINTON, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Thursday, December 12, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

SENATOR FROM IDAHO—CREDENTIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the credentials of JOHN THOMAS, duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Idaho a Senator from that State for the unexpired term ending January 3, 1943, which were read and ordered to be filed.

SENATOR FROM RHODE ISLAND—CREDENTIALS

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, it gives me pleasure to present the certificate of reelection of my colleague, Hon. PETER GOELET GERRY, and ask that it be placed on file and noted in the RECORD.

The credentials of PETER G. GERRY, duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Rhode Island a Senator from that State for the term beginning January 3, 1941, were read and ordered to be filed.

TRANSPORTATION OF OFFICIALS IN MILITARY AND NAVAL AIRCRAFT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting information relative to the joint policy adopted by the Secretaries of War and the Navy in regard to transportation of Government officials in military and naval aircraft, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table.

RELIEF OF DESTITUTION OF NATIVES OF ALASKA

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report covering expenditures made from the appropriation "Education of natives of Alaska, 1939–41," for the relief of destitution of natives of Alaska during the fiscal year 1940, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RECONCENTRATION OR REWAREHOUSING OF COTTON

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture in relation to Senate Resolution 337, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, December 16, 1940.

The VICE PRESIDENT,
United States Senate.

DEAR MR. VICE PRESIDENT: Careful consideration has been given to Senate Resolution 337, of December 2, 1940, requesting that the competitive bids which the Commodity Credit Corporation has received for the storage of Government stocks of cotton not be accepted until there has been an opportunity for the Congress to consider the subject.

In order to conform to the request which is contained in Senate Resolution 337, announcement is being made today that the date for acceptance of the bids has been deferred from December 16, 1940, as set forth in the invitation for bids, to February 1, 1941. This action will afford all persons an adequate opportunity to obtain a consideration of their views by the Congress.

Sincerely yours,

CLAUDE R. WICKARD,
Secretary.

PROMOTION OF SAFETY THROUGH USE OF COMMUNICATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, reporting, in accordance with law, that the Commission is preparing, pursuant to the provisions of section 602 (e) of the Communications Act, as amended, its report following a special study of the radio requirements necessary or desirable for safety purposes for ships navigating the Great Lakes and inland waters of the United States, and also that, with the exception of the matter above referred to, the Commission has no specific recommendations to make at this time for new legislation with respect to the promotion of safety of life and property through the use of communications, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PETITIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Nellie A. Hemer, of Los Angeles, Calif., praying for the extension of adequate aid to England and the hastening of national-defense preparations in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of Margaret Dunning Chapter, Daughters of American Colonists, Topeka, Kans., praying that a commemorative postage stamp be issued in honor of Mary Ball Washington, mother of George Washington and also that August 25 be set aside as Mary Ball, Mother of Washington Day, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

RESOLUTION OF AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION RELATIVE TO TAXATION

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point and appropriately referred a short resolution relating to taxation adopted by voting delegates at the annual meeting of the American Farm Bureau Federation on December 12, 1940, at Baltimore, Md.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO REPLACE LOCAL TAXES

Where Federal acquisition of privately owned land reduces the base of the general property tax sufficiently to create a serious fiscal problem, we recommend that equitable contribution be made to the local taxing units by the Federal Government for at least the period of readjustment.

EXTENSION OF CREDIT TO GREAT BRITAIN—PROTEST OF FARMERS' UNION OF RILEY COUNTY, KANS.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a protest from the Farmers' Union of Riley County, Kans.

There being no objection, the protest was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RANDOLPH, KANS., November 29, 1940.

Hon. Senator CAPPER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Whereas it is rumored in Congress that we might be called on to extend credit and loan money to Great Britain, we, the entire membership of the Farmers' Union, Local 1214, Grandview, Riley County, Kans., most vigorously protest against any such action of our Congress and appeal to you that you will use all your power and influence to stop any such move.

Sincerely,

Henry G. Nanninga, Leonardville, Kans.; L. D. Buss, Leonardville, Kans.; Clarence Larson, Stockdale, Kans.; Carl Valine, Randolph, Kans.; John L. Larson, Randolph, Kans.; Mrs. L. D. Buss, Leonardville, Kans.; Winston Buss, Leonardville, Kans.; Mrs. Ida Larson, Stockdale, Kans.; Mrs. Alma Nanninga, Leonardville, Kans.; Loyd Wickstrum, Stockdale, Kans.; Glen Wickstrum, Stockdale, Kans.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGES, ST. LOUIS, MO.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce, I report favorably, with amendments, House bill 9683, which is a bill simply in the usual form to extend the time for the construction of a bridge at St. Louis, and I submit a report (No. 2224) thereon. The committee has amended the bill to include an additional bridge at St. Louis. There seems to be no objection to either extension from any source—and these are purely extensions—and at the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9683) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets, in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill., and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 2, after line 15, to insert the following:

SEC. 3. That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River, at or near a point on Broadway between Florida and Mullanphy Streets, in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the town of Stites, in the county of St. Clair, State of Illinois, and connecting with St. Clair Avenue extended in said town, authorized to be built by the county of St. Clair, Ill., by an act of Congress approved August 30, 1935, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved May 1, 1936, June 9, 1937, June 29, 1938, and July 25, 1939, are hereby further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from August 30, 1940.

And on page 2, line 16, to change the section number from "3" to "4."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill., and to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River between St. Louis, Mo., and Stites, Ill."

POSTMASTER NOMINATIONS REPORTED AND CONFIRMED

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I present the approved nominations of 17 postmasters to which the Senators concerned do not object. I ask, as in executive session, that the nominations be confirmed and the President notified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? Without objection, as in executive session, the nominations will be confirmed and the President notified.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

A bill and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NEELY:

S. 4438. A bill authorizing the city of Wheeling, W. Va., to purchase and construct, maintain and operate bridges across the Ohio River located wholly or partly within said city; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. KING:

S. J. Res. 308. Joint resolution requesting the President to call a conference of representatives of the Federal and State Governments to consider certain questions relative to Federal and State taxation; to the Committee on Finance.

MARY JOSEPHINE WILLIAMS

Mr. HAYDEN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 338), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to

Mary Josephine Williams, widow of Ora Williams, late a laborer of the Senate under supervision of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

[Mr. BURKE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement prepared by the law firm of Tumulty & Tumulty on the subject of the French spoliation claims, which appears in the Appendix.]

BRITISH INTERESTS IN AMERICAN BUSINESS

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD exhibits C and E of his speech delivered on December 9, as noted on page 13862 of the RECORD.]

ADDRESS BY W. L. BATT ON NATIONAL DEFENSE

[Mr. MINTON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the Appendix an address on the subject of national defense, delivered by W. L. Batt, Deputy Commissioner, Industrial Materials Division, National Defense Advisory Commission, before the annual dinner of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers in New York City, December 4, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

PAYMENTS TO SHORT-LINE RAILROADS

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that action on my motion concerning House bill 10098 be postponed until Thursday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

ADVOCACY OF EMERGENCY DECREE BY PRINCETON EDUCATORS

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, when I woke up this morning I noticed in the Washington Post a headline, which said:

Emergency decree urged to speed arms efforts. Thirty Princeton scholars demand full mobilization to raise production.

Then I got the New York Times, which said:

Thirty-four educators urge full mobilization. Roosevelt asked to declare a state of emergency to speed defense program.

Naturally, I felt that that was a very important matter; and I read the articles with a great deal of interest, desiring to find out who these educators were. The incident reminded me of a saying of my grandfather. He said you could dress up a monkey, but his tail would stick out. That is true of this outfit. This is the same old crowd of individuals who have been active to get us into war from the very start. They are the same monkeys with their tails sticking out.

Who are they? I will delay the Senate for just a few moments to describe them. Who are the backers of this movement and the other steps of war?

First, they are a group of Anglophiles, educated by Cecil Rhodes to carry out Rhodes' dream of world empire. I will name some of them in just a few moments. (See exhibit A.)

Second, they are a group of individuals who have consistently been under the control of international finance.

Third, they are a group of refugees. I want to get that straight. They are a group of refugees who came over here to get America to have a haven of peace, and who are now trying to get America into war. Let me say about those refugees that I am getting sick and tired of individuals coming over from Europe to enjoy peace in America and trying to instill war propaganda to get us into the war over there, while they remain free and safe in America. Incidentally, I note we have Secretary Ickes—"Old Ick" himself—trying to get us to bring more refugees in here to stir up more war propaganda and take the jobs of American citizens.

LIST OF ANGLOPHILES

Let us see who some of them are who signed this statement:

Frank Aydelotte. Who is Frank Aydelotte? Former president of Swarthmore, and head—get this, he is not just a member but he is secretary—of the Rhodes Trustees in America. He is the man who directs Rhodes' money in the United States of America; I have discussed Aydelotte before. You may remember that I put in the RECORD sometime ago what Rhodes' dream was, to get the United States back into the British Empire.

Who else? We find Walter Phelps Hall, whom I remember as the author of pro-Tory books about England. He has been a Tory at heart, and his writings will show it. He is more interested in the Tory regime of England than he is in the democracy of the United States.

Whom else do we find? We find J. Douglas Brown and Winfield W. Riefler. Who are those two individuals, J. Douglas Brown and Winfield W. Riefler? They are both men who signed the manifesto asking that the United States go to war with Germany in June of 1940. They were unsuccessful in that desire but now they just want us to slip into the war. That is Brown and Riefler. Brown is 42, and Riefler is 43. They are not much beyond military age. If they are so much interested in this matter and want a declaration of war, why do they not enlist in the forces of Great Britain instead of trying to send some American boys over there to fight their battles? It is interesting that both are married and have dependents.

(See exhibit B.)

Who else is in that list? Benjamin Merritt, who was a lecturer at Oxford, England, in 1935.

This is one of the groups that is telling America what to do, educated by Cecil Rhodes. The Round Table, London, has told its readers of the Rhodes scholar angle in American affairs. No one would say every Rhodes scholar was in that group, but many are—far more than the country realizes.

Next is Henry N. Russell, another Oxford student, and an instructor at Cambridge University, England.

Are these not nice Americans, telling us what to do? Of course, they have no interest at all. Rhodes knew that you could get some of them by scholarships and his fortune has done so.

Next I find the name of Oswald Veblen, who has an honorary degree from Oxford, and wrote a series of books for Oxford.

John B. Whitton, educated in France, who was assigned to the League of Nations, and in Who's Who he still gives his address at Geneva, Switzerland.

Let us see the refugees. Are they American citizens? One is John A. Mackey, born in Great Britain. I do not know whether he is an American citizen or not, but Who's Who for 1940 shows that he did not even think enough of his American citizenship—if he is an American—to state that he is an American citizen. Yet he, a man born in Great Britain, is telling America what to do.

Who was the other one of that group who signed? John von Neumann, who was born in Hungary, but got away from Europe when this trouble started, and Who's Who for 1940 does not show that Mr. von Neumann thought enough of the United States of America to show that he held citizenship here, or had ever received the rights of citizenship. But he is important enough to these editors to use his name in an effort to involve us and bring us just a little closer to war.

(See exhibit H for complete list.)

Also we find a group down south who is propagandizing for war, and who is that group? Of course, they have other names, but it is the same monkey. It is the Frances Miller group that asked for the declaration of war crowd. It is headed by Frances Miller, who was sent up to New York to generate war propaganda.

This Southern group asks for "all aid" to England. "All aid" means military aid and that means war.

WARD CHENEY—GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Who do you suppose paid Mr. Miller's expenses? I will tell you. Ward Cheney paid them. Who is Mr. Cheney? Mr. Cheney sells parachutes to the United States Government for its armed forces; so he has an interest in the war.

Whom did Ward Cheney marry? He married Frances Davison. Who is Frances Davison? She is a sister of Henry P. Davison, of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. So it is easy to see the interest, when we look behind the scenes. But the press does not tell that. It tells the story only as though it were these great patriotic American citizens wanting us to take an interest for an ideal.

Who else was in that group which met down there? There was James Boyd, a Rhodes scholar. Whom did James Boyd marry? You have heard the name Lamont. He married Katherine Lamont.

Let us see who else was in that group down there. There was Barry Bingham, son of the former Ambassador to Great Britain, who has been British to the core since his father's appointment.

(See exhibit E.)

Then there was R. Preston Brooks, an Oxford scholar, a member of the Rhodes Scholar Education Committee. He passes upon who goes over to England, whose expenses are to be paid from the Cecil Rhodes funds.

Then there was Mark Ethridge, one of Bingham's employees, who naturally carried out his ideas.

There was Frank P. Graham, who really wants a declaration of war, a member of the policy committee of the William Allen White Committee.

Who else was there? Poor, insignificant little Herbert Agar, who came out for a declaration of war some time ago. He signed this request to give the President immediate wartime power.

Then there was Francis P. Miller, head of the Miller group of which I spoke a moment ago.

(See exhibit C.)

None of these is of military-service age. (See exhibit D.)

(See exhibit H for list.)

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate to give more facts, which I have available, but I say that in this group will be found Anglophile interests, there will be found financial war interests, and there will be found refugee interests.

As part of my remarks I ask to be permitted to insert certain records about the individuals to whom I have been referring, more than I could compile just in the few moments I had after reading the paper this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

WARTIME POWERS FOR PRESIDENT

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, these men to whom I have been referring want to give the President wartime power. Of course, so does William Allen White. But what did Mr. William Allen White think on the 19th day of October 1939 about the wartime powers of the President? Let me read from his Emporia Daily Gazette:

PRESIDENT'S WAR POWERS

The Constitution designated the President of the United States as the Commander in Chief of the armed forces of the country, but the Executive's war powers do not stop there. A generalissimo sitting in civilian clothes at the White House in case of a "national emergency," without additional authorization by Congress, may become a war dictator overnight.

Existing war powers vested in the President and other Government officials include:

1. Suspension of the 8-hour working day on Federal contracts.
2. Buying military supplies without advertising for bids.
3. Take over any or all transportation systems or commandeer American ships.

Under his emergency powers he has control of "any vessel, domestic or foreign, in the territorial waters of the United States" and has the right to "take possession" of such vessel. This was given in the wartime powers 23 years ago and remains on the statute books to be used by the President now.

That is what they want to do; they want to seize certain ships in the harbors of the United States and take them over so that they can let certain other ships go to a belligerent power. Mark that down, and see if that does not occur under the emergency powers. The editorial further states:

4. Assume control of utilities as generating plants, reservoirs, or conduits.
5. Suspend trading on security exchanges and control foreign exchange of gold and silver.
6. Regulate communication by radio and wire.
7. Suspend certain quota and production-control measures on agriculture.

Then the editorial says:

If war should come to America such emergency powers of the President would be only a hop-off to the consequences of "M" or mobilization day. The modern world has seen nothing of tyrannical dictatorship compared to what may come should Congress declare war and grant streamlined letters of "marque and reprisal."

I have been reading from Mr. William Allen White's paper of October 19, 1939. Now he wants the very thing that would set up dictatorship; and why? Because he is obsessed with this idea of getting America into the war, plunging her into it, to her destruction.

CONSCRIPTION OF LABOR

Mark this down as sure to happen if this continues. Already the drive is under way to get conscription of labor. I present for the RECORD as part of my remarks the statement I gave to the press on Saturday on that subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A propaganda campaign is underway to discredit labor and finally to force its conscription. I raise my voice to oppose this hysteria that will deal a deathblow to the rights of organized labor.

Mark this prediction. If this campaign continues to gain ground, there will be conscription of labor. Some of us called attention to that danger when we started down the road of conscription—peacetime conscription of men.

The freedom and rights of labor appear to be a possible casualty of war hysteria. Labor faces a real challenge and they will find that some of their political friends in Congress have been just that. I have constantly feared that labor was creating a government Frankenstein which would finally turn on it, and have opposed moves I felt would create such a situation.

Talk about labor interfering with defense, why there were certain manufacturers who refused to take Government orders until they were assured large profits and certain tax legislation. But certain newspapers and officials who are now calling for a drive against labor never opened their mouths about that delay. Certain industrialists would not move until Congress gave them what they wanted and wiped out the law that limited profits to 7 percent. Mr. Eaton, counsel for Mr. Knudsen, appeared before the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate, of which I am a member, and opposed limitation of profit on defense orders.

Let's give the people the whole story.

SPADE WORK FOR WAR IN UNIONS

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, we have noticed that certain outstanding labor leaders are over here telling us how England is fighting for democracy in the war. Let us look back to 1914 and let me quote from a letter written to Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, copy of which I have:

One line to congratulate you on the success of your work. It is just splendid and the chief very pleased and satisfied.

Then, announcing the approach of J. A. Seddon, he said he is "going to do splendid spade work in the American trade unions."

SIR WALTER CITRINE

So they sent Mr. Seddon, a member of Parliament, to the United States in order to do spade work in the American union movement; and that is what they are doing today. That is what Sir Walter Citrine was doing here last week. They are doing spade work in the American union movement in order to get labor behind the war drive.

Now let me read what Sir Cecil Spring-Rice wrote to Lord Newton in another letter of which I have a copy:

Two labor members are over now—

Referring to the United States—

Two labor members are over now and are doing a good deal of useful talking in private lines * * * none in public.

Get that. Here is a letter from Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British Ambassador, to Lord Newton, about these labor members over here during the World War—that is, the war of 1914 to 1918:

Two labor members are over now and are doing a good deal of useful talking in private lines * * * none in public.

(See exhibit G.)

Why do I take the floor of the Senate day after day in order to bring this before the American people? I do it because I want the facts to be known. I want the people to know that they are being taken into the war under subterfuge and dishonesty. Others may choose their course. I choose mine—to fight with all my power to keep my country at peace, to keep it out of the shambles of Europe, to preserve our democracy here.

GETTING READY FOR EUROPEAN WAR

What did Lieutenant General Drum say last Saturday? Did he say we were going to fight a war over here? No; he said they are training American boys to fight a foreign war whenever and wherever they are needed. He set up one reason to fight war, the protection of Anglo-American investments. Then think of telling the American people, "No American boys will fight on foreign soil. We are just going to declare war in order to scare Germany."

Of course, that would be so ridiculous, if it were not so tragic, that it would be laughable. If we are going into the war, we are going to send the American boys, as Lieutenant General Drum said, wherever and whenever they are needed, and American boys will shed their blood in France or elsewhere in Europe, in Asia, in a needless war, because this is a needless war so far as the United States of America is concerned, a war generated by finance, by blood money. I have given fact after fact to the Senate to show it, and what do I find? I find that certain individuals who have been active in this pro-war drive have in the last month received Government contracts from the Army and Navy. I have never made a statement yet which I could not prove. I can prove these.

I wish to say that America should know that this drive is generated by such groups as the ones I have discussed. But what does the press do? The press wants to put another front on it, to dress up the old scarecrow so that it will look like a new scarecrow, but it is the same old group, it is the same old monkey with the same old tail sticking out. It is the war crowd under a new front.

RHODES—EMPIRE BUILDER

Sir Cecil Rhodes, English empire builder, wrote many wills. In one of these wills he sets out the objects of expenditure of his money in these words:

"The extension of British rule throughout the world; the colonization by British subjects of all lands where the means of livelihood are attainable by energy, labor, and enterprise; and especially the occupation by British settlers of the entire continent of Africa, the Holy Land, the Valley of the Euphrates, the islands of Cyprus and Candia, the whole of South America, the islands of the Pacific not heretofore possessed by Great Britain, the whole of the Malay archipelago, the seaboard of China and Japan, the ultimate recovery of the United States of America as an integral part of the British Empire."

In his last will he sets out this:

"Whereas I consider that the education of young colonists at one of the universities in the United Kingdom is of great advantage to them for giving breadth to their views for their instruction in life and manners and for instilling into their minds the advantage to the colonies as well as to the United Kingdom of the retention of the unity of the Empire."

Rhodes was a Briton. He loved his country. He loved the British Empire. He always hoped for solidarity between England and the United States. His scholarships aided in that goal.

WAR MANIFESTO SIGNERS

Statement made by Senator HOLT on floor of Senate, June 12, 1940, about those who signed war manifesto, part of whom are in the present group referred to in speech today:

"Speaking of the individuals who want us to go to war, the other day we saw a list of 30 of them in the newspapers. The headline was War on Reich Urged to Crush Threat to United States. Thirty of them were named. Let me give the ages of some of these men. Probably they are able-bodied men. Here are their ages:

"Mr. Stringfellow Barr is 43 years old. Any man with a name like that should frighten anybody. He is not beyond helping the Allies, if he wants to declare war.

"Who else? J. Douglas Brown is 42. He could serve a little while and not be worn out.

"Who else? George Watts Hill is 38. He is near the draft age. It will be noticed that none of them is within the draft limit of 35.

"Let us see who else. George Fort Milton is 45. He could serve 6 months over there without hurting himself.

"Herbert S. Agar is 42. He could serve a year or two without hurting himself.

"Of course Frank R. Kent is too old.

"Lewis Mumford is 44. Let us go down the line.

"Stacy May, director of the Rockefeller Foundation, is only 44.

"I did not get the ages of all of them.

"John Lloyd Balderston is 50.

"James F. Curtis is 62.

"Edwin F. Gay is 72.

"Marion H. Hedges is 51.

"Rt. Rev. Henry W. Hobson is 49.

"LeRoy Hodges is 51.

"Calvin B. Hoover, professor of economics at Duke University, is only 43. I am willing to let him serve 2 years over there if he wants to.

"Edwin P. Hubble is 50. He is a little too old, but he could stop a bullet just as quickly as could a boy of 18.

"Let us see who else. Walter Millis is 41. It might interest the Senate to know that when Walter Millis wrote his book, The Road to War, it was edited, and all uncomplimentary references to J. Pierpont Morgan were taken out before it was published. He is only 41. Of course, he is writing editorials in the New York Herald Tribune, saying that we should become a belligerent.

"Who else? Winfield W. Riefler is 43. That is a good name for war. I have no objection to his going.

"Whitney H. Shepardson is 49.

"Admiral Standley is 67.

"Those are the men who are telling American boys that they should go over and stop Hitler. If these individuals are interested in stopping Hitler I do not think there will be any objection by the Senate to their volunteering. But I wish to say that a man who advocates sending American boys to the battlefields of Europe, and who will not himself enlist, is a cowardly traitor to his country. If I had enough feeling about the matter, and believed that the situation is what the administration says it is, and the danger is what they say it is, I would have enough guts to offer my body to the same service for which I would send another American boy to his death.

"Oh, no; these individuals are armchair patriots, who sit back and tell others how to win the war and tell the boys, 'Stand your ground and meet the tanks. We will stand back and tell you what the tanks are going to do tomorrow.'"

EXHIBIT C

THE MILLER "WAR" GROUP

This southern conference move is one of those acts which can be traced to the Miller group, whose history is recorded below. It is one of the most belligerent of the pro-war groups and was very active in the destroyer deal, in the letters to the newspapers known as the Balderston letters, as well as coordinator of the different committees and organizations lined up in the war drive. Bingham, Agar, and Miller have tried to slip this one over as a new thing, but it is the same old crowd under a new front.

Where formed: On July 11, 1940, Lewis Douglas, president of the billion-dollar Mutual Life Insurance Co. (closely affiliated with J. P. Morgan & Co. interests) and former president of McGill University (Canada), as well as official of the American Cyanamid Co. (which had war contracts with Great Britain), was host to a group of individuals who were interested in getting us in the war, although they made no public statement of that purpose.

The purpose was to set up a central organization to aid the different groups who were friendly to the cause of our participation.

It was decided that Frances Miller, an organizer for the Council on Foreign Relations should direct the office. He was set up in New York City (11 West Forty-second Street) to direct the campaign. The biggest check for the cost came from Ward Cheney, manufacturer of silk parachutes who had sold his products to the armed forces of the United States and whose wife was Frances Davison, sister of H. P. Davison, present partner of Morgan. This was not his first or last contribution to the war cause. He was one of those who helped pay for the newspaper advertisements over the country sponsored by the William Allen White committee.

Two weeks later, a group met at the Century Club in New York to work out further plans. Those present were Robert S. Allen, of the Pearson and Allen column; Joseph Alsop, distant cousin of the President and well known for his desire to be in with the right social crowd as well as coauthor of the column attacked by Senator BARKLEY as a purveyor of malicious falsehoods; Ulric Bell, Washington correspondent of the pro-war Louisville Courier Journal (owned by the Bingham interests—the heirs of the former Ambassador to Great Britain); Barry Bingham, son of the ex-Ambassador and active in all pro-war organizations; Ward Cheney; Dr. Henry Sloan Coffin, studied in Great Britain; Clark M. Eichelberger, executive director, William Allen White Committee, and secretary, League of Nations Association; Harold K. Guinsburg, contributor to William Allen White; George Watts Hill, advocate of declaration of war; Bishop Henry Hobson, also an advocate for declaration of war and one of the signers of the famous war manifesto; Ernest M. Hopkins, president of Dartmouth; Geoffrey Parsons, writer and director of New York Herald Tribune, whose editorial last summer called for intervention into the war; Frank L. Polk, assistant to Secretary of State Lansing during the World War and whose Lansing memoirs shows to be active for our participation in that war before 1917; Whitney Shepherdson, co-worker of Miller and one of the signers of the war manifesto on Council of Foreign Relations; Robert E. Sherwood, playwright and very active for America to enter the war, author of stop-Hitler advertisements and speaker for William Allen White Committee; Admiral William Standley, former Navy official who also signed war manifesto and active for war; and Dr. Henry P. Van Dusen, educated in Great Britain and extremely pro-British, and Miller.

Although not present, many advisers were called into the discussion from time to time. A few were: Dean Acheson, close friend of the President and the author of the letter advocating transfer of destroyers, and whose law firm represents interests affected by war; Dr. James R. Angell; Hamilton Fish Armstrong, known for his collective security writings; John L. Balderston, who was the liaison man between the British Embassy and the war groups and who has a home in London, England, as well as employee of Public Information Bureau to Great Britain; Dr. James B. Conant, whose record has been discussed before as active as a Morgan spokesman and who the Harvard Crimson said was trying to "build a superhighway straight to Armageddon"; Col. William Donovan, flying emissary of Colonel Knox, active in pro-war circles; Lewis Douglas, who called the first meeting; Allen Dulles, of the law firm of Sullivan & Cromwell, who represents many foreign interests; Henry R. Luce, owner of Time and very pro-war, whose start is tied with Thomas Lamont, of J. P. Morgan & Co.; Henry Pringle, advocate of breaking off diplomatic relations with Germany; Walter Wanger, financial supporter of the William Allen White committee.

It was decided to "put heat" on Washington.

Herbert Agar, Ward Cheney, Miller, and Eichelberger were sent to talk to the "powers." They conferred with the President, Vice President-Elect Henry Wallace, and Admiral Stark, Chief of Naval Operations, about transfer of the destroyers. A press campaign was to be directed by Alsop, Allen, Balderston, as well as the others who would be "all O. K. when we talk to them," as one well-known financier said.

It will be recalled that this was part of the trick which William Allen White spoke about in his blundering speech in New York. This was a part of the smart trick to get public support. It was aided by the radio and press campaign. In this campaign the services of Colonel Donovan in his speech from Chicago, Admiral Standley (war advocate), and Maury Maverick were called into action.

It is a known fact that Archibald McLeish, Librarian of Congress, broached the work of the committee with Russell Davenport, adviser of Wendell Willkie, as to the attitude of Willkie because of the fear by the President that if it were brought into the campaign that it would be too dangerous. MacLeish has been the go-between many times in that capacity.

The destroyer deal was put over. Now, the Miller influence is seen cropping out in this conference at Southern Pines, N. C. The present drive is to get convoy service for American ships into and through the war zones which can mean nothing else than war. That is its purpose.

The Miller group is financed by those who are making "blood money" out of the war. The southern conference move is part of his engineered work.

EXHIBIT D

ARE THEY OF MILITARY AGE?

A hurried check of those whose names are listed in press stories referred to in speech shows that none are eligible for military service. Practically all are far beyond the age limit and those under 50 are married with dependents. The list follows:

Burt Struthers, 58.
James Derieux, 49 (married with children).
Mark Ethridge, 44 (married with children).
Frank P. Graham, 54.
William T. Hodges, 59.
Ernest Ives, 53.
Louis Jaffe, 52.
Frank Aydelotte, 60.
Edward Earle, 46 (married with child).
Frank A. Fetter, 77.
Herbert S. Langfeld, 61.
John N. Northrup, 49 (married with children).
Robert K. Root, 63.
Edward Sampson, 49 (children as dependents).
Carl TenBroeck, 55.
John B. Whitton, 48 (married with child).
Robert P. Brooks, 59.
H. G. Cochran, 55.
George A. Dreyfous, 46.
Sidney Garrison, 53.
Luther Eisenhart, 64.
Christian Gauss, 62.
George W. Hill, 39 (married with children).
Calvin B. Hoover, 43 (married with children).
Virginius Dabney, 39 (married with children).
J. Douglas Brown, 42 (married with children).
Walter P. Hall, 56.
John A. Mackay, 51.
Marston Morse, 48 (married with children).
Winfield Reifler, 43 (married with children).
Henry N. Russell, 63.
Duane Stuart, 67.
Oswald Veblen, 60.
Thomas J. Wertenbaker, 61.

EXHIBIT G

PROPAGANDA FOR WAR IN LABOR GROUPS

Mr. J. A. Seddon, chairman of the general council of the British Workers' League, was the individual referred to by Cecil Spring-Rice, British Ambassador. In his letters to Lord Newton and to Sir Edward Grey he refers to the work of Seddon in the trade-unions in the United States. Lord Tyrrell wrote to Sir Cecil praising this work.

Mr. Seddon spoke in the United States for the National Security League, the infamous pro-war organization of the last World War and somewhat of a counterpart to the William Allen White committee in this one. His work was, as Sir Cecil said, "to do spadework" with the unions. If anyone would read his speeches and compare them with the speeches of Sir Walter Citrine, who is over here now doing the same sort of "spadework," they could hardly tell the difference. For instance, these are references to one of his speeches:

"Today British labor wholeheartedly supports the war against Germany. We have learned that Prussian militarism must be destroyed (the word Hitlerism is now substituted). * * * Germany started the war. England and her allies did their best to avoid it. * * * I saw that there had been a deliberate conspiracy of the Kaiser's (now Hitler's) government that had stretched over a number of years to plunge the world in war. The idea of 'Deutschland uber alles' dominated the minds of the German leaders. * * * Germany's purpose was to secure world domination (that has been lifted bodily in the present speeches). * * * We realize that Prussianism and freedom cannot exist side by side (refer to speech at New Orleans except substitute Hitlerism). * * * We found that the Prussian Army in Belgium were so terrible that they could only be whispered from man to man. We found that the reign of terror in the conquered territory—the burning of villages, the shooting of peaceful priests, schoolmasters and doctors as hostages, the outraging of young girls and married women, and the wholesale destruction of homes was the systematic and deliberate policy of the German Government. * * * It was in those days that British labor made up its mind that no sacrifice was too great, no struggle too long, no effort too mighty to settle this menace of the world (refer to speech of last week in Washington) * * *," and so on and so on. Almost duplicate to the speeches of 1940.

Practically all of the propaganda moves of 1914–17 that aided in plunging the United States into the World War are again being used, some identical, others being changed slightly to avoid detection.

At the annual conventions of the American Federation of Labor, it is the usual thing for delegates from the British Trades Union Congress to meet with representatives of the federation. But during the World War (before our entrance), in their place was sent Mr. James Seddon (discussed above) and Mr. Albert Bellamy. They attacked German propaganda in America and spoke of the world-wide machination of German influence but the delegates at the convention did not know that they had been sent specifically at the request of Sir Cecil Spring-Rice to propagandize or as he said "to do spadework" in the American trade-union movement for war.

Is Sir William Citrine's mission the same?

THE LOTUS EATERS OF 1940—EDITORIAL IN LOUISVILLE COURIER-JOURNAL

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I am neither a European refugee nor do I consider myself to be a monkey merely because some newspapers may have mentioned the position I have taken with respect to certain matters; but when listening to the remarks of the Senator from West Virginia I could not help thinking of certain remarks about labor made a few days ago in a speech delivered by Mr. Hitler, in which he said he was going to dominate the world and conquer the world by using labor as gold. The only way I know of that anyone can do that is by making labor slave labor. I do not believe the people of this country or that labor of this country will tolerate being considered as gold. Those who labor are human beings, and do not consider themselves as slaves, and I hope they never will.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks an editorial published in the Louisville Courier-Journal of November 17, 1940, entitled "The Lotus Eaters of 1940."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Louisville Courier-Journal of November 17, 1940]

THE LOTUS EATERS OF 1940

It is 10 days since election. America has had time to recover from her descents into the opium dens of politics. But she seems to have caught the drug habit; she shrinks from returning to the cold ugliness of life.

It was fun to turn our backs on the world blizzard, to behave for a time as if nothing mattered but the fairy-tale wickedness of Roosevelt or of Willkie. But during our days of indulgence the blizzard grew more severe and now it is not fun to face again into that freezing wind. Like the lotus eaters of old we weakly cry:

"Let us alone. Time driveth onward fast,
And in a little while our lips are dumb.
Let us alone. What is it that will last?
All things are taken from us, and become
Portions and parcels of the dreadful past.
Let us alone. What pleasure can we have
To war with evil? Is there any peace
In ever climbing up the climbing wave?
All things have rest, and ripen toward the grave
In silence—ripen, fall, and cease:
Give us long rest or death, dark death, or dreamful ease."

There is no rest for anyone who faces reality today, no peace, no abiding pleasure. Those who cry for peace when peace is impossible are the modern lotus eaters, the peace mongers who may yet succeed in drenching our land in blood. There is no reason why war need come to these shores, but the peace mongers are doing their best to bring it here, the silly lotus eaters who dream that all is well because our last allies have not yet bled to death.

Fate gave us the chance to protect America thousands of miles away, on the cold North Sea and in the mist above the British Isles. Fate offered us as allies a noble people. But our peacemongers ask only for "long rest or death, dark death, or dreamful ease." In the world of Adolf Hitler "dreamful ease" cannot be had for the asking. "Dark death" is the one drink for the lotus eaters of 1940; it is the potion they are preparing for their betrayed country.

This is all the more discouraging because the winged victory herself is wooing us today, offering her favors cheap, but for the last time. If we reject these advances, we shall not see her face again until we too have known the toil and tears and sweat of Churchill's England. Freedom and peace can be had today at the cost of a little courage, a little breadth of mind and spirit. Tomorrow the cost may be years of total effort on two oceans and across the two Americas. Tomorrow the cost may be so great that we of little faith refuse to pay it, preferring retreat and frustration to such prolonged pain.

Today we need only admit a total emergency, an uncompromising intention to see the war won, and the game is ours. Tomorrow it may be forever too late to win the easy way, or to win at all.

The bravest men alive are on our side today, prepared to do almost all the fighting and take almost all the loss. By summer they may be gone, as France is gone, leaving us alone in a contemptuous world. Our caution will have landed us in the old dilemma; either defeat, or victory at the cost of rivers of blood. It is our peacemongers who are driving us to that awful choice.

All winter the resources of the continent of Europe will be used, 24 hours of every day, to prepare the machinery for the murder of England. The enemy is relentless, untiring, filled with a vicious zeal. He owns Europe and most of Africa, and his friends have the upper hand in Asia. What he began in the spring of 1940 he intends to finish in the spring of 1941. We alone can surely stop him, but we cannot be certain of success unless we go "all out" at once.

The American people decided long ago that they would like Britain to win. That decision, with the small results that have followed from it, is not enough. We must now decide that we insist on a British victory, come what may. If we reach that pitch of determination today, Hitler's game is ended. If we reach it in 2 or 3 months, we may be too late.

But what can we do, say the lotus eaters, that we are not already doing? Haven't we appropriated a lot of money? Haven't we told the Germans that we don't like them? Haven't we traded 50 destroyers to the British? Those who are not yet weakened with "the yellow lotus dust," not yet ripe for peacemongering, know there is much we can do.

1. We can repeal the Neutrality Act, a law which looks more sickly with every day's experience. It has become a disgrace, an admission that we do not mean business in opposing Hitler.

2. We can repeal the Johnson Act, a law which was passed on the lying assumption that we got into the last war to recover our debts, and which is preserved on the outrageous hope that only love of cash could move us to strong action today.

With those laws out of the way, our chances to help Britain would be increased manyfold. We could begin giving (not selling) the goods with which Britishers are helping to save our world. We could begin using American ships to take to the British Isles the machines without which the war must go against us in the spring.

3. We could use American warships to convoy boats across the full extent of our declared neutrality zone. Or we could convoy all the way to British ports.

4. We can make easy the enlistment in the armies of the British Empire of large numbers of American aviators and mechanics. Twenty thousand such volunteers in Britain or the Near East by next spring might turn the tide of war and save our world from years of agony.

5. We can promote some form of understanding among the English-speaking peoples, an alliance or a union looking toward a peace of justice in which all free men can share equally. We shall not conquer the satanic daring of Hitler until we lift our imaginations to an equivalent daring in the service of man.

All these are actions that can still be described as "short of war," if we insist on clinging to that ambiguous, unworthy phrase. Most of us know that war, in the modern Hitlerian sense, is being waged against America, and that America must fight back or be ruined. Whom are we afraid of that we dare not say these things out loud, unambiguously, and at once? Instead of the soft song of the appeasing lotus eaters, America needs a voice like John Milton's to cry unceasingly:

"Awake, arise, or be forever fallen."

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. GIBSON. I yield.

Mr. HOLT. Was that editorial written by Herbert Agar, who has asked for our entrance into the war?

Mr. GIBSON. No; I am sorry to inform the Senator that editorial was not written by Herbert Agar.

Mr. HOLT. Does the Senator know who wrote it?

Mr. GIBSON. I believe it was written by Ulric Bell.

Mr. HOLT. Does not Mr. Agar dominate the policy of the Louisville Courier-Journal?

Mr. GIBSON. No. I think it is dominated by the gentleman the Senator spoke of, Mr. Bingham.

Mr. HOLT. He is the owner of the Courier-Journal.

Mr. GIBSON. Yes; and Mr. Bingham, I believe, directs the editorial policy of the newspaper. Of course, he may be an Anglophile, but I do not think that is a very terrible curse.

Mr. HOLT. I wish to say to the Senator, and I say it in all friendliness, as he knows, that I agree thoroughly with him that it would be a terrific calamity if the philosophy of labor being used for the purpose he described, to weaken or to depress the markets of the world, became widespread. I agree with the Senator thoroughly in that respect, but I do not see the need of conscripting men over here under the present circumstances in the hope of trying to correct the evils resulting from European power politics, which have caused Europe to be engaged in war for 400 years.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I do not know that I have heard anyone anywhere suggest that we conscript labor. On the contrary, I believe that labor can better serve our country in this time of need under a democracy, with short hours and good working conditions than by being driven under the whiplash. And certainly, if I interpreted Mr. Hitler's speech correctly, he said he was going to use labor as gold.

Mr. HOLT. I wish to say to the Senator from Vermont that I do not believe in Hitlerism in Europe nor do I believe in Hitlerism in America.

Mr. GIBSON. I am glad the Senator from West Virginia and I agree in that respect.

USE OF CERTAIN PARTS OF PUBLIC DOMAIN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair takes the opportunity to say that next Thursday he will move that the Senate take up for consideration House bill 9705, Calendar No. 2238, to make more effective use of certain parts of the public domain, and for other purposes.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, as in executive session, on behalf of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. WALSH], I report favorably the nomination of Maj. Gen. Thomas Holcomb to be the major general commandant of the Marine Corps for a period of 4 years from the first day of December 1940. As in executive session, I ask for the present consideration of the nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none. The nomination will be read.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Maj. Gen. Thomas Holcomb to be the major general commandant of the Marine Corps for a period of 4 years from the 1st day of December 1940.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. MINTON. I ask that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified.

THE LIGHT OF LIBERTY

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, as we approach this day of days—glad Christmas Day—it is our fervent hope that liberty and peace shall again prevail throughout the world. Let us keep the light of good will shining in our eyes, our hearts, our hearths, our schools, our churches, our voluntary, fraternal, and civic institutions in order that the light of liberty shall never die out in us.

I presume that every Senator has received a letter from Bernarr Macfadden, such as has come to me, in which he said:

> Last year at this time Liberty magazine asked Americans to answer Europe's blackout by making every home, every office building, every factory bright with light on Christmas Eve.

Once again he makes this timely suggestion, which reminds me of an address I made at the vocational school at Mooseheart, Ill., which I repeat in part:

> Many years ago, out in the Orient, an English school teacher wrote a few lines of verse. Years passed. Then the King, in Buckingham palace, read those lines, and when the next Christmas came he repeated them over the radio. This is what he read: "I said to a man at the gate of the years, 'Give me a light, that I may tread safely into the unknown,' and he replied, 'Go out into the darkness and place your hand into the hand of God. That shall be to you better than a light and safer than a known way.'"

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker pro tempore had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (S. J. Res. 302) authorizing the President to invite foreign countries to participate in the Pan American Cotton Congress, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, as in executive session, laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

RECESS TO THURSDAY

Mr. MINTON. I move that the Senate take a recess until Thursday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Thursday, December 19, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, DECEMBER 16, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. MCCORMACK.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our blessed Father in Heaven, infinite in wisdom, power, and goodness, we pause at the altar of prayer. We thank Thee for the Christ, who is the divine heartthrob from the dawn of time. We pray Thee to bring all men into the kingdom of love, which forever flames beyond the bounds of sense. From the simplest to the wisest, draw us nearer that epoch and epic when we shall behold the glorified cross and understand that the enchanted pursuit of life is brotherly love, deep and strong, and which is the measure of man's greatness. O God, humanity, grown so very weary by its long, long tramp down through the ages, bewildered and indicted because of its unbrotherly hatreds and unfilial relations, we humbly beseech Thee to let its darkness be dissolved in the foreglow of Mary's holy child. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, December 12, 1940, was read and approved.

RESIGNATION

The Speaker pro tempore laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., December 12, 1940.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I hereby resign my office as Representative in the Congress of the United States from the Second District of Louisiana, effective at the close of the day December 15, 1940.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

PAUL H. MALONEY,

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, how much time has been requested after disposition of matters on the Speaker's table today?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In answer to the gentleman's inquiry, 40 minutes.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of that time I may address the House for 20 minutes on the subject of the St. Lawrence Inland Waterway.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON] may have permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD, and to include a speech of introduction of Speaker RAYBURN at a banquet in Dallas last week.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT]?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER]?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we have been going along here recessing 3 days at a time. We just recess as far apart as we can from one day to the other. We have come to a place where we ought to find out whether or not we are going to transact any more business. May I ask the distinguished leader on the other side of the House why it is we are going to recess now until Wednesday? Why not just recess until tomorrow?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, this request is made after conference with the minority leader of the House and is in accordance with an agreement with him.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I do not want to quarrel with the leadership on either side here, but I do want a little explanation, and I think the Members of the House should know. I understand this Walter-Logan bill is still outstanding, waiting for the President's approval or disapproval; is that correct?

Mr COOPER. The gentleman is correct. The bill has passed the House and Senate and, as far as I am advised, it is now before the President for his consideration. In all frankness, may I say to the gentleman that according to press reports there is some indication the bill may not receive Executive approval. An understanding has been reached between the Speaker pro tempore, the majority leader, and the minority leader that in case the bill is returned without Executive approval it will be presented to the House for consideration on Wednesday.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Do I understand that on the very last day and the very last hour the President can hold it the House will have a chance to consider it?

Mr. COOPER. I am not aware of the gentleman's understanding.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Of course, the House may consider it any time after that if it wishes, but that is the last day the President can veto it. However, it is not the last time the House can consider it.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The President is withholding his action until Wednesday, which is the last day. It left the House on December 2, as I remember it.

Mr. COOPER. Of course, the President has been away on official business.

Mr. REES of Kansas. On official business?

Mr. COOPER. Yes; on official business.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I want to propound a parliamentary inquiry to the Speaker in connection with this matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] yield for that purpose?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. It is my understanding that this so-called Walter-Logan bill will come back here day after tomorrow with the President's veto, and that we will be called upon to vote at that time on that veto. Of course, I am for sustaining the veto. But if there are not enough Members here to form a quorum, we who are in favor of sustaining the veto win, regardless of how the vote stands, do we not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair may say, of course, that a quorum is necessary to be present to determine finally any question that may come before the House.

Mr. RANKIN. If there is not a quorum present, the veto could not be overridden if every Member present voted to override it?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And neither could it be sustained.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; it would be sustained if there were not a quorum present. The veto stands until it is overridden.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to answer the inquiry, because that is a matter that rests with the House.

Mr. COX. I suppose the gentleman's hope is that the President's veto will not be overridden because a quorum is not present,

Mr. RANKIN. I am suggesting they better be here if they want to vote on it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER]?

Mr. REES of Kansas. If there is an agreement among the leadership on both sides of the House and the Speaker pro tempore to recess until Wednesday, of course, I do not want to be the only Member on this side to upset it.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, as I understand, we expect a veto message to be in here late tomorrow or Wednesday. The first time the House could possibly vote on the veto would be Wednesday. Those who want expedition certainly have been favored when the leadership has definitely stated that the vote will come Wednesday; therefore the vote is not being delayed. Wednesday is the earliest time a vote can be had if the President takes the full time allowed him in which to act on the Walter-Logan bill.

Mr. COCHRAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to offer a suggestion. I believe if the veto message does come in the Members of this House should have an opportunity to read that veto message and study it so that we will learn the reasons for the veto message and can vote intelligently, and not do as the House did when we agreed to the Senate amendments, when hardly nobody knew what was in the Senate amendments, and few know now.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman understands, of course, that according to the Constitution the House is supposed to act upon a vetoed bill the minute it is read in the House.

Mr. COCHRAN. By unanimous consent, the vote on the vetoed bill can go over until we can all read the message Wednesday and study it and vote intelligently, provided a veto message does come in. That is the point I am making. While the gentleman from Massachusetts was away we agreed to the Senate amendments to the Logan-Walter bill, and I insist not five Members of this House understood what the Senate amendments were, and I reassert they do not understand them now.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman know that we must be in session to receive the veto message on Wednesday, because that is the last day the President can send it here?

Mr. COCHRAN. It is the last day for the President to send a veto message, but it is not the last day for the House to act on it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. We should be here to receive it, and under the Constitution we are required to act immediately.

Mr. COCHRAN. Not necessarily. There are several ways that action can be delayed by unanimous consent. One is to postpone the vote until Thursday, and another is to refer the message to the Judiciary Committee. Many times veto messages have been sent to committees and never heard of again.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That has been done too often in the past.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, the Washington Post this morning carries a cartoon showing that the President is back from his vacation and all the defense-program problems are piled up on the table waiting for his attention. The President having finished his vacation and others who have been on a vacation having returned, there would seem to be no reason why defense problems should not receive consideration.

The real emergency seems to have been an election for a third term. That having been secured, perhaps now the safety of the Nation may be considered. That we may consider it, I object to further adjournments.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of the legislative business of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein an important article entitled "South America and the Coming Era of Air Transportation."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

WALTER-LOGAN BILL

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I have just arrived in the Chamber. I do not know what has preceded here today. I gather, however, from the observations to which I have listened that it is expected that the President will probably veto the Walter-Logan bill, or anyhow, that something will happen here Wednesday which may require the presence of a quorum. It has been stated or intimated here by those in a position to have advance judgment or a good guess, or whatever it is, that this veto message will come up Wednesday.

I should like to serve notice or to advise, whichever would be the most diplomatic and polite way to state it, that we are going to insist on a quorum being present here to dispose of this veto message, and if the gentlemen who have the responsibility and power of leadership would advise their respective groups that that is going to happen we would have a chance to dispose of this matter Wednesday.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. As far as we are concerned, we have already notified the Members on our side.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Then I add my notification to the Members of the House.

[Here the gavel fell.]

MINE-INSPECTION MEASURE

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include in my remarks excerpts from a letter written to Members of Congress by Thomas Kennedy, secretary-treasurer, United Mine Workers of America, of date December 9, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, the sabotage by this Congress of the mine-inspection measure is to be deplored. Many of the withdrawals from the discharge petition have been brought about by local commercial bodies to whom the dividends of the mine shareholder is of more importance than the life of the miner-father.

History is full of cases where the capitalistic dollar has been looked upon with more sanctity than the life of the father who was killed while struggling to make a living for his wife and children. Shame upon such unclean work as is at this moment being practiced by the so-called commercial bodies.

I have said before, and I repeat now, that if one father is saved to his wife and children by this act, then that is sufficient reason for its enactment.

Mr. Speaker, the following letter has been sent to Members of Congress by the secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers of America:

UNITED MINE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Washington, D. C., December 9, 1940.

To the honorable the Members of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

GENTLEMEN:

* * * * * * *

There is a wholesale slaughter of American men going on in this country. * * *

You gentlemen have it within your power to bring this slaughter to an end.

When a violent mine explosion ripped through the workings of the Nelms mine near Cadiz, Ohio, less than 2 weeks ago 32 mine workers were killed, making a total of 1,580 mine workers who have been killed in the mines of this country since the Neely-Keller Federal mine-inspection bill (S. 2420) was first introduced in Congress.

How much longer are you going to permit this slaughter to continue? How many more bodies of American mine workers must be piled up on this already huge sacrificial altar before you will act to end this carnage?

America is in the throes of a gigantic defense program. Our Government is ever on the alert to prevent sabotage in our defense industries, and justly so.

Coal is a vital defense industry, basically and otherwise. Yet faulty mine inspection is sabotaging this defense industry and taking its toll not in wrecked machinery but in dead American mine workers.

We do not claim that passage of the Neely-Keller mine-inspection bill will arbitrarily end mine explosions. But we do claim that its enactment into law will result in a huge decrease in coal-mine fatalities.

You Members of the House have it within your power to end this wholesale slaughter by forcing S. 2420 to the floor of the House for a vote. You can affix your signature to the petition now resting on the Speaker's desk to bring this bill to the floor for a vote.

Why stand on ceremony on the signing of a petition when thousands of human lives are at stake?

We beg of you to act on this bill favorably, and now, in the name of their thousands of widows and orphans that these 1,580 mine workers shall not have died in vain.

Very respectfully yours,

THOMAS KENNEDY,
Secretary-Treasurer.

ST. JOSEPHS HOSPITAL, LOWELL, MASS.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by the Very Reverend L. G. Bachand, O. M. I., at the centennial celebration banquet of the Lowell Corporation Hospital, now called St. Josephs Hospital, which was held at the Lowell Memorial Auditorium, Lowell, Mass., on December 3.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it was a source of much pleasure to me to have had a small part in that celebration, and I take great pride in telling the House of Representatives that St. Josephs Hospital has the distinction of being the first industrial hospital of the country. An added distinction is the fact that this hospital established the first children's ward in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, in the year 1840. Truly this was a forerunner of what we today call social security. It has often been said that corporations have no souls, but these textile corporations banded together to operate this hospital proving that these corporations had not only a soul but a heart as well. One hundred years is a long time for any business to exist. In the case of this hospital, it has been a century of devoted service to the community, of charity to all who needed charity, and of progress in the field of medicine and surgery. My wishes of another century of success go to this most worthy institution. The address of the Very Reverend Bachand follows:

Mr. President, my dear friends, may I ask you to consider with me for a few minutes a picture truly beautiful, edifying, and inspiring? It is strictly a product of greater Lowell, made by peoople of this city and belonging exclusively to Lowell and the neighboring towns.

Exactly 100 years ago, of their own volition, absolutely free from all pressure—political, social, or legal—and at a cost of untold sacrifices of time and money, a group of Lowell manufacturers banded together for a truly noble purpose. And what was this purpose? Greater business efficiency? No; it was of a far nobler order. Was it social security? Yes; and more than that. Was it philanthropy? Yes; philanthropy of the finest type, and still more than that. The purpose of these manufacturers of Lowell was nothing less than charity in the true sense of the word.

They decided to establish and maintain a hospital, not for themselves, not for their families, not for their intimate, personal friends, but for their employees. As is clearly indicated in the bylaws they adopted, it was not to be a mere repair shop for used and broken human tools, as laborers are too often called; not a money-saving device, but for the convenience and the comfort of their employees when sick; to bring them medical and surgical care when needed; and, mark well, they freely and solemnly bound themselves to contribute from their own pockets funds necessary for that purpose. Thus was conceived and dedicated the hospital whose centenary we so gladly celebrate today.

This hospital enjoys the enviable distinction of being the first industrial hospital of the country. Long before the advent of the New Deal, and even of organized social workers, it marked the first awakening of social responsibility of industry in this country. For 27 years after its inauguration it was the only hospital in Lowell. In March 1931 Dr. John Lovett Morse, professor of pediatrics at Harvard Medical School, in his address before the one hundred and fiftieth annual meeting of the Massachusetts Medical Society, states "that a children's ward with 15 beds was established at the Lowell Corporation Hospital in 1840 and was the first of its kind in the State." Moreover, its records show that as early as August 25, 1887, a new ward for contagious cases was opened.

True to its ideal, the hospital, from its very beginning, flung wide open its "portals of mercy" to all employees of the textile corporations and to all members of their families. A few years later it generously extended its charity to all who needed it.

Although the population of Lowell in 1840 was only 21,000 and was not hospital-minded, by 1930 this institution had hospitalized 62,127 patients and, besides, had given 550,000 treatments to 138,000 others. All these patients received the very best that medical science and Christian charity had then to offer.

Charles Cowley, the Lowell historian, writes: "This hospital ever since it was established, has been under the medical superintendence of one of the ablest physicians and surgeons in the country, Dr. Gilman Kimball. (Dr. Gilman Kimball has the distinction of being the first surgeon to perform successfully the removal of the whole of the uterus based upon a correctly established diagnosis.) The best accommodations, the most attentive nurses, and the highest skill are here provided for the sick and homeless operatives, and at an expense but little exceeding the cost of board, and gratuitously to those who have no means."

To this he might have added: To all patients, irrespective of color, class, or race are also made available every spiritual comfort and help of their respective creeds. Their ministers, rabbis, and priests are always welcome, and treated with utmost respect and courtesy.

Had he completed this picture of the hospital in 1930, he could also have included the following facts: To continue its mission and meet its ever-increasing needs, this hospital has continually increased its staff of doctors. It now has 28, all of the highest competency. It has opened and maintains a first-class school for nurses, and finally, to carry on this work of charity, with all its ramifications and requirements, its sponsors have, to date, paid from their own pockets, $1,000,000.

In 1930, however, as very few of these textile manufacturing corporations continued to operate in Lowell, all thought that the hospital was doomed.

But, lo and behold! Although its body had grown old and somewhat decrepit, its soul, stronger than ever, refused to die.

Passing from generation to generation without losing any of its original vitality or ardor, the spirit of its founders now filled the hearts of its directors and inspired all with the one purpose—the hospital must be saved.

At this crucial hour in the life of the hospital, the man who did more than all others to save it, is that outstanding citizen of Lowell, that ever loyal and devoted friend of all its people—Mr. Frederick A. Flather.

Not only was his heart filled with the very quintessence of the spirit of the founders, not only did the fire of his burning zeal for it fairly devour his own soul, but he actually caused it to spread far and wide and set all hearts aglow.

He it is who made of our regretted Joseph A. Legare not only a devoted friend of the hospital but its tireless apostle.

It is this same Frederick A. Flather who is responsible, if the Oblate Father who was then pastor of St. Josephs parish decided to accept the hospital, saying: "Hospital work is not a specialty of the Oblate Fathers, but this hospital must be saved to continue its wonderful services to suffering humanity."

It is he, too, who is responsible, at least indirectly, if from the Catholic Archbishop's palace came the prompt reply, "The hospital must be saved."

Yes; and it is he, too, who is responsible if the Very Reverend Mother Bruno, then superior general of the Grey Nuns of Ottawa, although she knew and often repeated that her order had neither money nor Sisters available to undertake any additional work, nevertheless accepted the charge of this institution, saying, "This hospital must be saved."

Evidently, however, only the Holy Ghost Himself, in His wisdom and power, could choose to be the first superior of the hospital a person blessed by nature and grace with all the exceptionally rare qualities necessary to save and restore this grand old institution.

His choice, as you all know, was Sister Saint Alphonse. From the very minute she arrived in Lowell, the zeal for the hospital that filled her big, generous heart was simply tremendous, and its results absolutely prodigious. Not without several headaches and a few bilious attacks, but at the end of a very few weeks she could report, "All major obstacles have been overcome, the more difficult problems solved; all is under control, and the hospital is certainly saved,"

At the end of the 7 years that she spent as superior of the hospital, the records showed that during her term in office the hospital had been completely renovated and enlarged at a cost exceeding $50,000; that all the departments had been reorganized, brought up to the highest standards, and were operating at full capacity; that 20,000 patients had been admitted to the hospital proper, 150,000 others to the out-patient department; that the poor had received over $300,000 in charity from the hospital; and, last but not least, that the reserve fund of the hospital, begun by herself, showed a very substantial balance—a prodigious record indeed; truly a miracle of charity.

Today under the efficient leadership of its present superior, the genteel and capable Sister Saint Philip, the work of this hospital goes on, ever increasing in volume, intensity, and perfection. Seventeen Grey Nuns of the Cross, 35 staff doctors all highly competent and specialized, 3 internes, a score of graduate nurses, 62 student nurses, and 33 lay employees work together in perfect peace and harmony for the sick who continuously crowd to overflowing the entire hospital and its out-patient department.

The name and management of the old hospital changed 10 years ago, but its soul, received from its founders 100 years ago, never did and, please God, never will. Its spirit has always been and always will be charity; its purpose ever the same—medical care, surgical treatment, convenience, comfort, happiness for suffering humanity.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therewith a recent address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article prepared by the Associated Press, which appeared throughout the country yesterday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

THE DEFENSE PROGRAM

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, we hear over the radio and we read in the papers much about the delay in the defense program. There came to my desk, and I presume to the desk of all my colleagues on Friday, a speech delivered by Donald A. Nelson, Coordinator of Purchases of the National Defense Advisory Committee, and in that address I find this paragraph:

> As I said a few minutes ago, we have passed through the greatest part of the work of letting contracts. My personal belief is that that phase was handled well and expeditiously. I see no reason for complaint on the basis of what has been done by the Defense Commission so far.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include this entire address in the Appendix.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

THE LOGAN-WALTER BILL

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I want to direct the attention of the membership of the House to the manner in which the Logan-Walter bill is being handled. There has been plenty of criticism as to the dilatory methods by which Congress has handled legislation. Here is a place where the administration and its leadership, in my judgment, has taken part in such methods.

This bill has been before the Congress for many, many months. After considerable effort on the part of the proponents of the bill, a conference report was approved on December 2. According to the information we have, it reached the White House on December 6. Why it took 4 days for it to reach the White House I do not know. Then the President left on his cruise and, according to reports, has returned to Washington today, and will finally decide next Wednesday, the very last day and last hour, as to whether or not he will approve the bill. Press reports tell us he expects to veto it.

Mr. Speaker, this situation involves two things to which I want to direct your attention. This is not the time for the administration or the leadership to practice dilatory methods in the handling of legislation. I have no quarrel with those who are against the bill. I have no quarrel with the administration if it is opposed to this legislation. But the President could have signed or vetoed this bill almost 2 weeks ago. Then the Congress would have a chance to override or support the veto as it saw fit. If Congress wants this legislation, it ought to have a right to say so. If it does not want it, it ought to have a similar right. Mr. Speaker, I am only asking for a square deal. I do not believe we are getting it in this case.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

NATIONAL-DEFENSE PRODUCTION

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw attention to a few indisputable facts.

Mr. Knudsen says, "Production is 30 percent behind and all is not well."

Mr. Knudsen attributes the delay to industry and labor.

The Army has now had to stop. Its training program is being interfered with.

The Army cannot call additional men.

The Army cannot build quarters for these new men.

There is no place to house these new men.

Bickering, strikes, lack of material have stopped the program.

Eleven millions were unemployed. They want to go to work, and we want them to.

The C. I. O. will not cooperate, will not work unless they make the laws.

The C. I. O. are trying to prevent anyone else from going to work.

The C. I. O. demand their "pound of flesh" in their ultimatum, "Accept our conditions or there will be no national-defense program."

The Government itself is now getting a taste of what business and industry have had to put up with—with both the C. I. O. and the C. I. O. controlled N. L. R. B.

We have drafted men.

We have drafted wealth.

We have made billions available for the national-defense program.

This House has passed the Smith amendments to N. L. R. B. We would not have done these things if they were not necessary.

The C. I. O., through control of N. L. R. B., controls industry.

If industry is to be blamed, the blame therefor must immediately come back to C. I. O., and the delay must therefore be placed squarely in the lap of C. I. O.

What is more important—the continuation of C. I. O. power or that we have a national-defense program?

Ceilings on certain things have been mentioned. If we are to have a national-defense program a ceiling must be placed on the power of the C. I. O.

If the Smith amendments cannot be made law, the control of N. L. R. B. taken from C. I. O., and N. L. R. B. be made workable, so that we can have a national-defense program, then N. L. R. B. must be repealed and start all over.

I commend and congratulate patriotic and constructive individuals in labor and those labor leaders who have fought the C. I. O. and their principles and have seen through their program.

Summed up, the slow-down, the lack of production on and for our national defense, must squarely be placed in the lap of the C. I. O.; and we must eventually meet this issue of whether we want the C. I. O. or national defense.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein two articles written by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein a telegram from a constituent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, and to include a statement of Col. G. E. Myers, of the United States Army, retired, on The Americas Must Awake to Their Peril.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include a short resolution passed by the Chamber of Commerce of Superior, Wis.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a resolution adopted by the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway meeting and an address made at that meeting by the Honorable Leland Olds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in connection with the St. Lawrence seaway project and to include a short news dispatch.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in connection with former President Hoover's program for aiding the small countries in Europe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in connection with the problems of Finland and a short editorial in connection therewith in the Daily News for last Saturday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a radio address by a former Member of this House, Hon. Maurice H. Thatcher, of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and insert therein an article by O. N. Thompson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent, Mr. PATRICK was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House heretofore entered, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is recognized for 30 minutes.

PREPAREDNESS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have permission to speak for 30 minutes, but I do not expect to occupy the entire time that has been allocated to me.

The Congress and the people of the country are perhaps thinking more seriously than they have for a long time about our problems, especially those having to do with our military preparedness. I want to help in that direction. The people who are really trying to look to the bottom of things must be convinced of a few fundamental things that we must do something about, not as labor or capital, nor as Democrats or Republicans, but as American citizens—must do it effectively if we are to have a chance to win through the difficulties which now confront us. We have to go deeper than merely making munitions of war and getting factories into operation, though we must work unitedly, with speed and efficiency. We have heard a great deal of talk in this country about preserving the gains and profits—social gains and profits of business. Unfortunately that is about all we have heard much about for a long time. "Gain for me and profit for me." We have not been hearing much about service, sacrifice, and preparation for the supreme effort, for the great crisis toward which with rapidity we are now moving. Nobody has been talking about what we are going to have to give to this Government if we are to survive as a democracy. As a result, we are not ready to tackle this job. We are not ourselves prepared. As a people we are not yet under the solidifying influence of a consciousness of our common danger, the shadow of which grows thicker each day as we move closer and closer toward possibilities being converted into actualities. We are all in the same boat. We do not know how close, but that person must be blind who does not see that we have already passed the boundary of possibilities and are now in the realm of probabilities, utterly unprepared spiritually, patriotically, or physically to carry on or to defend ourselves in the situation into which we are moving and moving rapidly. And we are not even ready as a people to tackle the job of preserving this democracy, because no people are who are looking to our Government in times like this as something they can make a profit out of, whether they be the people who own the factories or the people who work in them, or any other group or class of our people. What I am saying may not be agreed to now; I may be misquoted and misunderstood, but I would wager my life that if we do not agree upon these things essential to our security now when we can do it, we will wish we had before we get through.

If we are prepared, physically equipped, equipped in devotion to our system of government, willing to give all we have if need be to preserve it, we may not have to fight. But we cannot do what we are doing now unless we can back it up with complete military preparedness and a solidified people whose courage and patriotism make them fit to be free and avoid fighting. These are unusual times, which come rarely in the history of the ages. I do not understand how it is that people who go to school and get degrees in colleges and who are supposed to know the things of life fail to appreciate that fact, fail to have discovered in the history of the world that there do come great periods when civilizations and governments have to stand at the bar of judgment and answer under the philosophy of the parable of the talents. I do not care whether you believe in religion or what your religion is. I am not speaking as a religionist. I am trained in the school of practical experience. I speak as a student of the actual facts of life. Great epochs come which try the souls and test the fiber of people. This is such a time. We are not going to escape the test. We are not going to escape the consequences of our failure to meet it, either, if we fail. I hate to repeat the saying of these things, but these things go to the fundamentals of our possibility of preparing.

I am not talking as a theorist. Theories are valuable only as they give aid in systematizing the investigation of facts. I am appealing to the everyday, to the workaday, common sense of a people who are the last bulwark of free government of the earth that is not in immediate peril at the moment. Possibly we are closer than we realize.

I believe if the American people should become conscious of the facts of our situation we could do the job. We would not be fighting for profits now. I do not mean that we have reached the point of greatest sacrifice, but we had better begin to get ready, get prepared to do it soon. Then we might not have to do it.

If as a people we could become conscious of the fact that probably we are going to have to sacrifice to the limit before we win through the difficulties of these times we would go ahead and do our job now and escape the consequences of not doing it now. Such a people would joy in the service of their country.

It is revealed from a study of history and from our own experience that men get the thrill of their lives in doing something for the country they love. We have to swing away from selfish, self-centered, group-concerned, short-sighted self-interest, which now unfortunately is blighting the soul of this country. I am not talking about other people. I am talking about us as a people in which I am included. It is not "they" it is "us," me and you. The fuller life we hear so much about—unfortunately some of us seem to have got the notion that the fuller life is not necessarily a greater soul, greater courage, the greater fitness to be free, greater fitness to live, but the notion seems to be fuller of gasoline, moving-picture shows, prize fights, and things of that sort. Such a people cannot win. It is not written in the book of destiny that such a people can hold the line against the combined influences of the world that challenge today the right of men to be free.

We have been going along here, doing a mighty lot of mighty big talking considering what we are prepared to back up. We have cut out the Western Hemisphere as the area in which we tell everybody to stay out. Did you ever think how much territory that is? From the tip of Cape Horn to the frozen seas of the north, America says to the rest of the world, "stay out."

That is lots of territory.

We have to consider this situation as serious grown people and not as a group of children. We are moving fast toward the show-down. We have a notion in this country that there is not going to be any shooting unless we shoot first. It never seems to have occurred to the average American that we may be "shootees" in the next shooting. This is no time to be controlled by a bumptious optimism that does not rest on any solid foundation of fact. Besides the job which Mr. Monroe cut out for us with reference to this hemisphere, we are having something to say about what is happening in every corner of the earth today, in the conflicts in Europe, in Africa, in Asia—all over the world. I state this not in criticism but merely as a fact which an intelligent people cannot afford to ignore in this world aflame with the passions and the horrors of war, where we are running, so I am advised, 30 percent behind our preparedness program. In such a situation there is but one business in this country worthy of consideration, and that is our preparedness for any emergency. Everything we have or can hope for is at stake.

If as a people—plain, practical, hard, common-sense people—we would stop and look at our situation and see our common danger we would then have done the first essential thing toward our security. I am not discussing the justification, or lack of it, of our attitude toward peoples now at war. I am stating the facts of that attitude. Unfortunately in discussing our preparedness program we have in effect threatened most of the other people prepared to fight if England breaks.

I presumed to suggest a formula in the beginning of this preparedness movement which was that "we move as rapidly as we could with all our resources to prepare fully as possible to meet every emergency and in the meantime do mighty little talking with our mouths." That program was not followed.

In these controversies between what we call labor and capital that are definitely holding up this program, unfortunately in some instances, no doubt each one may be trying to take advantage of this situation. I am convinced that this has come about in no small degree in many cases because they have not stopped to consider just what our situation is, for if this country does not win through there will not be any social gains for labor to fight over, and if this country does not win through there will not be any private property for the owners of factories to fight over. That is all there is to it. We are all in the same boat. My judgment is that the heart of labor, the vast majority, is sound. My judgment is that the heart of the people who own property in this country, the vast majority, is sound. I am trying to avoid anything in what I am saying which may have any appearance of partisanship. I am trying to be helpful to my country now. If the heart of our people is not fundamentally sound—I mean if there is not something deep down in the heart of the man who works in the mine and the factory and in that of those who own the property that will respond to the call of his country, which it is making now in this the most tragic hour in the history of the ages—there is no use of building battleships, there is no use building cantonments, there is no use of putting the boys in uniform; if the heart of America is not fundamentally sound it is a waste of energy and effort. This is the job of the American people. I believe it is fundamentally sound, fundamentally patriotic. Some of you may say that I am depending upon sixth-sense stuff and that sort of thing as the background for what I say, but it is not true. I am depending upon the facts of life, upon human nature, upon the history of time, upon the character and quality of our people, and upon the history of our Government.

It is not written in the book of destiny that this people can win through unless they are first fit to win through. I will risk my life on that statement. Only a great people can win through these times. These are times when the balance sheet is struck. These are times when civilizations and nations must stand at the bar of judgment and answer under the philosophy of the parable of the talents. Let nobody make any mistake about it. No President can do this job; Congress cannot do this job; public officials cannot do this job. This job can be done only by a great people willing to make the sacrifice necessary to preserve a free government. Only such a people have a chance to win. We have got time possibly to prepare to do it, but no time to waste squabbling. We have an opportunity to do that great thing. We have the fascinating privilege, you and I and our people, to stand throughout the history of the ages as the greatest generation which up to this time has stood on the earth—stand not proudly but humbly and gratefully. The job is not easy. We in this country have been disposed to want to turn back when we confront difficulties. Is not that strange? It is a strange thing that people who have studied, who understand the things on the earth and the plans of nature, are disposed to turn back when they confront difficulties. Difficulties lie along the road of progress. Difficulties make the road of progress.

We had a bunch of smart fellows, "top water" thinkers in this country—would-be leaders—who wanted to turn back when we have been confronted with difficulties. God does not undertake to prevent people from having difficulties. He creates difficulties. Overcoming difficulties is the thing that makes for progress and develops human beings, that makes the muscles strong. No football team ever won strength and capacity by fighting weak opposition. No prize fighter ever won laurels by fighting a weak opponent. It is only a people who are able to win against great difficulties who themselves become great. We either will be greater or we will go down in defeat. This Nation, we are almost persuaded, is Nature's reserve in these terrible times. Let me emphasize this thought and develop it a little—it is at least fascinatingly interesting: We seem to be, whether by design or commandment, Nature's great reserve to protect and preserve the possibilities of men of this age remaining free on the earth. We! We in America are the great nation apparently held by Nature as its reserve force; at least that is our status in this world situation; we are the great reserve. What punishment ought to be ours if we of this generation fail; fail the hope of the ages; fail the great traditions of a great people and go down with the rest because we would not prepare to defend this great democracy—30 percent behind our program, fighting for special advantages in the hour of the Nation's danger? I have nothing to say complimentary of the generation of which I am a part. I look around and I see a people provided by God Almighty with everything to make them free, happy, prosperous, and contented. No foreign foe has put his foot on American soil in 100 years; yet we have not been willing to pay the price ourselves for the things which we provided in the current expenses of our Government, even. Now, think of that. We strut around here, you and me and the rest of this generation, talking about what great people Americans are, with all the things we have—food, clothing, housing, and every facility which a people could have—and we have not the patriotism and the common sense and the governmental capacity to pay for our own current governmental expense. Think of that! Yet you strut around here, and now we quarrel and bicker while the security of the Nation is neglected. Justice must be done among our people. It is our job to see that it is done while the business of the Nation goes forward. That is our job.

Mr. Speaker, we are not Republicans and Democrats any more—not now. We were a few months ago, and we may be a year from now, but we are not Republicans or Democrats now. We cannot win as Republicans and Democrats now. We cannot win as laboring people and the owners of factories now. We can win only as a great, solidified, determined American people, guided by a sense of the greatest responsibility that ever rested on a generation since history began to be written. [Applause.]

Down deep in its heart America is sound, if we can get it working. I have no doubt about that, and I will tell you why. I am not speaking theoretically about this. I have been taking some samples of the attitude of people of America; I have been taking them just like a scientist takes samples of a big mass in order to determine what it is made of. I have not taken a single sample of public attitude in America in which I failed to find the stuff that is necessary for us to have in order to win. One of the troubles is, Mr. Speaker, we are not telling the people the truth. Some of us are afraid. I am not criticizing and I am not putting myself in any favored attitude. All we have to do is to tell our people the truth and look them in the eye. They are as sound as we are, and sometimes I think the people are sounder than the Congress is. They are not jittery. But as long as we just talk about social gains and profits and all this stuff and act as though we were on some grand picnic of private profit, what can we expect? I have no apology for making that statement because I have examined the facts. I have taken those facts, got at their source, and I have built them into as sound a judgment as I can construct. I have gone back later and I have looked at that judgment and I have not found any cracks in it. I am as convinced as I am convinced that I live that the problems of this hour have come to make not a great Congress merely; they have come to make not a great President merely; they have come to make a great people. Only a great people can win, and God grant we may be able to do it. We have the stuff to do it if people like yourselves, hired by the people, who hold the responsibilities of leadership, will tell the people the truth about the situation. We will win if we will do that. Of course, there is a place for law, for its protection of the public interest of the individual against government and against selfish and disloyal individuals and groups, but in such situations as we now confront dependence, in the main, must rest with the people, with public opinion. That is where it must rest in every great crisis.

What we need in this solemn hour, what we must have, is a great people, conscious of their danger, conscious of our responsibility, determined that under God Almighty, whatever the cost, whatever the sacrifice, free government shall not disappear from this part of the earth. And why should we not in America thus resolve, when hundreds of thousands of men and women all over the world are giving everything in order that free government might live, losing, many of them, because they did not prepare in time; losing, lost, because they were weak inside, divided inside, fighting for what now must seem pathetically petty things, while the enemy was moving his enslaving host toward their frontiers.

Why should you and I for one split second consider our puny little political fortune as a thing worthy of preserving in this hour of our Nation's peril when millions of people are sacrificing everything, willing gladly to give their lives for a chance for their children to have what we are putting in peril by our willingness to make merchandise of the security of a great democracy. I realize I am driving hard. I want the people to stop and think. All we need is to think this thing over. I have faith in the American people. We are not going to lie down on this job.

I have not lost hope that the record will be made that the men and women in the House of Representatives and the constituents whom they represent will have done that sublime, magnificent thing of meeting the challenge of their hour, standing as a great generation unafraid, not considering their self-interests, but again demonstrating that we are a people who love our country, who love our liberty, determined to prepare to defend it, and willing unitedly to fight to the death, if necessary, for its preservation. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] I ask unanimous consent that he may have permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DISNEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, when the unanimous-consent request was made to adjourn until Wednesday I objected. The leadership on the minority side has since told me they had an agreement with the majority that the veto message will come down to the House Wednesday. They also told me if I objected to adjourning over until Wednesday, the leadership on the majority side might have the veto message brought in tomorrow; that if they did, they would catch the minority napping; that a quorum of the House might not be present; that in that event the veto would be sustained and on my shoulders would be the responsibility for preventing the overriding of that veto. Well, this is the first time I ever heard that I have any such influence or power in the House of Representatives. That is just an illustration of how the leadership on both sides catch the unwashed and run them through the wringer. So I suppose, instead of objecting, I must of necessity withdraw my objection and let the House adjourn until Wednesday.

I do not believe that the majority leadership would attempt any such procedure, for a quorum of the Members is not present in Washington. Moreover, it would be almost impossible to get a quorum here by tomorrow noon.

Nor do I believe the statement that if the Walter-Logan bill was returned by the President with a veto the House is required to act on the day it receives the bill.

The Constitution provides that—

> Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve, he shall sign it; but if not, he shall return it, with his objections, to that House in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their Journal and proceed to reconsider it.

The Constitution does not provide that the House shall reconsider the bill forthwith or on the same day that it receives it. Certainly, if a quorum was not present business could not be transacted, and the fact that a quorum was not present, that the bill could not be considered, would not of itself bar the House from, on a subsequent day, reconsidering the bill.

This conclusion is borne out by a ruling—Fourth Hines, page 3522—to the effect that a veto message may not be read in the absence of a quorum, even though the House be about to adjourn sine die, and by the further ruling—Fourth Hines, page 3522—that the message may be read and acted on at the next session of the same Congress.

It is quite true that there is a ruling, or perhaps two, that usually a bill returned with the objections of the President is to be voted on at once. However, the constitutional mandate that "the House shall proceed to consider" only means that the House shall immediately proceed to consider the matter under the rules of the House.

I do not believe, if the House was forced to meet tomorrow, a veto message would be sent down and we be denied the opportunity to have the Members here to vote upon a reconsideration of the bill. In fact, it appears that a quorum is not present, and of necessity the House could not consider the bill tomorrow.

But the bluff is working. It is working because I do not care to take any chance whatever. In any event, so many have been away so long, and that portion of our leadership which has been here has been working so hard on the job, that we all might have nervous prostration if we had to work tomorrow as well as Wednesday—that is, if we really attempted to pass legislation.

All that the gentleman from Texas said is undoubtedly true. I am glad that the gentleman from Illinois, from the Chicago district, is back again.

Mr. CHURCH rose.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am glad the gentleman on the majority side [Mr. SABATH], if I may name him, is back again. The gentleman [Mr. CHURCH] who has just risen has been here all the time, each day, each session.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from Illinois is always here when there is anything to be done, any business to be transacted.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is right if he means that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] is always here when there is any business to be transacted. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], who represents a district which cast but 42,946 votes for the gentleman and his opponent in 1938, has been absent over a period of weeks. During all of that time there has been business to which this House should have given attention. The defense program has been delayed. We need legislation to speed it up.

Mr. SABATH. There has been nothing to do.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. His Rules Committee and the House itself has a great deal of work before it, but now that the election is over and the New Deal once more securely in office, it seems that the national-defense program can drift, the country go deeper into bankruptcy, while vacations continue.

It has been 6 months or more since the President stood before this Congress and told us that we were in danger of invasion by bombers from across the seas. Only yesterday or Saturday the head of the Defense Commission, Mr. Knudsen, told us that we were 30 percent behind the defense program and had no prospects of getting anywhere with it unless improvement was made.

Now, I do not know why we have failed, why we are continuing to fail to meet the situation. Is it because we are thoughtless, is it because we do not know how or what to do, or is it because we are afraid of the organized labor vote, that we do not untangle the mess? Here we have Knudsen approving a contract and the War Department awarding a contract covering millions of dollars of defense equipment to Ford, and we have a Sidney Hillman who is on the same Commission, who is the president of a great union, who is the vice president of the C. I. O., demanding that that contract should not be given to Ford until he complies with the orders of the National Labor Relations Board; a board which has been vigorously condemned by both the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O., by businessmen and the public; a board which is thoroughly discredited; a board in which the people have no confidence whatever. The courts have held several times that the Board was right and several times that the Board was wrong with reference to its orders against Ford.

Sidney Hillman has no authority to add penalties to the N. L. R. B. and ask the War Department or the Navy Department to enforce them. He has no legislative power. He has no judicial power. If he wants to hold a brief for and act in behalf of the C. I. O. and as its organizing agent, let him get off the National Defense Commission and not hold himself out as acting for the people as a whole, in the interests of national defense, if his true interest lies with the C. I. O. or the Labor Board.

Is it more important to Sidney Hillman that he have the privilege of adding to the Wagner law a penalty which Congress did not put in than it is that the defense program go forward? That is the purport, the natural effect of his actions and demands. Where does he get the authority to add to a violation of the Wagner law, if it be a violation, the penalty that the man violating the law shall not have a Government contract? That is the function of Congress. Is it more important to Sidney Hillman that Ford comply with an order of the Board which may or which may not be good or legal than it is that we have preparation for national defense? Is Sidney Hillman's patriotism limited by the wage which the workers belonging to his organization can receive?

Are the members of Sidney Hillman's organization to be patriotic, to work for national defense, when and only when they receive the wage which they think they should receive? Does he join with Lee Pressman, general counsel of the C. I. O., of which Hillman is a vice president, in Pressman's demand that the right to strike on wartime orders shall not be suspended for the duration of the emergency?

Is Sidney Hillman's demand influenced by his patriotism or is it influenced by his desire to aid the president of his organization, Phil Murray, in his demand that before Ford's men can work on the war order they must join the C. I. O.? Is Sidney Hillman's demand influenced by the fact that the C. I. O., of which he is the vice president, will draw down a million dollars or more if they can organize Ford?

Who is demanding an election in the Ford plant? The C. I. O., not the Ford employees. When the Ford employees want an election they can get it by filing a petition. The C. I. O. demands that the Ford workers "get religion," as they call it, whether they want it or whether they need it, or whether it be a true religion. Come January 1, you get a new Governor in Michigan. There is good reason to believe that you will see an organizing drive against Ford. Yes; an organizing drive. Perhaps a strike. A picket line which will keep men from working on a war job.

Let the Ford workers determine for themselves what they want. We do not need any more sit-down strikes in Michigan. Nor do we need imported organizers telling the Ford or any other workers what they should have.

I notice the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is smiling, and I recall that when the organizers came into his district, into his home town of Tupelo, they were ridden out of town on a rail. I know the gentleman from Mississippi does not approve of lawlessness in any form. But I wish that some of the southern Democrats who believe in States' rights would give us a little more help against those who seek to establish themselves as dictators.

Mr. RANKIN. I will tell the gentleman my position when he gets through.

Mr. HOFFMAN. When the organizers went to the district in Mississippi that the gentleman represents they were run out of town. They did not even have free speech. That is the way they do it down there. We did not do that. We in Michigan are willing to give them an election when the men themselves want it. But what we do say is that there is no reason why our Michigan workers should pay tribute to the C. I. O. unless they choose to do so. It is strange indeed, if the blessings of the C. I. O. are so great, that the Ford employees are too dumb to accept it; that they prefer their own independent organization.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I cannot yield just now.

Do not forget this: Labor itself and the C. I. O., the C. I. O. workers, when the poll was taken by Fortune Magazine, declared that Ford was the man who had done the most for labor, the man in all America who was the greatest friend of labor.

The June 1940 issue of Fortune found that 44.6 percent of American workers believed that John L. Lewis was harmful to labor; 18.2 percent believed that William Green, of the A. F. of L., was harmful to labor; 12.3 percent believed that Ford was harmful to labor.

In answer to the question, "Which of the three do you believe has on the whole been helpful to labor?" 73.6 percent answered that they believed Ford was helpful; 49.7 percent believed William Green was helpful; 32.6 percent believed that Mr. Lewis was helpful.

On the question of whether the author of the Wagner bill was helpful to labor, 51.8 percent voted yes while 42.6 percent voted "Don't know."

On the question of whether Henry Ford was helpful to labor, 51.5 percent of the members of the C. I. O. voting registered their judgment that he was.

Now, into this organization drive of the C. I. O. comes Phil Murray, who says he has all the essentials, which means money and men and governmental authority, too, joined by Sidney Hillman, Sidney contributing his part by asking the Government to withhold contracts from Ford and demanding that men employed by Ford, who are supposed to be free, who are supposed to have the right to work where they will and when they will for a wage that is satisfactory to them, and insist they pay tribute to the C. I. O. and its outfit before they can work in defense of their country. The Ford employees have the legal right to bargain collectively, through representatives of their own choosing, but Murray says they must be organized, must pay dues and bargain through the C. I. O.

And we sit here day after day—no; not day after day; we meet 1 day and adjourn 3 days—and in the meantime everyone conversant with the facts concedes that the whole national-defense program is being held up.

The President said we had a rendezvous with destiny. We have. And the time is now. And the place is here.

The President is back from his vacation. Both Houses of Congress are in session. Editorials the country over are calling attention to the fact that some members of the Defense Commission are pulling one way, some another. No man can serve two masters.

As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] so well said, there is one great, vital question before us. Is the liberty of our citizens, the integrity of our Government, to be preserved? Are we to prepare for national defense or are we to yield to those pressure groups, those minorities, whether they be capitalists, bankers, or racketeering labor leaders, who insist upon the advancement of their own personal interests at the expense of our defense program?

Are we to insist that our people be permitted to prepare for defense? Or are we to yield to those who, like Lee Pressman, say that labor has the right to strike, even when it is engaged in the production of planes and ships to protect our Nation?

Let us put first things first. The first thing is national defense, not the shortening of hours; not an increase in wages, but the preservation of home and country.

Who is there in this land so lacking in patriotism that he will not work to defend his country because he cannot at once increase his wage a few cents per hour? If patriots at Valley Forge went barefoot in the snow, on the freezing ground; if they huddled under inadequate shelter in freezing weather, to found this Nation, can you call patriotic the man or the organization who today prevents this Nation from arming itself to meet a threatened invasion until he is granted his demand that his hours be shortened, his wage increased?

The industrialist has had his profits limited. If other laws are needed to prevent him taking advantage of our necessities, they should be enacted, and that without delay. If laws are needed to curb the activities of a few—and they are a very few—misguided labor leaders or legal counsel for labor leaders, then let us enact those laws.

When men are conscripted during peacetime because their services are said to be necessary for the preservation of our Union, there is no room in this land of ours for those who seek only their personal advancement or welfare at the expense of the country as a whole.

Are we going to have a defense program or do we intend to let certain men, who are lacking in patriotism, determine when and where the workers of America shall be employed?

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to submit a request?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; if it is not taken out of my time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 15 minutes to address the House on Wednesday next after the business program of the House for that day has been disposed of.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DISNEY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Mississippi yield to me for the purpose of submitting a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. RANKIN. If it is not taken out of my time, yes.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] objected when a request was made that when we adjourn we adjourn to meet on Wednesday next, and that is the record. Since that time he has signified his willingness to withdraw that objection, and I think such action should be taken now in view of the fact that that question has been raised.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCORMACK). The Chair will state that that is not a proper subject for a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. SABATH. Are we going to meet tomorrow or not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to state at the present time. The Chair is hopeful of being able to advise the gentleman about that matter very shortly.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I renew the request I previously made that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 20 minutes.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include some tables which I have prepared.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when everything else is out of the way on Wednesday I may be allowed to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JACOBSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a speech made by Mr. Perkins, Administrator of the F. H. A.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. JACOBSEN]?

There was no objection.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include certain copies of pay rolls and orders of the Secretary of Labor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, it is an easy matter to talk in support of those who have supported us or in opposition to those who have opposed us. It is difficult to speak about things which may be unpleasant to some of those who have been our friends. Two years ago I began to study the construction costs of Army housing. I did not bring the facts before the House because I felt that the things I thought should be remedied were remedied without taking up the time of the House. I started that work again about 2 months ago, and I now have in my office photostatic copies of every order of the Secretary of Labor fixing the rate of pay on practically every major Government job as far as the Army is concerned. When the time comes, I shall bring to you, if necessary, the result of any work that I have engaged in along that line. What I am about to say is said in a nonpartisan way. I have been a friend of labor, and I make this statement advisedly. I have had the endorsement of labor organization after labor organization. However, there comes a time when one must bring to the House certain matters, even though by doing so one takes a chance on being misunderstood and misinterpreted.

I have before me a photostatic copy of the pay roll for the week ending December 11 of the men who are doing the work that is now being done on the House and Senate Chambers here in the Capitol. I also have a copy of the order of the Secretary of Labor fixing the rate of pay on the contract for the inauguration stands outside the Capitol and for the work being done on the Chambers as required by the Bacon-Davis Act. I want to give you today some facts and read some figures which I will place in the RECORD. I have here a photostatic copy of the pay roll, showing the name of each man, the number of hours for which he is paid, the rate of pay, the gross amount of his pay for the week of December 11, 1940.

Under the order issued by the Secretary of Labor, these men are receiving time and a half for overtime with a 6-hour day, 5-day week, and double time for Saturdays and Sundays; that is, they are receiving pay for time and a half for every hour above 6 hours that they work on the House job for 5 days, and they receive double time for Saturdays and Sundays. Their rate of pay runs as high as $2.50 an hour for the foremen, $2.35 an hour for what they call the pushers or headmen—there are seven of these on the job—and $2 an hour for what they call ironworkers, which is the lowest rate of pay on the job.

This photostatic copy of the pay roll which I have here shows that Arthur De Leleu, timekeeper, drew for the week ending December 11, 1940, $120.38. I did not ask for a photostatic copy of the pay roll for the week preceding. The present week, which ends on Thursday, December 19, is, of course, not complete. De Leleu drew for the week ending December 4, $88.80, or a total of $209.18 for the 2 weeks preceding December 11, 1940.

Jean Jones, a pusher, received $122.20 for the week ending December 11 and $125.63 for the preceding week, and $4.70 for extra pay of 2 days, which I will explain later, making a total of $252.73 for the 2 weeks. He drew pay at the rate of $125 a week, and if he could maintain that scale for the year it would be at the rate of $6,000 for an ironworker working on the House of Representatives. The timekeepers would get about the same.

Lee Griffith is another pusher. He received $128.68 for the week of December 4, $122.20 for the week of December 11, and this, together with the $4.70 to which I have referred, amounted to $254.98. The other pushers were paid at the same rate. There were seven pushers on the job.

John E. Adams, an ironworker, received $108 for the week ending December 11 and $92 for the week ending December 4, plus the $4.70 to which I have referred, or $204 for the 2 weeks. This is at the rate of $5,000 a year. Clarence Burks, ironworker, and the other ironworkers received that same amount or pay at the rate of approximately $100 a week.

The foreman, Ernest Luih, received $267.50 for the week of December 11. If he were able to maintain this rate of pay for a year, this foreman who is working in the Senate and House Chambers would receive at the end of a year $13,910. Of course, he does not receive that rate of pay the year around. For the week ending December 4 he received $197.50, and I am informed that this week his pay will run about $267.50. This foreman received $105 pay for 2 days, Saturday and Sunday, December 7 and 8.

Mr. CRAWFORD. How many hours?

Mr. ENGEL. He worked actually 21 hours, but double time makes it 42 hours, at $2.50 an hour. He received pay for 107 hours, at $2.50 an hour, or a total of $267.50 for the week.

Mr. Speaker, on this job of supporting the roof over the Senate and House Chambers we paid 352 hours on Sunday, December 8, and 360½ hours on Saturday, December 7, making a total excess time of 712 hours with extra excess pay of $1,416 for these 2 days.

I want to be fair about the matter. I realize that these men are only part-time workers and must receive a high rate of pay when they are working. Structural iron work is not a 12-months-in-the-year job.

I found three itemized statements as to the time worked. The first was the straight time, the second was for overtime, and a third statement for 2 hours' pay at from $2 to $2.35 an hour, adding to the pay roll of December 11 from $4 to $4.70 for each man. I asked Mr. Lynn, the Architect of the Capitol, about this pay roll. To my amazement and surprise, I found that these men who were drawing as high as $128 for the week of December 11—the pay runs about $108 a week for the structural iron workers and $128 for the pushers—when they were tendered their pay on the pay day of December 11 refused to accept it because, they said, the rules of the union provided that where there are two shifts they must be paid at the rate of 6 hours for 5½ hours; in other words, 5½ hours is a day. Remember, they had received for those 2 days, Saturday and Sunday, over $1,400 for 712½ hours in extra pay for work which was not performed.

They were not satisfied, but demanded 119 hours more overtime at a cost of $237.80 more. They said that under the rules of the union they were entitled to a half hour extra pay; that is, a 5½-hour day instead of a 6-hour day for Saturday and Sunday, giving them 1 extra hour pay for Saturday and Sunday, without performing any services. This, doubled, would be 2 hours per man additional, giving you this amount of $4 per man for the ironworkers and $4.70 per man for the pushers extra for the week's pay.

The contractor said, "Why, that is not in the contract." They sat in the House Chamber refusing to accept these checks, amounting as high as $128 a week, until they got the other $4 or $4.70 which they were demanding, and then finally, graciously, consented not to charge the Government for the time they had to wait for their checks while the Government was making up the extra pay roll for the extra 2 hours which gave these men from $4 to $4.70 each over and above the $128 or the $108, whichever it was.

Mr. Speaker, this is being done legally and under the law. The Secretary of Labor, under the Bacon-Davis Act, fixes the rate of pay, and the way it operates is that when the Architect of the Capitol wanted to contract for this job, under the Bacon-Davis law, he had to go to the Secretary of Labor, tell the Secretary the type of labor that was going to be used, and then the Secretary of Labor issued an order fixing the rate of pay.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. The Secretary of Labor made that determination, and I have a copy of that order here which I shall place in the RECORD. They fixed the wage of common labor on that job at 80 cents an hour. The superintendent of the Capitol says that when he does not have contract work, he pays 50 cents an hour as the going wage scale for an 8-hour day.

To have these men draw out of the Treasury money at this rate seems to me to be outrageous. I just came back from my district, where I had been for just 1 day. People came to me and begged me to help them get additional relief money. They were cutting old-age assistance $1 or $2 a week and paying them as low as $10 or $12 a month, and then to find this Government paying these men at the rate of $13,000 or $14,000 a year for the foreman and $5,000 or $6,000 for these other individuals seems to me to be outrageous.

Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to antistrike legislation, but if antistrike legislation is ever enacted by this House and Senate, men of this type, who are making it a racket, will be responsible.

I am opposed, Mr. Speaker, to the conscription of both labor and capital, because I believe the conscription of labor and capital is not the first but the last step toward a dictatorship, but if laws are ever passed conscripting labor and capital, it will be the racketeer in labor and in industry who will be responsible for it. If the Walsh-Healey and the Bacon-Davis Acts are ever repealed, it will be because men of this type have abused the privileges conferred upon them by those acts. I sincerely hope and trust that no one will condemn union labor or the labor movement because they have a few of these men who abuse their privileges. Someone suggested to me when I spoke about it, "Yes, these chickens have come home to roost in the House and Senate Chambers."

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. PATRICK. I want to see if I get exactly the point the gentleman has in mind. Does the gentleman recommend that legislation be passed as a part of the procedure in the employment of these men that would be a departure from employment by the Government following the regular union methods?

Mr. ENGEL. I will inform the gentleman that I am speaking here in the hope that labor will clean its own house and take care of these matters themselves before public sentiment becomes so strong as to force through some of these laws which I myself am opposed to.

Mr. PATRICK. Until that time, how would the gentleman recommend that this employment be carried on in relation to employer and employee?

Mr. ENGEL. I am just calling attention to the abuses. That is a matter for the union organizations to clean up. The Architect of the Capitol told me that when this matter came up the local union officials called up the international union and the international union said, "We will stand behind you." These men here were insisting absolutely—let me emphasize this fact—upon the payment of this last pound of flesh, this last $4, and refused to accept up as high as $128 for their week's pay.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may proceed for 3 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has the gentleman gone into the matter sufficiently to answer this question, "When the checks were tendered these people—are they paid by check or currency?"

Mr. ENGEL. I do not know.

Mr. CRAWFORD. But when the pay roll was tendered these gentlemen who were working, were they on the job at the time?

Mr. ENGEL. Yes. As I understand, the Architect of the Capitol said they were working right there and then.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They were in there at work?

Mr. ENGEL. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And they proceeded to discontinue to work? In other words, to effect a temporary sit-down strike, contending that they must have the additional $4.70 for the extra half hour of overtime necessitated by the cut from 6 hours to 5½ hours by the rules of the union, and that they did proceed with a temporary sit-down strike until the parties in charge agreed to pay this additional $4.70.

Mr. ENGEL. The Architect of the Capitol said to me that they first insisted upon being paid up until the time they received their pay checks—what they call waiting time, but finally said that if they would give them the $4 extra they would waive the waiting time. So they must have considered themselves on the pay roll until they actually compromised the matter.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the Secretary of Labor voluntarily increased the rate of wage from 50 cents to 80 cents an hour? In other words, a 60-percent increase over and above that previously paid by the Architect of the Capitol?

Mr. ENGEL. I would not say it was an increase. The Secretary of Labor is supposed to fix the prevailing rate of wage. She fixed the prevailing rate of wage at 80 cents an hour for common labor. The Superintendent of the Capitol said that he hires a casual laborer, a man here and there, for 50 cents an hour. Those men went to work at 6:30 o'clock in the morning and worked until 12 o'clock noon. The next shift came on at noon and worked until 5:30 p. m. On Sunday they received extra time. Saturday and Sunday they were paid for a total of 831 hours, for which no services were rendered.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Did the gentleman intend to include the wages of carpenters who are putting in the lumber work in the inaugural stands?

Mr. ENGEL. Yes. I also have the order of the Secretary of Labor fixing the wage scale and pay roll for 1 week for the men who are working on the job out here on the stands in front of the Capitol. I shall be pleased to place that in the RECORD if the gentleman so desires.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I thank the gentleman. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

The letters, orders, rate of pay, and pay rolls referred to in the foregoing speech are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
Washington, August 1, 1940.

Mr. DAVID LYNN,
Architect of the Capitol, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LYNN: Pursuant to your request of recent date for wage predetermination under the Davis-Bacon Act, as amended (act of August 30, 1935, 49 Stat. 1011, U. S. C. title 40, sec. 276 (a)), with respect to a contract for structural steel work for temporarily supporting the ceilings of the Senate and House Chambers in the United States Capitol at Washington, D. C., I transmit herewith the decision of the Secretary of Labor.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES D. PENNEBAKER,
Chief Reviewing Attorney.

AUGUST 1, 1940.

DECISION OF THE SECRETARY

This case is before the Department of Labor pursuant to a request of recent date by the Architect of the Capitol for wage predetermination under the Davis-Bacon Act, as amended (act of August 30, 1935, 49 Stat. 1011, U. S. C., title 40, sec. 276 (a)), with respect to a contract for structural steel work for temporarily supporting the ceilings of the Senate and House Chambers in the United States Capitol at Washington, D. C.

In accordance with the terms of the regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Labor (Regulation 503, dated September 30, 1935), a study has been made of wage conditions in the locality on the basis of the data submitted by the Architect of the Capitol and other information assembled by the Department of Labor. The following are hereby found to be the prevailing rates of wages for the requested crafts:

	Per hour
Air-tool operators	$.80
Carpenters, journeymen	1.62½
Carpenters, apprentices:
First year	.60
Second year	.81¼
Third year	.97½
Fourth year	1.30
Derrickmen, hand	.80
Laborers	.80

Operators (power equipment):	Per hour
Air compressors, portable, over 15 cubic feet per minute	1.60
Air compressors, portable, 15 cubic feet or less per minute—receive rate paid craft performing operation to which the use of the compressor is incidental.
Hoists, 2 or more active drums	2.00
Hoists, 1 active drum	1.75
Painters	1.57½
Structural iron workers	2.00
Structural iron workers' apprentices	1.15

Welders—receive rate prescribed for craft performing operation to which welding is incidental.

In accordance with the provisions of the said Davis-Bacon Act, as amended, these are the minimum wages to be inserted in the advertised specifications for said contract, and any class of laborers and mechanics not listed in the preceding paragraph which will be employed on this contract shall be classified or reclassified conformably to the foregoing schedule. In the event the interested parties cannot agree on the proper classification or reclassification of a particular class of laborers and mechanics to be used, the question, accompanied by the recommendation of the contracting officer, shall be referred to the Secretary of Labor for final determination.

By direction of the Secretary of Labor.

GERARD D. REILLY,
Acting Secretary.

STATE OF ———,
County of ———, ss:

I, Arthur De Leleu, do hereby certify that I am the employee of Lehigh Construction Co., who supervised the payment of the employees of said subcontractor; that the attached pay roll is a true and accurate report of the full weekly wages due and paid to each person employed by the said subcontractor for the construction of structural steel work for temporary supporting of ceiling of Senate and House Chambers at United States Capitol for the weekly pay-roll period from the 5th day of December 1940 to the 11th day of December 1940; that no rebates or deductions from any wages due any person as set out in the attached pay roll have been directly or indirectly made; and that, to the best of my knowledge and belief, there exists no agreement or understanding with any person employed on the project, or any person whatsoever, pursuant to which it is contemplated that I or anyone else shall, directly or indirectly, by force, intimidation, threat, or otherwise, induce or receive any deductions or rebates in any manner whatsoever from any sum paid or to be paid to any person at any time for labor performed or to be performed under the contract for the above-named project.

ARTHUR DE LELEU.

Sworn to before me this 12th day of December 1940.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR,
Washington, October 7, 1940.

Mr. DAVID LYNN,
Architect of the Capitol, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. LYNN: Pursuant to your request of recent date for wage predetermination under the Davis-Bacon Act, as amended (act of August 30, 1935, 49 Stat. 1011, U. S. C., title 40, sec. 276 (a)), with respect to a contract for the construction of 1941 inaugural stands at Washington, D. C., I transmit herewith the decision of the Secretary of Labor.

Very truly yours,

CHARLES D. PENNEBAKER,
Chief Reviewing Attorney.

OCTOBER 7, 1940.

DECISION OF THE SECRETARY

This case is before the Department of Labor pursuant to a request of recent date by the Office of the Architect of the Capitol, for wage predetermination under the Davis-Bacon Act, as amended (act of August 30, 1935, 49 Stat. 1011, U. S. C., title 40, sec. 276 (a)), with respect to a contract for the construction of 1941 inaugural stands at Washington, D. C.

In accordance with the terms of the regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Labor (Regulation 503, dated September 30, 1935), a study has been made of wage conditions in the locality on the basis of the data submitted by the Office of the Architect of the Capitol and other information assembled by the Department of Labor. The following are hereby found to be the prevailing rates of wages for the requested crafts:

	Per hour
Carpenters, journeymen	$1.62½
Carpenters' apprentices:
First year	.60
Second year	.81¼
Third year	.97½
Fourth year	1.30
Laborers	.80
Ornamental iron workers	2.00
Ornamental-iron workers' apprentices	1.15
Painters	1.57½
Painters, apprentices:	Per week
First 6 months	$14.00
Second 6 months	17.00
Third 6 months	20.00
Fourth 6 months	23.00
Fifth 6 months	26.00
Sixth 6 months	29.00
Roofers, composition:	Per hour
First hand	$1.45
Second hand	1.15
Third hand	.95
Kettlemen	.95
Sheet-metal workers	1.62½
Sheet-metal workers' apprentices:
First year: First half, 35 percent; second half, 40 percent.
Second year: First half, 45 percent; second half, 50 percent.
Third year: First half, 55 percent; second half, 60 percent.
Fourth year: First half, 70 percent; second half, 80 percent.
Structural ironworkers	2.00
Structural ironworkers' apprentices	1.15
Truck drivers (dump):
2 tons or less	.70
Over 2 tons	.80
Truck drivers (heavy hauling flat trucks)	1.00
Truck drivers (heavy hauling flat trucks), helpers	.75
Truck drivers (light delivery trucks), 1½ tons or less	.50

In accordance with the provisions of the said Davis-Bacon Act, as amended, these are the minimum wages to be inserted in the advertised specifications for said contract, and any class of laborers and mechanics not listed in the preceding paragraph, which will be employed on this contract, shall be classified or reclassified conformably to the foregoing schedule. In the event the interested parties cannot agree on the proper classification or reclassification of a particular class of laborers and mechanics to be used, the question, accompanied by the recommendation of the contracting officer, shall be referred to the Secretary of Labor for final determination.

By direction of the Secretary of Labor:

———— ————,
Assistant Secretary.

WASHINGTON,
District of Columbia, ss:

I, James R. Skinker, do hereby certify that I am partner of Skinker & Garrett who supervised the payment of the employees of Skinker & Garrett; that the attached pay roll is a true and accurate report of the full weekly wages due and paid each person employed by the said contractor for the construction of stands for the 1941 inauguration at the east front of the United States Capitol for the weekly pay-roll period from the 5th day of December 1940 to the 11th day of December 1940; that no rebates or deductions have been directly or indirectly made; and that to the best of my knowledge and belief there exists no agreement or understanding with any person employed on the project, or any person whatsoever, pursuant to which it is contemplated that I or anyone else shall, directly or indirectly, by force, intimidation, threat, or otherwise, induce or receive any deduction or rebates in any manner whatsoever from any sum paid or to be paid to any person at any time for labor performed or to be performed under the contract for the above-named project.

JAMES R. SKINKER.

Signed and sworn to before me this 12th day of December 1940.

ROBERT J. ALLEN,
Notary Public, District of Columbia.

ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST FLIGHT BY WRIGHT BROTHERS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, had this House been in session tomorrow, it was my purpose to call attention at some length to the achievement with its implications of the Wright brothers at Kitty Hawk, N. C., on December 17, 1903. On that date they successfully completed the first flight in a heavier-than-air power-driven machine. We know it today as the modern airplane. I think it proper and fitting this year that the President of the United States has designated this anniversary of the flight of the Wright brothers as Pan-American Aviation Day. Certain it is incumbent upon this country that increasingly we think in terms of a closer economic and cultural relationship with the Latin-American republics and those neighbors of ours—not enemies—who live to the south of us. Civil aviation can do much to foster a better understanding between our American republics.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COCHRAN. I understand the gentleman is well acquainted with Mr. Orville Wright. I was wondering if somethings could not be done to prevail upon him to bring that plane back here from England. It belongs here. It does not belong in England. The flight was made here. That misunderstanding between Mr. Wright and the Smithsonian Institution should not prevent him from bringing that plane back to this country. I understand that when he did take it over there it was with the distinct understanding that he could bring it back if so desired.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I thank the gentleman from Missouri for his contribution. I have long admired Orville Wright and have studied the work he and his brother did for early aviation. I may say that there is a sentiment now to see if proper contacts cannot be made to bring this plane back to the United States.

In that connection I would like to say that on the sands of Kitty Hawk or above them, 37 years ago tomorrow, Wilbur Wright made four flights about 120 feet in length and then Orville Wright made a flight of about 859 feet in 59 seconds. These young men led the way. Certainly we are seeing today the use of the airplane diverted from constructive efforts to destructive efforts. I only hope for the time when civil aviation will reach its real heights. Certainly flight orders for aviation, not for a world gone wild, but to a day when peace will come again, is onward and upward. I do trust that this country will pay its proper respect to those who have led in this endeavor.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. I may say to the gentleman that I had the pleasure of meeting the telegraph operator who sent the message to the Press Association that this successful flight had been made. They refused to accept it. They wanted confirmation. They could not believe that the flight had been successfully made. It is a very interesting story, and that monument down there to the Wright brothers is something all Americans should see.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Certainly. In the fifteenth century Leonardo da Vinci was dreaming of flying. Men all over the world have been dreaming of it down through the centuries. With us today there is an obligation to make the fullest use of the forces of aviation in a peaceful world, not a world war crazed and falling apart. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I believe the following article by Freeman Cleaves, appearing in Air Youth Horizons for December, is most interesting. I quote the article in full:

FAMOUS FIRSTS IN AVIATION

(By Freeman Cleaves)

For five centuries and more man endeavored to harness and control forces of gravity, lift, thrust, and drag in learning to fly. During this long period of groping after discovery no notable achievement in the field of aviation was ever made without years of experiment and the testing of aerial forces with various types of model planes. In the early stages of man's attempt to conquer the air these experiments were confined to trial-and-error methods, since little was known concerning the laws governing flight. Today we build airplane models for three purposes—as a hobby and sport, as an educational aid, and for experiment and research looking toward the future.

As long ago as the fifteenth century the first model aircraft was constructed by Leonardo da Vinci, famous Italian artist and sculptor, who studied the anatomy and flight of birds. The idea of patterning man-made flight after winged birds continued to influence inventors for centuries. In 1678 a French locksmith named Besnier either flew or was wafted a short distance by means of a glider propelled by great flapping wings. Nearly a century later the first model aircraft ever to fly was constructed by Sir George Cayley, of England. Cayley's model had two propellers of cork and feathers, with a bent whalebone and propeller shaft supplying the necessary power. John Stringfellow, of England, and Alphonse Penaud, a Frenchman, later invented several beautiful flying and soaring models. In 1848 Stringfellow built the first model airplane, powered by a steam engine, ever to fly. In 1871, one of Penaud's models, a monoplane weighing less than an ounce and powered by a rubber band, flew 131 feet in 11 seconds.

A number of unsuccessful attempts to fly full-scale airplanes followed. One of the most famous was that of Clement Ader, of France, who, in 1897, hopped off in a monoplane driven by two 20-horsepower engines. Witnesses disputed whether the plane left the ground under its own power or was lifted by the wind. In any event, the plane crashed upon landing, was patched up, and placed in a museum.

Otto Lilienthal in Germany, Perry S. Pilcher in England, Prof. S. P. Langley, Octave Chanute, and the Wright brothers in America further advanced upon the studies of Stringfellow and Ader. The two Europeans flew several successful man-carrying gliders. Langley operated an ingenious motor-driven model monoplane and finally built a full-scale replica, which was considered the height of engineering development. Charles M. Manly, of Cornell University, constructed an efficient and powerful naphtha engine for the Langley plane. Two trial flights ended in failure, however, the machine being partly wrecked on December 8, 1903, when the launching mechanism failed, collapsing the rear wing.

Meantime two obscure bicycle manufacturers, Wilbur and Orville Wright, had been studying the forces of lift and drag while experimenting with model planes in a wind tunnel at Dayton, Ohio. They also made careful studies of all previous tests made by other inventors. Much of the data at hand they found inaccurate. They made their own man-carrying gliders and finally their own airplane, in which four successful trial flights were made on December 17, 1903, only 9 days following Professor Langley's failure. Newspapers throughout the country were still deriding Langley when Orville Wright flew 120 feet in 20 seconds and his brother Wilbur flew 852 feet in 59 seconds at Kitty Hawk, N. C.

The years have been few since this long pioneering era, yet within less than half a century man's achievements in the air have far surpassed the wildest flights of imagination. Those who scoffed at Professor Langley and the Wright brothers would not later believe that man could ever conquer the English Channel by air, not to mention the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. Various speeds have been suggested as limits beyond which man could not fly, yet one by one these speed limits have been equaled and surpassed until the velocity of flight approaches the speed of sound.

Today man crosses the Atlantic Ocean in a passenger plane in less than the time it took to travel by rail from Boston to Washington, D. C., when the airplane industry was in its infancy. And the world is encircled by 5 men in an airplane in 3 days, 19 hours, and 8 minutes, or 1 hour and 38 minutes less than the fastest crossing of the Atlantic by a great ocean liner capable of developing 200,000 horsepower.

Beginning with the first historic flights of the Wright brothers in 1903, great epoch-making achievements in the field of aviation are recorded below.

SOME FAMOUS AVIATION FIRSTS

First heavier-than-air engine-driven flights: Orville and Wilbur Wright, 4 flights of 120 feet or more at Kitty Hawk, N. C., December 17, 1903. Wilbur Wright flew 852 feet in 59 seconds.

First officially recorded flight: Orville Wright, 11.12 miles in 18 minutes, 9 seconds, at Dayton, Ohio, September 26, 1905.

First airplane flight across the English Channel: Louis Bleriot, 32 miles, in 37 minutes, July 25, 1909.

First airplane accepted by the United States War Department: Wright brothers' plane, July 30, 1909.

Historic cross-country flight, Albany to New York: Glenn H. Curtiss, 143 miles in 2 hours, 51 minutes, May 29, 1910.

First major airplane altitude record: A. Hoxsie, 11,474 feet, San Francisco, December 26, 1910.

First regular air-mail service in the United States: Established May 15, 1918, between Washington, D. C., and New York.

First nonstop flight, Chicago to New York: Capt. E. F. White, 727 miles, April 19, 1919.

First trans-Atlantic flight, Newfoundland to England, via the Azores: Lt. Commander A. C. Read, United States Navy, in flying boat NC–4, 3,925 miles, May 16–27, 1919.

First nonstop trans-Atlantic flight: Capt. John Alcock and Lt. Arthur Brown, of England, from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Clifden, Ireland, 1,980 miles, June 14–15, 1919.

First lighter-than-air trans-Atlantic nonstop flight: British dirigible R–34, Scotland to Mineola, N. Y., 3,310 miles, in 108 hours, 12 minutes, July 2–6, 1919. Return trip, 3,200 miles in 74 hours, 56 minutes. July 9–12, 1919.

First nonstop transcontinental flight: Lieutenants Oakley Kelly and John A. Macready, United States Army, New York to San Diego, Calif., 2,516 miles, in 26 hours 50 minutes, May 2–3, 1923.

First round-the-world flight: Two United States Douglas biplanes, starting at Seattle, distance flown 26,345 miles, in 363 flying-hours, April 6–September 28, 1924.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to insert therein certain material pertinent to the subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein an address by Mr. I. W. Duggan before the American Farm Bureau Federation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. JARMAN] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD on two different matters and to include therein certain tables.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A joint resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. J. Res. 307. Joint resolution vesting the chairman of the Inaugural Committee with authority to determine the location of stands along the inaugural parade route; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced his signature to an enrolled joint resolution of the Senate of the following title:

S. J. Res. 302. Joint resolution authorizing the President to invite foreign countries to participate in the Pan American Cotton Congress.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on Thursday, December 12, 1940, present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 658. An act for the relief of the estate of Dr. B. L. Pursifull, Grace Pursifull, Eugene Pursifull, Ralph Pursifull, Bobby Pursifull, and Dora Little.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the House, pursuant to its previous order, adjourned until Wednesday, December 18, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland:

H. R. 10725. A bill to relieve disbursing officers, certifying officers, and payees in respect of certain payments made in contravention of appropriation restrictions regarding citizenship status; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Utah:

H. R. 10726. A bill appropriating to the State of Utah the sum of $49,860.76, being 37½ percent of moneys received by the United States from the Independent Coal & Coke Co. for the wrongful taking of coal from land located in the State of Utah; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SCHIFFLER:

H. R. 10727. A bill authorizing the city of Wheeling, W. Va., to purchase and construct, maintain, and operate bridges across the Ohio River located wholly or partly within said city; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HOFFMAN:

H. R. 10728. A bill to amend the act of May 19, 1916 (ch. 117, sec. 6, 39 Stat. 120), as amended August 29, 1916 (ch. 417, 39 Stat. 582); to the Committee on the Civil Service.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland:

H. R. 10729. A bill for the relief of Mattie E. Baumgarten; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 10730. A bill for the relief of Edgar H. Ingham; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 10731. A bill for the relief of J. H. Redding, Inc.; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 10732. A bill for the relief of Ervine J. Stenson; to the Committee on Claims.

H. R. 10733. A bill for the relief of Addie Myers; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MACIEJEWSKI:

H. R. 10734. A bill for the relief of Anton Nemec; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9408. By Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT: Senate Joint Resolution No. 2, relative to purchases of woolen materials and products for national-defense program; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

9409. By Mr. KRAMER: Resolution of the California State Firemen's Association, urging the appropriation of sufficient funds for the United States Forestry Service so that the forests of the United States and the natural resources of the country may be protected and preserved; to the Committee on Agriculture.

9410. Also, resolution of the California State Firemen's Association urging the adoption of amendments to the present Federal laws making it mandatory to deport or expel any alien from the United States who does not avail himself of the right of citizenship within a specified time; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

9411. By Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire: Petition of Rev. William M. Kittredge, of Antrim, N. H., and 42 others, urging all possible aid to Britain short of war; opposition to American intervention in the European and Asiatic wars; and the strengthening of our own defenses; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

9412. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Daughters of American Colonists, Topeka, Kans., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to the Mary Ball, mother of Washington, resolution; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

9413. Also, petition of the Vermont State Chamber of Commerce, Rutland, Vt., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to aid to Great Britain; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, Thou whose sacrificial love is always stooping to our needs, whisper to our hearts: "I am near." Bring to our remembrance the Christ that we may feed upon Him in our hearts by faith and thanksgiving; were it not for Him, the Old World would, indeed, be a vast asylum of despair. Oh, come, Holy One, and let us hear again the glad tidings of great joy. Let them sing in the hearts of children and the aged; let them permeate the cottages of the poor and the homes of the rich. We pray that Thy spirit of unselfish brotherhood may possess us, giving thought to those who need it, sympathy to those who crave it, praise to those who deserve it, and affection to those who are starving for it. Show us, blessed Lord, that the highest joy of life is in renouncing selfishness that we may help and save others. Oh, let the Star of Bethlehem light up the dark places in all lands; when once it ceases to shine, there will be a dull, black socket in the world's sky; have mercy, O Lord, forbid and remember us. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, December 16, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On November 25, 1940:

H. R. 9589. An act granting a pension to Frances Folsom Cleveland Preston.

On November 26, 1940:

H. R. 960. An act extending the classified executive civil service of the United States.

On November 29, 1940:

H. R. 4561. An act for the relief of Mrs. George C. Hamilton and Nanette Anderson; and

H. R. 10543. An act to make the excess-land provisions of the Federal reclamation laws inapplicable to the lands of the Washoe County Water Conservation District, Truckee storage project, Nevada, and the Pershing County Water Conservation District, Nevada.

On November 30, 1940:

H. R. 10465. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the willful injury or destruction of war material, or of war premises or utilities used in connection with war material, and for other purposes," approved April 20, 1918.

On December 16, 1940:

H. R. 658. An act for the relief of the estate of Dr. B. L. Pursifull, Grace Pursifull, Eugene Pursifull, Ralph Pursifull, Bobby Pursifull, and Dora Little.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 9683. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill., and for other purposes.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interfere with the unanimous-consent requests at this time, but I serve notice now that if I think a quorum is not present I will make a point of order that a quorum is not present. But I will withhold that for short unanimous-consent requests.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I have two unanimous-consent requests: First, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Appalachian Power case.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the opinions of the Supreme Court are printed, are they not?

Mr. RANKIN. This is printed.

Mr. RICH. What is the idea of putting it in the RECORD?

Mr. RANKIN. Because it has a great deal of information in it that bears upon legislation which is constantly coming before the Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the address that I made on Monday last may be printed in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. COX addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by further including a statement as to the Communist connections of Mr. Weschler, and that I may also insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an article appearing in a recent issue of Mercury in which Mr. Weschler's connections with the Communist Party are shown and in which the PM is referred to as the uptown edition of the Daily Worker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House today for 5 minutes at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore made.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. STEARNS]?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include a telegram from the Pennsylvania American Legion.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include a speech delivered by Edwin C. Hill on the subject of our national parks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include two communications on the Walsh-Healey Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF]?

There was no objection.

[Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD in connection with the work of the Dies committee and include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I further ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in connection with conditions in Finland, and to include therein a broadcast by Fulton Lewis and Minister Procope.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CROWE asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I expect to make and to insert therein a few newspaper articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

PETER BAVISOTTO

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 5336), for the relief of Peter Bavisotto, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Line 7, after "insurance", insert: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I understand this amendment simply adds the provision that no attorney can secure over 10 percent.

Mr. HART. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL DEFENSE NEEDS PROCUREMENT

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday I called attention to the ridiculous situation that exists with reference to the national-defense program, to the fact that Mr. Knudsen and Mr. Stettinius, two of the foremost business executives in America, were simply here in Washington as an Advisory Commission, without power. In my opinion, after a very careful study of the situation which my position on the Appropriations Committee has given me opportunity to make, I am satisfied that the defense procurement lags are largely due to the fact that these gentlemen have no power.

I have today introduced a bill designed to correct that situation and to create the position of Director of National Defense Procurement, with proper assistants to enable the President, if he will cooperate in straightening out our national-defense program, to have an opportunity to do the job. It is a crying need and I hope that this bill will receive the favorable consideration of the Military Affairs Committee, to which it has been referred. [Applause.]

NATCHEZ TRACE PARKWAY

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 10712) to permit the relinquishment or modification of certain restrictions upon the use of lands along the Natchez Trace Parkway in the village of French Camp, Miss.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, has this bill been before the appropriate committee?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. It has. I am advised by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON], the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands that it was reported out yesterday but has not been placed upon the calendar.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What is the particular urgency for considering the bill at this time?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. The only reason I can assign for it is that they want to construct a post-office building on one of the easements that was granted to the State of Mississippi and turned over to the Federal Government.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. What does this bill provide?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. It simply gives the Secretary of the Interior the authority to convey back to a private person the authority to construct a building on an easement that was granted the Federal Government to right-of-way for the Natchez Trace Parkway.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It gives the Government the right to cede land back to a private individual?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Not to cede the land back, but to give him the right to construct a building for a post office on the right-of-way to the parkway that has already been built.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has this bill been approved by the Department?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. It has; and I have here a report from the Department.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, inasmuch as we have been unable to hear the gentleman's explanation, we would like to know what they are going to do with the Natchez Trace Parkway.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. They are not going to do anything except give the Secretary of the Interior the right to convey back to a private individual the authority to construct a building suitable for post-office purposes in a little village down in Mississippi.

Mr. RICH. On the right-of-way?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. On an easement; not the right-of-way itself, but on a scenic easement that has been granted to the Government.

Mr. RICH. Is it permissible for the Secretary to do that at any place he chooses on the parkway?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Not unless the Congress grants him such authority.

Mr. RICH. The Congress must pass on each point, then. What is the object of granting the Secretary of the Interior permission to grant this authority?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. The purpose of it is to permit a person who conveyed an easement to the State of Mississippi, which in turn conveyed it to the Federal Government, to build a structure suitable for post-office purposes on this easement of the Natchez Trace, which runs through a little village in Mississippi.

Mr. RICH. The village is in the parkway?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. That is right.

Mr. RICH. I have understood all along that on this parkway they were going to secure the ground within 800 feet.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. That is correct.

Mr. RICH. Is this village within the 800-foot limit?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. RICH. Then they do not intend to take over the 800 feet in Mississippi?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. No.

Mr. RICH. Is this customary along the Natchez Trace from the beginning to the end?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I doubt if there will be another instance comparable to this one.

Mr. RICH. What is the object of granting permission to have this community live within the boundaries of the Natchez Trace Parkway, and not any other?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. The Natchez Trace Parkway runs right through this village.

Mr. RICH. Will the presence of the village in any way hinder maintaining the width of the roadway?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. It will not.

Mr. RICH. And the Secretary of the Interior believes that this is the wise thing to do?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. That is right.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand the situation from the gentleman from Mississippi, this highway is wide and goes through this village. A post office is to be constructed in the town, but it cannot be constructed near the highway or in the most desirable place unless this easement is released and this bill passed.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. That is correct.

Mr. MICHENER. That is all the bill does, and it is for the good of the folks down there and will not in any way interfere with the highway.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. The gentleman from Michigan has correctly analyzed the situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, is hereby authorized to relinquish or modify certain restrictions upon the use of privately owned lands in the village of French Camp along the Natchez Trace Parkway, which restrictions have been imposed thereon by the scenic easement deed dated May 19, 1938, which is recorded in book 24, pages 333–336, of the Record of Deeds in the office of the clerk of the chancery court of Choctaw County, Miss., said lands being situated in section 31, township 17 north, range 9 east, Choctaw County, Miss.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized to execute such instruments of conveyance as may be necessary for the purposes of this act. The cost of recording such instruments shall be paid out of any funds available for the Natchez Trace Parkway.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a release from the Library of Congress made today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

MINE INSPECTION BILL

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, the most recent disaster in the bituminous-coal fields of West Virginia calls attention once again to the pending legislation to bring about greater safety and better health for the miners of this country.

A petition now on the Speaker's desk, if signed by a sufficient number of the Members, would bring this desirable bill to the floor of the House. The measure was passed by the Senate unanimously and continues to pend on Capitol Hill, while some 1,700 men have lost their lives, augmented by another accident in the last few hours in which 7 died and many were injured.

I trust Members on both sides of the aisle will give careful consideration to aiding ultimate passage of the measure. The gentleman from West Virginia, the Honorable JOE L. SMITH, chairman of the House Committee on Mines and Mining, has again attempted to get a quorum that another vote in that group could be taken on bringing the measure to the floor. Failure marked these efforts this morning, but another attempt will be made tomorrow.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the legislative business of the day has been disposed of and following those who have special orders, I may be permitted to address the visiting Members of the House prior to adjournment for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

MINE INSPECTION BILL

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I am one of those who signed the petition to discharge the committee from the consideration of the mine inspection bill, and my name still appears on the petition. I read the story of the disaster in West Virginia and the comment on it made by the Member of the other body who is the Governor-elect of West Virginia. The thought occurred to me, just why West Virginia has done nothing about proper inspection of these coal mines; just why is it that these mines are not being properly inspected, and why the same laws could not be passed in West Virginia giving the same kind of inspection that the gentleman is asking for in the bill that is in the committee.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Of course, the gentleman knows that these disastrous accidents have occurred in Kentucky, Ohio, West Virginia, and in many other States, and I feel that this proposed legislation would not be in opposition to the State mine-inspection programs that we now have but would simply be an aid in improving mining conditions. This is a most hazardous occupation. Let us throw every safeguard around those men who go beneath the earth to earn their livelihood.

[Here the gavel fell.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 20 minutes today at the conclusion of the other special orders.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF THE NEUTRALITY AND JOHNSON ACTS

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the newspapers quote the President this morning: "The silly dollar sign!" This smacks of continued New Deal economics. I would like to give notice that I feel very favorably toward any modification of the Johnson Act or the Neutrality Act in order to extend all possible aid to Great Britain, but I want to express myself forcefully against any tricky methods to avoid direct action by Congress. Do not the people of the Nation trust their Congress any longer? Was the idea of "mortgage and lease," "the silly dollar sign," and "payment in kind" given its birth in the Caribbean Seas? How wonderful to hatch ideas to evade the Congress. We may well ask ourselves, "Are we still the Representatives of the people?" The answer ought to be—"Yes, very still."

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GIFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BLOOM. Is it not a fact that the President specifically stated that any proposition made, whether it is a loan or lease, would have to be acted upon by the Congress?

Mr. GIFFORD. It did not read like that this morning.

Mr. BLOOM. That is what he said yesterday.

Mr. GIFFORD. I hope it may be true, but actions of the recent past belie this hope or expectation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KELLAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. KELLER addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and insert an article on war debts and also statistics from the Federal Reserve bank and other sources on the same subject.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent Mr. FISH was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an editorial from the December issue of the National Legionnaire, entitled "Let Us Arm for America."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein two letters sent by the Civil Service Commission asking how many people will be blanketed in under the recent law.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and ninety-nine Members are present; not a quorum.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

WALTER-LOGAN BILL—VETO MESSAGE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return, but without my approval, the bill (H. R. 6324) entitled "An act to provide for the expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes."

The objective of the bill is professedly the assurance of fairness in administrative proceedings. With that objective there will be universal agreement. The promotion of expeditious, orderly, and sensible procedure in the conduct of public affairs is a purpose which commends itself not only to the Congress and the courts but to the executive departments and administrative agencies themselves.

Despite the tremendous growth in the business of administration in recent years, I have observed that there has been a substantial improvement in the standards of administrative action. That does not mean that further improvement is not needed.

I am convinced, however, that in reality the effect of this bill would be to reverse and, to a large extent, cancel one of the most significant and useful trends of the twentieth century in legal administration.

That movement has its origin in the recognition even by courts themselves that the conventional processes of the courts are not adapted to handling controversies in the mass. Court procedure is adapted to the intensive investigation of individual controversies. But it is impossible to subject the daily routine of fact-finding in many of our agencies to court procedure. Litigation has become costly beyond the ability of the average person to bear. Its technical rules of procedure are often traps for the unwary and technical rules of evidence often prevent common-sense determinations on information which would be regarded as adequate for any business decision. The increasing cost of competent legal advice and the necessity of relying upon lawyers to conduct court proceedings have made all laymen and most lawyers recognize the inappropriateness of entrusting routine processes of government to the outcome of never-ending lawsuits.

The administrative tribunal or agency has been evolved in order to handle controversies arising under particular statutes. It is characteristic of these tribunals that simple and nontechnical hearings take the place of court trials, and informal proceedings supersede rigid and formal pleadings and processes. A common-sense resort to usual and practical sources of information takes the place of archaic and technical application of rules of evidence, and an informed and expert tribunal renders its decisions with an eye that looks forward to results rather than backward to precedent and to the leading case.

Substantial justice remains a higher aim for our civilization than technical legalism.

The administrative tribunal is not a recent innovation. The Interstate Commerce Commission, one of the first of the kind, was created as long ago as 1886. The administrative process and the administrative tribunal were firmly recognized by the courts many years ago. Before the commencement of this administration, the Supreme Court, speaking through the present Chief Justice, definitely recognized the usefulness and constitutionality of the administrative tribunal and, speaking of a statute to create such a tribunal, referred to "the obvious purpose of the legislation to furnish a prompt, continuous, expert, and inexpensive method for dealing with a class of questions of fact which are peculiarly suited to examination and determination by an administrative agency specially assigned to that task."

Forward-looking judges, experienced administrators, and many progressive and public-spirited lawyers have recognized that American jurisprudence must advance along two lines:

First, the cheapening, expediting, and simplifying of the judicial process itself. This cause has been greatly advanced through the adoption by the Supreme Court of simplified rules governing civil proceedings under an authorization made upon my recommendation. Revision of the rules of criminal practice has now also been authorized upon my recommendation.

Secondly, the reservation of the judicial process for cases appropriate to its exercise and protection of the courts from being overwhelmed with masses of controversies growing out of regulatory and remedial statutes. For this purpose, the judicial process requires to be supplemented by the administrative tribunal wherever there is a necessity for deciding issues on a quantity-production basis.

Notwithstanding recognition of this necessity by many lawyers, jurists, educators, administrators, and the more progressive bar associations, a large part of the legal profession has never reconciled itself to the existence of the administrative tribunal. Many of them prefer the stately ritual of the courts, in which lawyers play all the speaking parts, to the simple procedure of administrative hearings which a client can understand and even participate in. Many of the lawyers prefer that decision be influenced by a shrewd play upon technical rules of evidence in which the lawyers are the only experts, although they always disagree. Many of the lawyers still prefer to distinguish precedent and to juggle leading cases rather than to get down to the merits of the efforts in which their clients are engaged. For years such lawyers have led a persistent fight against the administrative tribunal.

In addition to the lawyers who see the administrative tribunal encroaching upon their exclusive prerogatives, there are powerful interests which are opposed to reforms that can only be made effective through the use of the administrative tribunal. Wherever a continuing series of controversies exist between a powerful and concentrated interest on one side and a diversified mass of individuals, each of whose separate interests may be small, on the other side, the only means of obtaining equality before the law has been to place the controversy in an administrative tribunal. Individual shippers could not cope in the courts with great railroad corporations over excessive charges that were small in single cases but important in the aggregate. So the Interstate Commerce Commission was created. Power consumers could not deal with electric rates, nor could individual security holders pit their strength against the concentrated power of brokerage interests, nor could individual laborers bargain on equality with the concentrated power of employers. The very heart of modern reform administration is the administrative tribunal. A "truth in securities" act without an administrative tribunal to enforce it, or a labor-relations act without an administrative tribunal to administer it, or rate regulation without a commission to supervise rates would be sterile and useless. Great interests, therefore, which desire to escape regulation rightly see that if they can strike at the heart of modern reform by sterilizing the administrative tribunal which administers them they will have effectively destroyed the reform itself.

The bill that is now before me is one of the repeated efforts by a combination of lawyers who desire to have all processes of government conducted through lawsuits and of interests which desire to escape regulation. The effort was made in the recent New York constitutional convention by this same combination of influences to deprive State tribunals of their authority. That effort was wisely rejected by the people at the polls. The effort was continued on a national scale to destroy the administrative tribunals which enforce the Nation's important laws. It is from this background that this bill has emerged.

While I could not conscientiously approve any bill which would turn the clock backward and place the entire functioning of the Government at the mercy of never-ending lawsuits and subject all administrative acts and processes to the control of the judiciary, I am, of course, not unaware that improvement in the administrative process is as much the duty of those concerned with it as the improvement of court procedure ought to be a duty of the legal profession.

Recognizing this, more than a year ago I directed the Attorney General to select a committee of eminent lawyers, jurists, scholars, and administrators to review the entire administrative process in the various departments of the executive government and to recommend improvements, including the suggestion of any needed legislation. For over a year such a committee has been taking up in detail each of the several typical administrative agencies and has been holding prolonged sessions, hearings, inquiries, and discussions. Its task has proved unexpectedly complex. The objective of this committee, however, is not to hamper administrative tribunals but to suggest improvements to make the process more workable and more just, and to avoid confusions and uncertainties and litigations. I should desire to await their report and recommendations before approving any measure in this complicated field. In this thought I believe most Americans will agree. The report and recommendations will be transmitted to the Congress in a few weeks.

Meanwhile, without substantial congressional hearings to consider the problems of the executive departments affected, this bill has been passed and sent to me. This bill has been unanimously condemned by the committee on administrative law and by the committee on Federal legislation of one of the oldest and most respected bar associations of America, the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, which, while recognizing the need of improvement in the administrative process, have said:

> Nevertheless, we think that the present bill, under the guise of reform, would force administrative and departmental agencies having a wide variety of functions into a single mold which is so rigid, so needlessly interfering, as to bring about a widespread crippling of the administrative process.

Agencies affected, including many whose activities have an important collateral effect on the defense program have pointed out serious delays and uncertainties which would be caused by the present bill, if enacted.

It appears from the text of the bill that the Congress considered the procedures and the delays incident to the procedures provided by the act inappropriate to agencies engaged in national-defense functions. It is doubtless due to oversight that important functions performed by the Maritime Commission, the Department of Commerce, and the Treasury are affected by the bill. Functions as important to our economic defense as foreign funds control in the Treasury, where general regulations must be made with utmost promptness, would be subjected to delay for hearing and notice of hearing in advance.

Quite apart from the general philosophy of this bill, its unintentional inclusion of defense functions would require my disapproval at this time.

At my request an analysis of the bill has been prepared by the Attorney General and is submitted herewith for the information of the Congress. Apart from a disagreement with the general philosophy of legal rigidity manifest in some provisions of the bill, I am convinced that it would produce the utmost chaos and paralysis in the administration of the Government at this critical time. I am convinced that it is an invitation to endless and innumerable controversies at a moment when we can least afford to spend either governmental or private effort in the luxury of litigation.

Today in sustaining American ideals of justice, an ounce of action is worth more than a pound of argument.

For these reasons I return the bill without my approval.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 18, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the accompanying report from the Attorney General.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the report referred to, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, December 11, 1940.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: In accordance with your request for analysis of the administrative agencies bill (H. R. 6324), now before you, I omit many objections urged by the agencies affected to point out only its major innovations and their consequences.

I. EFFECT ON THE NATIONAL-DEFENSE PROGRAM

The bill evidences on its face, and its legislative history shows, that Congress recognized its provisions to be inappropriate if applied to agencies engaged in the defense program. Since the effect of the bill is to deday decisions and rulings pending hearings and to subject them to judicial review its effect on defense activities wherever they are subject to it would be an increased delay and uncertainty.

In recognition of this the bill excepts "the military or naval establishments including the Council of National Defense and the Advisory Commission thereto the Priorities Board and any other agency or authority hereafter created to expedite military and naval defense." Its evident purpose to protect the national defense, however, fails because the fact was overlooked that agencies not excepted by name and not a part of the military or naval establishments and not "hereafter created" perform some of our most important defense functions and they would be severely handicapped were the bill to become law.

For example the Maritime Commission is not exempt. The Maritime Commission has important defense functions. Almost every phase of its activities under the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 is of primary concern to the defense effort—the building of merchant ships capable of serving as naval and military auxiliaries the determination of essential routes for maintaining the flow of foreign commerce the transportation of strategic and critical material and the training of an efficient citizen personnel to man the vessels of the merchant marine. It makes general regulations relating to construction and operating differentials and pertaining to the service and in event of national emergency or war it has the power to requisition vessels. All of these would be exercised subject to the provisions of this act if it becomes law.

The Department of Commerce is included in this bill. It too has important functions affecting national defense. The ability in an emergency immediately and without notice or public hearing, to issue and to amend regulations, has been a most effective means of providing for the enforcement of the various neutrality acts. For example, it was possible, within a few hours after the issuance by the President of proclamations making the provisions of the Neutrality Act of 1939 effective, to issue regulations governing the clearance of vessels, so as to prevent violations of that act which might otherwise have occurred.

The Administrator of Civil Aeronautics administers the Civilian Pilot Training Act program for the purpose of providing in the interest of national defense a reservoir of trained pilots to be available for the use of the armed forces of the United States. Obviously, the Administrator should be permitted to issue the necessary rules and regulations without notice, followed by protracted hearings. Otherwise, an important feature of national preparedness would be unconscionably delayed.

The Treasury Department is included in the bill, although the legislation excepts the Comptroller of the Currency, Internal Revenue, Customs, and personnel sections of the Treasury. This leaves the bill as covering clearly the fiscal and financing operations and the procurement and purchasing functions of the Treasury Department. Whether it covers the Coast Guard, or whether the latter may be considered exempt as a part of the Military or Naval Establishment is uncertain.

The Treasury performs vital defense functions—particularly vital in economic defense. They would be subjected to the time-consuming procedures of this bill.

One such function is the foreign funds control. Orders have been issued freezing control of foreign funds in this country from the areas overrun by aggressor armies, such as Denmark, Norway, Belgium, Holland, Luxembourg, France, Latvia, Lithuania, Estonia, and Rumania. Such controls to be successful must be applied immediately and without notice. In connection with foreign funds control many licenses must issue, many rulings and decisions must be made. In the first 6 months of foreign funds control more than 80,000 applications for licenses were filed and passed on by the Treasury Department. About 8,000 have been denied. To put this volume of decisions through the procedures provided by this bill would be dilatory, costly, and disruptive of the whole plan of control.

In its financing activities the Treasury issues many regulations with respect to such subjects as bonds and notes, interim certificates, sale and issue of Treasury bills, and offering of savings bonds. The success of Treasury financial operations often depends on secrecy and timing. The hearings requirements of the pending bill would inform speculators in advance of information which every administration in the history of the country has believed should be zealously guarded.

Nor is it clear why the procurement activities of the Treasury should be subject to the bill, while those of the Army and Navy are excepted. By the Strategic Materials Act of 1939 the Treasury is charged with the purchase, storage, maintenance, and rotation of strategic and critical materials essential to the national defense. Millions have been appropriated for the purpose.

Equally important is the defense housing equipment purchasing program which the Procurement Division has undertaken under the recent Defense Housing Act of 1940.

The requirements of this bill are expressed with such generality that any dependable and complete catalog of its effects on the national defense could only be compiled after experience. Its tendency in the direction of delay, uncertainty, and litigation will appear from an examination of its provisions.

II. JUDICIAL ADVICE AS TO VALIDITY OF ADMINISTRATIVE RULES

With a purpose, no doubt, of preventing administrative agencies from magnifying their powers through promulgation of rules, section 3 of the bill conveys a sweeping grant of jurisdiction to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, "upon petition filed by any person substantially interested in the effects of any administrative rule * * * to hear and determine whether any such rule * * * is in conflict with the Constitution of the United States or the statute under which issued."

The vice of this innocent-looking provision is that it opens the door to abstract litigation over the validity of administrative rules, and thereby throws overboard the most time-honored and universally accepted of all principles governing judicial review in the Federal courts; the principle that those courts sit only to decide actual litigations and not to weigh abstract legal questions. President Washington, you will recall, sought the help of an advisory opinion from the Supreme Court as to a legal problem that perplexed him. It was refused, and that court has since adhered to the principle that it will decide only law questions when they arise in concrete litigations coming within the legal concept of a "case" or a "controversy."

This bill must be interpreted as expanding that power or it has no effect whatever. Under the Declaratory Judgments Act of 1934 any person may now obtain a judgment as to the validity of such administrative rules, if he can show such an interest and present injury therefrom as to constitute a "case or controversy." This bill removes that limitation, or it does nothing.

Moreover, in authorizing a new kind of litigation, this bill weights the scales so that the Government does not stand on an equal footing with a corporation or individual contesting its rules. If the Government loses, the bill provides "the rule thereafter shall not have any force or effect." But if the Government wins, its victory is not similarly final. The bill provides that "nothing contained in this section shall prevent the determination of the validity or invalidity of any rule which may be involved in any suit or review of an administrative decision or order in any court of the United States as now or hereafter authorized by law." [Italics supplied.] In other words, the private litigant, if he loses in the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, may simply wait until the rule is involved in a decision of the agency and then, in some other court, litigate the same question over again.

In short, any person or corporation displeased by an administrative rule has everything to gain and nothing to lose by taking the matter to the court of appeals even before he knows whether or how the rule will affect him in operation. In fact, there is nothing in the bill to prevent a succession of litigations by different individuals about the same rule. The bill puts new and advantageous weapons in the hands of those whose animus is strong enough and whose purse is long enough to wage unrestricted warfare on the administration of the laws. The effect on the functions of the court of appeals, which already carries a full burden of duties, may well be serious.

The provision purporting to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction to review advisory decisions of the District Court of Appeals, is, in view of the constitutional definition of Supreme Court jurisdiction, of very doubtful validity. The first act of Congress ever held to be unconstitutional was one in which the attempt was made to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction in excess of the constitutional provision. Repeated expressions in judicial opinion of a determination to avoid assuming the functions of the political branches of the Government, such as administrative rule making, leaves little doubt that legislation designed to bring new and strange burdens to the courts will have as little support among responsible judicial officers as it has among responsible administrative officials.

III. UNIFORM PROCEDURES IN DIVERSE AGENCIES

The bill proposes to prevent errors and abuses in procedure by setting up a uniform procedure for all agencies. Until now it has been the policy of the Congress to set up in the organic act creating a new agency at least a rough outline of procedures suitable to its distinctive functions.

This bill, however, lays down a series of blanket requirements for the promulgation of rules and the conduct of hearings by administrative agencies and for judicial review of their action. In doing so it amends literally hundreds of statutes. Just what statutes are amended or repealed is not stated, but left to the always debatable implication. It alters drastically the operations of innumerable agencies in innumerable ways. I use the term "innumerable" deliberately, because, while the bill names some agencies excepted, it nowhere names those to which it would apply but covers them only by general description.

The principles that governed what should be included and what excepted are not discernible. Thus, the Federal Trade Commission, the National Mediation Board, and the Railroad Adjustment Board are exempted, while agencies now operating under essentially similar statutory procedures, such as the Securities and Exchange Commission and the National Labor Relations Board, are presumably blanketed in. Cases involving the denial of a loan are exempted; but the denial of a grant-in-aid is presumably blanketed in. The Federal Reserve Board, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation are exempted; but the Secretary of the Treasury is presumably blanketed in. The Department of Justice is out; the Department of Commerce is in. These are simply a few obvious instances.

This bill abandons all account of underlying diversities and imposes the same procedures upon agencies as different in structure and function as the Veterans' Administration, the Bureau of Reclamation, the Pure Food and Drug Administration, and the Office of Education. It is as if we should average the sizes of all men's feet and then buy shoes of only that one size for the Army.

The Attorney General's Committee on Administrative Procedure, appointed at your direction and consisting of eminent judges, lawyers, and scholars, has been examining administrative procedures in detail in typical agencies, both through a staff of investigators and through hearing the officials themselves. While it has not addressed itself to a consideration of this bill, its interim report indicates a unanimous doubt as to the feasibility of uniform and rigid procedures. The Committee says:

"The Committee's inquiries have made it apprehensive that a too rigid prescription of administrative procedures would, by substituting artificial uniformity for essential variety, abolish many procedures which now fully satisfy the convenience and protect the welfare of great numbers of citizens and would defeat the substantive purposes of many congressional enactments."

It is not practicable to follow all possible consequences of a bill so unexampled in range and so replete with uncertainties of meaning.

IV. EFFECT ON ADMINISTRATIVE RULE MAKING

Section 2 provides that "Hereafter administrative rules and all amendments or modifications or supplements of existing rules implementing or filling in the details of any statute affecting the rights of persons or property" shall be issued only after publication of notice and public hearings.

1. No exception is made as to rules designed to cope with threatened public disaster or other emergency. Necessity for such emergency rules is recognized, and they are excepted from the requirement that rules shall not take effect until publication in the Federal Register; but this exception, incomprehensibly, is not made applicable to the requirement of notice and public hearing. You are thus presented with a bill which would make it illegal to issue regulations for quarantine in an epidemic in Federal territory or the control of forest fires raging on the public domain unless there were public hearings in advance.

2. Rules under future statutes are to be issued "within 1 year after the date of the enactment of the statute, subject to the adoption thereafter of further rules from time to time, as provided in this act." It is difficult to find in this provision anything but a self-contradiction. Literally, it requires all rules to be issued within a year, except that more rules may be issued after a year. If it is intended to say that all basic rules must be issued within a year, subject to amendments after a year, no end of litigation would be created in determining what are amendments. May a rule issued within a year be repealed and a contrary rule thereafter be issued as a "further rule"? Would the latter rule be invalid if there had been no prior contrary rule? These are questions which would require much temerity and more litigation to answer.

3. Rules now in existence (other than those in effect over 3 years) must, under the bill, be reconsidered after a public hearing if, within a year after the bill becomes a law, "any person substantially interested in the effects" of the rule so requests. No matter how satisfactory a rule may be to the mass of those affected, or whether it may have been approved by court decision, or whether the Congress, with knowledge of the rule, may have reenacted the statute and thus given it the force of law, the time and energy of agencies must be devoted to reconsidering rules which represent cumulative experience of years. No discretion is granted to any administrative authority to refuse any hearing duly requested. Hence there is apparently no limit to the number of successive hearings which different persons or corporations may demand with respect to the same rule.

V. HEARING PROCEDURE

One of the objectives of this bill is, no doubt, to meet the oft-repeated charge of arbitrary action by the heads of administrative agencies in making decisions affecting particular individuals.

For this purpose the bill, section 4, prescribes new internal procedures. It divides all governmental agencies into two classes: single-headed ones and multiple-headed ones. It requires all multiple-headed agencies to conduct hearings before a single trial examiner, and all single-headed agencies to conduct hearings before a triple-headed hearing board. Both the distinction and the requirement seem somewhat artificial. But passing its artificiality and the difficulty of classifying some agencies in respect to it, the question arises whether, if there is need for curbing arbitrary action, this bill provides either a suitable or an effective remedy.

The head of a single-headed administrative agency would be required to name a new "intra-agency board" of three members, at least one of whom must be a lawyer, and "any person" who "is aggrieved by a decision of any officer or employee of any agency" may demand a hearing before such board.

It may well be questioned whether an agency head who is so arbitrary as to require curbing will name so fair and so courageous a group of his subordinates as will apply the needed curb.

However, the bill provides that the decision of the board "shall be subject to the written approval, disapproval, or modification of the head of the agency concerned or of such person as he shall designate in writing to act for him." In other words, the decision of the "intra-agency board" shall control him if he wants to be controlled by it. I am puzzled to know just what purpose this elaborate and litigious procedure before the board amounts to, if the head of the agency or anyone he designates may approve, disapprove, or modify its decision.

Moreover, a long-continued policy of Congress has jealously confined the power of final decision in matters of substantial importance to a few principal administrative officers, generally Presidential appointees confirmed by the Senate. This bill does away with those safeguards, and while it provides for hearing and decision by a new "intra-agency board," it also authorizes the head of the agency to delegate to anybody the right to approve, disapprove, or modify. This would disperse final responsibility.

The bill apparently also requires a decision of a trial examiner unfavorable to an independent agency to stand, however inconsistent with the interpretation of the law in other cases. The independent agency seems not to have been thought of as an "aggrieved party," for in order to bring itself within the language of the bill, it would be obliged to file objections with itself "by registered mail." The only alternative to this construction of the bill would be a construction which permitted the agency to change the decision of the trial examiner without further hearing, and to the surprise of the newly aggrieved party.

VI. JUDICIAL REVIEW

The bill provides that any party to an administrative proceeding who is aggrieved by the final decision of the agency may secure review in a circuit court of appeals or the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Already under existing statutes specific decisions affecting the rights of individuals are made subject to judicial review. This act, however, does not confine review to the specific matters heretofore allowed but sweeps into the judicial hopper all manner of questions which have never before been considered appropriate for judicial review.

For example, such matters as the awarding of contracts, the acceptance or rejection of supplies, the granting or withholding of compensation or hospitalization from a veteran, fraud orders of the Post Office Department, the granting or withholding of a license for a vessel or of a master's or mate's ticket, the determination of claims for benefits under the Social Security Act are a few examples, taken at random, of governmental actions of an executive or administrative nature which may become subject to judicial review were this bill to become law, but which have never been regarded as so reviewable. The ultimate consequences would be not only to swamp the courts with a flood of minor administrative matters but to retard and hamper the work of the executive branch of the Government. The discretion which must be exercised in performance of executive duties would, to a considerable extent, be transferred to the courts.

CONCLUSION

There is no reason to doubt that administrative procedures, as well as court procedures, can be substantially improved. There is no doubt that instances of arbitrary action, of excessive zeal, and of incompetence can be cited in administrative agencies, as they can in all branches of government. None should be more anxious to see these tribunals become better instruments for the attainment of justice than those who realize their indispensability in accomplishing the chief reforms of our century and their necessity to supplement the courts where the volume of business makes the conventional court process too slow, expensive, and technical.

If this bill has this objective, I cannot believe that it accomplishes it. I find myself in substantial agreement with the conclusion of the committees of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York, which have studied this bill and which find the need for improvement in administrative precedures urgent, but say:

"Nevertheless, we think that the present bill, under the guise of reform, would force administrative and departmental agencies having a wide variety of functions into a single mold which is so rigid, so needlessly interfering, as to bring about a widespread crippling of the administrative process."

This letter is wholly devoted to criticism of the present bill and advances no alternatives. It would be much more difficult to suggest suitable alternatives than to criticize this present effort. This would not be an appropriate time to advance suggestions in any event, and, fortunately, it is not necessary.

Your own recognition of the need for improvement in administrative procedures led to the appointment of the Attorney General's committee, which has devoted a very great amount of time to a detailed study of the different types of agencies, the defects in their procedures, and appropriate remedies. Its report has taken longer than was anticipated, because it has found the whole field unexpectedly complicated. When its report is available, and I am informed that this will be very soon, it will be possible to make a better-informed approach to this whole difficult field.

For these reasons, I cannot recommend approval of this bill.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBERT H. JACKSON,
Attorney General.

The SPEAKER. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal; and the bill, the message, and the accompanying papers will be printed as a House document.

The question is, Will the House on reconsideration pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I feel we can all agree that the President of the United States has clearly stated, as has the Attorney General, that the objective sought by this legislation is desirable. The President states he feels the objective is the assurance of fairness in administrative proceedings and there will be universal agreement in reaching such an objective.

You will recall that a few days ago when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] offered a privileged motion that the House concur in the Senate amendments I asserted that the bill in the form in which it came to the House from the Senate would seriously handicap the efforts of the Government in connection with the national-defense program. I cited several examples in support of that statement. Answering my argument, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] said that if my contentions were sound his motion should be defeated. I feel that the President's message and the Attorney General's analysis of the bill sustain the position I took on that day. There can be no doubt that the language of the President's message and the analysis of the Attorney General show beyond question that agencies not within the Navy and War Departments having to do with the national-defense program are not exempted under the terms of this legislation other than those specifically named by the Senate. If the broad language in the bill referred to by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] exempting the Military and Naval Establishments did exempt the other agencies, then why did the Senate add what is known as the Hatch amendment, specifically providing that certain agencies should be exempt?

Practically every Government department and independent agency submitted a statement, either to the Director of the Budget or to the Attorney General, as to the effect this legislation would have on their activities. Let me tell Members representing rural sections of the country who are interested in the farmers, who are interested in the Department of Agriculture and its operations, the brief submitted by the Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture on this bill contained 100 typewritten pages, many of them single spaced. He pointed out that the efforts of the Department to enforce the legislation you have placed on the statute books in recent years would be delayed, if not destroyed, by the provisions of this bill.

You have here a practical agreement on the part of the President of the United States and the Attorney General in which, in effect, they say: "Bring in the proper legislation, and we will agree." If so, what harm will there be in delaying this legislation until the next Congress convenes?

The President said in conclusion that he was convinced that this legislation, meaning this bill, would produce the utmost chaos and paralysis in the administration of the Government at this critical time. He said:

> I am convinced that it is an invitation to endless and innumerable controversies at a moment when we can least afford to spend our governmental or private effort in the luxury of litigation.

The Attorney General points out in his analysis the effect of this legislation on some of the departments within the Government, not only newly created agencies, but naming the Department of Commerce, the Treasury Department, the Maritime Commission, the Procurement Division, and other branches of departments of our Government. You have a direct expression from the Attorney General in reference to strategic materials, the act of 1939, by which the Secretary of the Treasury is charged with the storage, maintenance, and rotation of all these critical materials essential to national defense to buy which we have appropriated hundreds of millions of dollars; yet you make that activity subject to this legislation. That is simply one item the Attorney General points out.

I also referred to a provision in the bill about which I expressed the opinion that it was unconstitutional. The Attorney General refers to that provision of the bill, the provision purporting to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction to review advisory opinions of the district court of appeals. He said:

> The provision purporting to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction to review advisory decisions of the district court of appeals is, in view of the constitutional definition of Supreme Court jurisdiction, of very doubtful validity. The first act of Congress ever held to be unconstitutional was one in which the attempt was made to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction in excess of the constitutional provision. Repeated expressions in judicial opinion of a determination to avoid assuming the functions of the political branches of the Government, such as administrative rule making, leaves little doubt that legislation designed to bring new and strange burdens to the courts will have as little support among responsible judicial officers as it has among responsible administrative officials.

I say it is the duty of the Members of this House today, regardless of how we may feel in reference to bureaucracy and bureaucrats—and you will undoubtedly hear something about that this afternoon; you will not hear so much about the bill and the message, but reference will be made to putting chains on the bureaucrats—I say it is the duty of this Congress today to listen to the Commander in Chief and to his Attorney General and delay the passage of this legislation until it can be gone into with extreme care. Then, if you bring in a bill in the next Congress that will reach the objectives which the President refers to and further says there will be universal agreement, probably it can be passed. It is too important a subject to approach without most careful consideration.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield.

Mr. COX. I wonder if the gentleman from Missouri is prepared to concede that evil is to be found in the official behavior of some of our administrative agents that needs to be corrected by law?

Mr. COCHRAN. May I say to the gentleman from Georgia that right there he confirms a statement I made a moment ago. We are not at the moment considering the activity of any official of a Government agency. We are at this moment considering a bill that has been passed by the Congress of the United States which the President says is not desirable legislation. He states that if passed it will paralyze our national-defense program.

Of course, there are Government officials that have gone too far. Anyone will concede that who understands the administration of some of our laws. But why should we condemn all for what a few might have done.

Now, who is responsible for the condition complained of? The Congress itself. It was the Congress that gave to the administrative officials the power to write rules and regulations. If Congress had not given this power there could be no abuse.

I say you will listen today, hoping you will hear someone who favors this legislation explain the bill, the Senate amendments, and comment on the President's views as well as the Attorney General's analysis, but your hopes will not be realized. Just wait and see if the argument is not confined to bureaucracy and bureaucrats.

What I want done and I am sure Members of this House will appreciate is a real argument on the statements I made, that the President and Attorney General made, that this bill in its present form will impede the national-defense program. That is the all-important question now. That is the issue that confronts us today. Do you want to hamstring national defense? If not then it is your duty to stand squarely back of the President and vote to sustain his veto.

I could name many agencies you are interested in that are affected by this bill. Time will not permit. I have gone as far as I can. The country, on November 5, by a large majority selected President Roosevelt to lead us for 4 more years. His task is a heavy one; let us not add additional burdens by placing such a bill as this on the statute books. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Will not the gentleman let someone who is in favor of overriding the veto speak next and let me follow him?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, we have only one additional speaker.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to see something attacked before I answer, and I think we are entitled to that.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. There is only one additional speaker beside myself.

Mr. RANKIN. Let us hear him.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I am glad to yield to my friend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Put on somebody from your side.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, as I sat back there and listened to the reading of the message of the President of the United States I could not help but feel that the message was written by someone who did not understand the measure under consideration. That the President did not write the message I strongly suspect. The entire message is based upon a false premise, namely, that the functions of the administrative agencies are going to be abolished and courts substituted therefor. Certainly there is nothing farther from the fact.

All this bill does is to give to the courts the right to review, if a citizen is aggrieved, a decision that a citizen feels is erroneous. Oh, I have heard a lot of argument about this legislation, but Mr. Speaker, I have yet to hear an argument that has been based upon fact. Sometime ago the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] talked about an interference with the activities of our defense program. He was very effectively answered by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. Then my friend the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] for whom I have a great regard, talked about an interference with the power program. Well, Mr. Speaker, on Monday of this week the Supreme Court of the United States handed down a decision in a case that has been in court for 15 years and the fact that that case has been in the court for 15 years certainly has in no wise interfered with the power program that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] was largely responsible for placing upon the statute books.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. Just a moment.

Mr. Speaker, in this message of the President's it is stated that we cannot deal with controversies in the mass. Where is there anything in this bill that attempts to deal with controversies in the mass? Bear in mind that there must be a showing by a citizen of a substantial interest before his matter can be taken up in a court, and that case is a case between a citizen and the United States of America. It does not affect an entire program. The Solicitor for the Department of Agriculture wrote an opinion that was mentioned a moment ago, and incidentally this is the same man who was in the Supreme Court of the United States in connection with the Kansas City Stockyards matter on four occasions, a case that had this legislation been on the statute books would have been disposed of within a few months instead of the years that passed before there was a final decision. This gentleman said it would be possible for one farmer to go into the courts and thereby interfere with the entire program of the Department of Agriculture. That is ridiculous. Nothing further from the truth. The gentleman either has not read the bill or he does not understand it or he is deliberately trying to deceive you men and women of this Congress.

There is talk about waiting until the Attorney General's committee reports. It has been my privilege within the last 24 hours, if you please, to discuss this Attorney General's committee with the most distinguished member of that committee, a man who has made his way to the top, a man who is recognized by all courts of America and by all lawyers as one of the foremost authorities if not the foremost authority on administrative law. This man told me himself that the Attorney General's committee was divided in its judgment as to what legislation should be enacted to meet this problem, that many of the members of that committee feel that this bill meets the problem that admittedly exists [applause], and that gentleman told me that the only objection he and some of the other members of the Attorney General's committee had to this bill is that it does not go far enough. [Applause.]

I do not know whether we are ever going to get a report from the Attorney General's committee. I have before me a letter written over the signature of Dean Acheson to the Attorney General dated January 31, 1940, and in that letter he states:

> On February 16, 1939, the President, acting upon the earlier suggestion of former Attorney General Cummings, has requested the then Attorney General Murphy to appoint a committee to investigate the need for procedural reform in the field of administrative law.

There was admittedly a need at the time this committee was set up, but then, Mr. Speaker, bear in mind the American Bar Association had taken up this question years ago and at three successive meetings of the leading bar association of America this problem was debated on the floor by the duly elected delegates from every State in the Nation. They made certain recommendations that were endorsed by every bar association in America except two. One of them was the bar association that the President calls our attention to and asks us to rely on its recommendation. Why rely on the recommendation of the bar association of the city of New York? He did not mention the other association that opposed this legislation, the Lawyers Guild, although it admitted there is a problem and suggests that the solution is the appointment of better personnel. He mentions the bar association of the city of New York. May I say to you if we should take into consideration the recommendations of any bar association let us take into consideration all the bar associations of America.

As far as the farmers are concerned, my distinguished friend from Missouri called upon you people who represent the rural sections. May I say this bill, H. R. 6324, was referred by the Grange to every district of the United States and the legal adviser of every one of the 13 districts of the Grange of the United States not only endorsed the bill but enthusiastically recommended to the members that they go on record as favoring its passage. At a recent convention of the Grange, the Grange went on record as endorsing this particular measure.

I see no reason why we should delay. This bill has been as carefully considered as any legislation this Congress has ever taken up.

There have been charges made that full hearings have not been held. Do you know that every head of every department of our Government was called upon to testify for or against this bill, and they sat before our committee and made no statements in most cases but submitted briefs. A few of us laboriously pored through all of these briefs that were filed, and we are of the opinion that back of all of this opposition is the realization and the appreciation that our servants are implementing the law by writing regulations that have the force and effect of law and they do not want to be interfered with.

I see no reason why we should not vote to override the veto and place upon the statute books this legislation that everyone admits is necessary. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, as everyone knows, I have opposed this legislation from the beginning. I am opposed to it now. In my opinion, it is fundamentally wrong and fundamentally dangerous.

I was surprised to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania say that President Roosevelt did not write this veto message. I have been keeping up with the President for a long time, and if there ever was a veto message that came to this House having the voice of Franklin D. Roosevelt ringing through it this is the one. [Applause.]

As I pointed out before, this bill would bring about the most dangerous concentration of power in the hands of the Federal courts ever known in all the history of representative government—the very thing that Thomas Jefferson warned us would likely destroy this Republic in the end.

Not only that, but you gentlemen who have spent the last few months inveighing against a third term now propose to transfer your prerogatives and the prerogatives of the Executive to a group of men appointed for life, men who never have been elected and a majority of whom probably never could be elected. In other words, you would destroy democracy and set up a judicial fascisti that would paralyze every governmental agency they did not like by interminable and endless litigation.

There are some laws on the statute books at which this legislation is supposed to be aimed that I opposed, but if you are dissatisfied with what you have done, correct your own mistakes by legislation; amend those laws. Do not dodge the issue. Let us maintain representative government and not set up a judicial fascisti in this country by transferring all this power and all this work to an already overloaded judiciary.

I say this advisedly, because I am a lawyer myself. The bar associations to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania referred are dominated largely by utility lawyers whose masters have always been committed to the policy that the people, as individuals, have no rights which the corporations are bound to respect. That is what has brought about this change. Some of the greatest reforms in our history have been brought about by this administration in the last 7 years.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman not think that the argument runs pretty thin when support is sought to be found in prejudice against members of the bar?

Mr. RANKIN. No. I may say to the gentleman from Georgia that the gentleman from Pennsylvania declined to yield a while ago when he said that a man who was aggrieved could appeal. Who, in the name of God, ever heard of a corporation lawyer or one who is in private practice, for that matter, ever losing a case that he did not feel aggrieved? It simply means that all this litigation would be piled in the laps of the courts and stretched out from month to month and from year to year until the people became disgusted and rose up and corrected the wrong which this bill would bring about. These utility lawyers want to tie the hands of such agencies as the Federal Power Commission, the T. V. A., the R. E. A., and other similar agencies that are doing so much for the masses of the American people. But we are not going to place this weapon in their hands if I can prevent it.

I see them go in—and they are doing it in your districts—the representatives of or attorneys for this utility fascisti that I have been fighting for years; they go in and enjoin every agency of the Government they possibly can and paralyze every municipality and every community that attempts to get relief through these agencies from the exorbitant rates they have to pay. Yet instead of backing the Government up and getting rid of that interminable litigation, they would have us pass this law to paralyze the Government and turn these administrative matters that come within the prerogatives of these executive agencies over to the courts to drag them out indefinitely, and in that way destroy the progress we have made.

If you want to correct any legislation, let us correct it ourselves and not attempt to pass the buck to the courts of the land. I hope the President's veto will be sustained. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK].

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, old Uncle Huckaby Doss was having trouble with his chickens. The weasels were coming in there and catching them. He decided he would fence them in so the weasels could not get in, and he did. But he was having a little trouble. Some of it was a little tight, and he thought he would cut some small holes in it and let his baby chickens get out and circulate a bit. But the weasels got in and got all of them. It seems to me that this legislation is opening up that very sort of thing.

Of course, there is a problem. Our good friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] says, "There is a problem; therefore, pass my bill"—this lawyers' delight. If there was ever anything opened up just to give lawyers something to work on, this will give them plenty to do from now on. If we make up our minds to pass a bill for the relief of hungry lawyers, let me recommend this bill. But I do not think we are particularly interested in that at this time, though I may be interested in some such movement. It took years to build up this structure; it took years to build it up so we could get action, so that there was a way of approaching this mass problem by a means that could take effective action, that would really deliver the goods in some measure. Now, because that has not already functioned perfectly we find this legislative opposition to it. It reminds me of a man who, because his house leaks, wants to cut in under the foundation and do away with some of the underpinning. I think we will just sustain the President's veto. [Applause.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, recognizing, as I do, the fact that it is very difficult to appeal to the reason of one of the substantial groups within this body, with the profound respect for my Republican colleagues that I always have, recognizing they will probably vote en bloc to override the veto, of necessity I shall have to make my appeal to the reasoning of my Democratic colleagues.

The election was over a few weeks ago, and on our side we must all keep in mind, and I think we are justified in doing so, the fact that our brethren, as Dr. EATON, from New Jersey, would well say, our Republican brethren were trying to evacuate us from our seats at that time. But, fortunately, the people of the country, recognizing the leadership of the last 8 years and the necessity for continuing it for the next 4 years, by their votes retained our beloved and courageous President and the Democratic Party in power, and not only reelected a Democratic House but increased the Democratic membership, when it was a courageous man who would predict before election day that there would be an increase in the Democratic membership of the House; but we are in control of the House for the next 2 years, and this is the first message sent to this body by the President of the United States, who only a few weeks ago, on a history-making election day, was reelected for a third term.

Now, what are the considerations, based on reason, which should prompt Democratic Members of the House to support the President on this veto message? I voted for the passage of the bill. I voted for the passage of the bill for the very reason that my good friend from Pennsylvania introduced the bill and because of what the gentleman said the bill would accomplish. All the bill does, as he said, "is to give to the courts the right of review on proper petition by some citizen who is aggrieved and has a substantial interest." That is the principle I voted for. I knew that was not in the bill when I voted for it last April, but I was hopeful by my vote that the Senate would so amend the bill that when it came back to the House it would accomplish the very thing that the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants and the very thing that practically all of us want, and the very thing that the President, in his veto message which has been read to us today, said he wants. Does it accomplish that? Yes, but does it go beyond that? The Democrats have been entrusted with the operation and control of the Government by the people. Do we want to strangle the functions of our Government and the machinery of our Government by enacting into law a bill, the objective of which we practically all agree with, when confined to the limits stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but which, in its present form, would bring great harm and danger to the people of our country?

My friend from Pennsylvania said, and I think upon reflection he will regret having said it, that the President did not write the message. I think even our Republican brethren, as the gentleman from New Jersey, Dr. EATON, would say, will admit that the President has the habit of writing his own messages. Certainly, the language is the language of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Let us now see what this bill does, and let me ask my friend, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], in his time, if he intended the bill to do what the bill will do if it becomes a law. I would like to ask my friend in his time to state if he intended that the foreign funds control, conducted by the Treasury Department, should be subject to the provisions of this bill. What does that mean? When Hitler went into Norway, Czechoslovakia, Holland, Belgium, France, and elsewhere, the President of the United States immediately froze the credits of those countries in the United States. This had to be done right away. It was an important part of our national defense and it was done to prevent Hitler from stealing the moneys that could go back to those people if they regain their independence. That was one of the reasons, and yet under the provisions of this bill, 10 days of public hearings are required before such action as the President took in those crises could be taken, and in 10 days you know what would happen. Mr. Hitler would have those credits out of this country.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. Should we not consider what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER] called to our attention, that it now requires even 15 years for some cases to go through the courts?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is correct.

Let me ask this question. What about the regulations relating to the neutrality law?

Does my friend from Texas want to have such regulations subject to the provisions of this bill? Yet they would be covered.

What about the Maritime Commission? The Maritime Commission is included in this bill. If the committee, on page 16, when it excluded "the Naval and Military Establishments, together with the Council of National Defense and the Advisory Commission thereto, the Priority Board and any other agency or authority" had stopped there the national defense would have been excluded from this bill. But look at the words "hereafter created." They exempted "the War Department, the Navy Department, the Council of National Defense, and the Advisory Commission thereto, the Priority Board, and any other agency or authority hereafter created." The Maritime Commission is an important element of our national defense, and that comes under the provisions of this bill.

Reference has been made to the Strategic Materials Act of 1939. What about the Civil Aeronautics Commission and the training of young men for pilots? They come under this bill.

Yes; we might refer to agriculture. The Agricultural Marketing Agreement Act is exempted, but that is the only thing affecting agriculture that is exempted. The land-utilization program is subject to this bill. The Farm Security Administration is subject to this law. The soil-conservation program is subject to the provisions of this bill. The flood-control program is subject to the provisions of this bill, and many other similar activities which the Department of Agriculture administers for the benefit of the farmers and the people of the United States.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. And do not forget the Rural Electrification Administration is also included.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; everything, with the exception of the Agricultural Marketing Agreements Act.

Mr. RANKIN. That is funny on the Republican side.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; but such legislation is making history. It is the American way of meeting the problems of the day. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I voted for the passage of this bill. I will vote for a bill next session that will carry out the objectives stated by my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], the objectives that practically all of us agree with.

The gentleman makes reference to a committee appointed by the President under the leadership of Dean Acheson. I have a letter from the Attorney General, and I ask unanimous consent that I may incorporate it as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The letter is as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., December 17, 1940.

Hon. JOHN W. McCORMACK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: In response to your inquiry, I take pleasure in informing you that the report of the Attorney General's committee on administrative procedure is almost completed and will be submitted and made public within the next few weeks.

The committee numbers among its membership many eminent men having no other connection with the executive branch of the Government, such, for example, as Chief Justice Groner, of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia; Hon. Arthur T. Vanderbilt, former president of the American Bar Association; and Hon. Dean Acheson, former Under Secretary of the Treasury.

The committee has made an exhaustive and impartial study of the procedure of administrative agencies. In addition to detailed studies made by members of its staff, it held numerous executive sessions and public hearings, at which all of the members of the committee actively participated.

I am confident that the report of the committee will be of inestimable value in the study of administrative procedure and in framing legislation for the purpose of improving it.

You will find a more detailed statement of the activities of the committee in a letter written by Dean Acheson, the chairman of the committee, to Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS, which is reproduced in the Appendix to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD page 6788.

With kind personal regards.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT H. JACKSON,
Attorney General.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, it has been stated that that report will be made public in 2 weeks. When it is made public to the Congress of the United States it will be considered by the Committee on the Judiciary in the next Congress, if this veto is sustained.

Let me further analyze some of the provisions of the Logan-Walter bill in its present form to show the advisability of further study.

"Agency" means any department, * * *.

It is often said that this bill is aimed at the new agencies of government, and that it does not embrace a department. Nothing could be more inaccurate. The language is perfectly clear in itself, but boards, commissions, and so forth, are defined as "independent agencies" in subsection 4, page 2.

Subsection 9, page 2: "'Controversy' means any dispute or disagreement concerning any claim, right, or obligation for or against the United States, and any refusal to grant any license, permit, or other privilege."

It is hard to conceive that any proponent of this bill would desire to have the procedure embraced in the act, with ultimate court review apply to any dispute * * * concerning any claim, * * * or any refusal to grant any license,

And so forth.

The sovereign may not be sued without its consent. Query: Does this bill express the intent of Congress to waive the immunity of the sovereign in every dispute, or every disagreement concerning every claim or obligation for or against the United States, and every refusal to grant every license, permit, or every other privilege?

The sentiment behind the bill is aimed at, or grew out of objections to, certain administrative bodies. Assuming just complaints for isolated administrative procedure—the courts have found comparatively few instances, considering the volume of decisions made by all the administrative bodies—is the uprooting of the landmark of immunity justified because of the few justiciable complaints?

SECTION 2

(a) Ten days is too limited a time after publication in the Federal Register of the administrative rules, or amendments thereto, for hearing on the rules. A person on the Pacific coast, in the Southwest, Middle West, or even nearer, would do well to learn of the new rule within 10 days, let alone prepare for the public hearing provided.

(c) Pages 3 and 4: Better enlist a new army of personnel to administer this section to consider the petitions of any person substantially interested in the effects of [every] administrative rule that has been in force * * * less than 3 years

Prior to the date—1 year from the effective date of the act.

SECTION 3

It provides for declaratory judgment from the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia in respect of the legality and validity of any approved administrative rule, upon petition filed by any person substantially interested in its effect. An approved administrative rule is the original rule or any approved amendment, modification, or supplement thereto.

The yardstick by which the court will act is invalidity because of unconstitutionality, or its conflict with a statute, or for lack of authority in the agency issuing it, or for failure to comply with section 2 of the act. "The court shall give preference to such petitions." The judgment is purely advisory and has no binding effect "in any suit or review of an administrative decision or order in any court of the United States." Undoubtedly, the validity or invalidity of any rule involved in any proceeding in any court of the United States is a matter for its consideration. In that character of a proceeding, there would be a justiciable controversy. It should not be bound, and the parties, of course, should not be bound by the proceedings in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia brought by some other person, even though they may show substantial interest in the rule.

Is the provision for declaratory judgments in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia constitutional? If presented to such court is there such controversy as is contemplated in the action of such constitutional court? More than likely the constitutionality of this provision would be assailed. Pending its dispcsition in the Supreme Court, will not confusion reign? In this connection, at this time in a most critical period, should such confusion be permitted to exist?

SECTION 4

(a) Pages 6–7: The intra-agency board shall consist of three employees of such agency—at least one of whom shall be a lawyer. In the first place, it takes an optimist to think that three subordinates of any agency can, or would, give the judicial hearing pictured by the proponents of the bill. Furthermore, the gravest complaints leveled at the administrative process is the manner in which hearings are held. It is charged that young, inexperienced lawyers conduct the hearings and have no regard for judicial procedure or established rules of evidence. Without going into that phase of it, we have here three employees of the agency affected being set up as a hearing tribunal, and only one of them need be a lawyer, and at the same time they take an oath that they will decide such matters upon their merits in accordance with law and the evidence presented.

(b) Page 8:

Within 30 days after the day the evidence and arguments are closed, the board shall make written findings of facts and separate decision thereon, which shall be subject to the written approval, disapproval, or modification of the head of the agency concerned or of such person as he shall designate in writing to act for him.

The latter clause "or of such person as he shall designate in writing to act for him" may be within the power of Congress, but it is a delegation of power not now permitted. It is in the face of every expressed sentiment which is heard in objection to the administrative process. In the Morgan case the Supreme Court definitely required consideration, real consideration by the head of an agency, the Secretary of Agriculture, of the record and the arguments. The idea of Congress in the statute vesting the head of the agency with the duty of making a decision, and then divesting him of such obligation and duty by permitting him to designate some other person to act for him needs no further comment. Such anomalous situation is in the face of the criticism leveled against the failure of the heads of agencies in doing just that thing, or relying upon a subordinate, without specific authority from Congress so to do. It is possible that when this language was written it was recognized that it would place a tremendous burden upon the head of an agency, for instance a cabinet officer, to give minor matters his personal attention, and that such language should be incorporated to apply to minor matters, but there is nothing in the act that would prevent him from designating subordinates to act for him in the most important reviews that would be presented. Proponents of the bill must realize that this language does not do that which they desire.

(d) Page 10: This section is probably the one that proponents of the bill are most vitally interested in. It deals with controversies arising out of the activities of any independent agency as defined in section 1. It will include any boards or commissions with two or more officers at its head. It has no qualifications for the examiners. It provides what may well be a full, fair hearing, but if the agency consists of less than three members it falls back on an intraagency board such as is provided in subsection (a) of this section to which we have adverted.

SECTION 6

The imposition of a reasonable penalty as a part of the costs will most probably circumscribe court review. Yet such review is the polar star in the proponents' advocacy of the bill.

SECTION 7

The exclusion of several agencies and independent agencies, and controversies specified, is indicative of the fact that the proponents of the bill recognize that they are treading on dangerous ground. Congress certainly concluded that these agencies should not be interfered with, either because of their peculiar nature or the manner in which they have conducted their functions. In respect to the latter class, the Interstate Commerce Commission is a fine example. Yet the bill does not follow the charted course adopted by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The intra-agency board for the agencies is a far cry from the trained examiners of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Congress has always been solicitous of the General Accounting Office. The bill excludes the General Accounting Office from the operation under sections 2 and 3, but all other sections apply. The definition of an independent agency in section 1 will include the General Accounting Office. Section 4 likewise applies. With the multitude of claims passing through the General Accounting Office, in my opinion it could hardly function if section 4 is written into the law.

It should be remembered that section 2 deals with implementing administrative rules. Section 3 with judicial review of rules. Section 4 applies to statutory approval and authority for administrative boards and prescribing their procedure. Intraagency boards must be set up and hearings held before them on any claim or dispute, with the right of review in the court.

Do the proponents of the bill really desire such a change in the functions of this activity?

Appealing solely to my Democratic colleagues because of the conditions that exist with most Republican Members voting one way and talking the other, with the Republican Party unfortunately voting en bloc, with one or two exceptions, and agreeing, as most of us do with the objective of this legislation, as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I believe this bill is too far reaching. This bill transcends and exceeds the reasonable objectives with which we all agree, and in its excesses it is dangerous to the national defense of our country, injurious to the farmers, injurious to organized labor throughout our great country, and harmful to the general welfare.

Because one or two unfortunate incidents have occurred in organized labor, let us not lose our common sense and remember that organized labor, as such, in America, is sound and healthy and we do not want to have a reaction against all labor based upon the actions of a small group therein.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank my good friend from Texas.

Mr. WALTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. WALTER. If the gentleman feels that this legislation would harm labor, how does he account for the fact that William Green, in a strong letter to our committee, endorsed the measure and said that its enactment was most necessary?

Mr. McCORMACK. I have the greatest respect for William Green——

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COCHRAN. I would like to say that that letter went throughout the country, but the American Federation of Labor in the city of St. Louis did not agree with that letter. I think that viewpoint was withdrawn. [Laughter.]

Mr. McCORMACK. I have the greatest respect for William Green and all other men, even when I disagree with them, when I know that they are intellectually honest. I disagree with Mr. Green in this matter, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania has quoted him correctly. I do not know how much his view represents the views of the American Federation of Labor. My position on this question is based upon the exercise of my own judgment, after carefully considering the provisions of the bill on which we are about to vote. I agree with the objective sought. I disagree with the excessive provisions, the unnecessary provisions, the dangerous provisions that are included in this bill. Anything I say is in no way to be construed by anyone now or later as an expression of anything but the highest regard and strongest friendship, and greater feeling of respect for the intellect, honesty, sincerity, ability, and integrity of my distinguished friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. If the gentleman feels that some of the provisions of this measure are dangerous, does he advocate the repealing of similar provisions now in the law?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's question covers a broad area. I am not going to undertake to answer that question in the few moments that remain to me. We are considering the bill before us, and I am appealing to my friends on the Democratic side—who on this issue are the only Members of this body with an open mind, to whom reason will appeal—to urge you to sustain the President in this vote. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for 21 minutes.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an observation at this point?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. We all realize that the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts the majority leader of the House [Mr. McCORMACK] finds himself in a rather embarrassing situation today. When this Walter-Logan bill was before the House for consideration, the gentleman from Massachusetts favored its passage, and possibly that fact was a factor in securing the large majority by which the bill passed the House. The bill as vetoed by the President is a better bill than the bill as it passed the House, because the Senate amendments were clarifying. When the gentleman from Massachusetts supported the bill in the House he was a private in the ranks. Since that time he has been elevated to the distinguished position of majority leader. Of course, as the administration floor leader, it would be very difficult for him to support a motion to override the President's veto. Maybe he is entitled to sympathy. Let us hope that his allegiance to the President has not in any way changed his judgment as to the merits of the bill. If this was a good bill when it passed the House, and when the gentleman supported it, what has happened to change his views? [Applause.] No politics, I hope.

One further observation: An analysis of the President's veto message will show that the President has not made a single suggestion as to why this bill should not become a law, which suggestion was not before the Judiciary Committee for consideration and which was not considered and debated in either the House or the Senate. The veto message agrees that a condition exists which should be remedied by legislation. The Walter-Logan bill, however, was not drawn by the administration, and is branded as the wrong method. Delay is advocated. In short, I cannot understand why a Member of the House who voted for this Walter-Logan bill after thorough consideration and discussion but a few weeks ago can now reverse that deliberate judgment. Remember, the President's veto was only received by the House a few minutes ago, and certainly just the reading of that veto message has not convinced Members who voted for the bill on its passage that they were wrong then. Any partisan appeal should not change mature conviction.

The speech of the distinguished majority leader the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] was directed entirely to partisan Democrats. They are asked to change their votes on this important measure because they should not differ with the President's views so soon after election. They must not forget that this is still a democracy, and if we want to continue this form of government, then the House must maintain its independence. What has the election to do with this veto? A dependent, supine, and servile Congress will do much in these days to destroy the very thing England is fighting for in Europe today.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am going to try to be helpful, if I can, in the discussion of this bill and the statement of the reasons why regretfully I urge the House to stand by its judgment. It happens that we live under a system of government, under a Constitution whose first provision places the responsibility of legislating upon the Members of the Congress composed of the two Houses. The Constitution provides that they may have the assistance and benefit of the President's suggestions and advice, but whenever that time comes in America when the Members of the legislative branch of the Government abdicate or surrender this fundamental responsibility set forth in the first provision of the Constitution—and I say this with all respect—and yield its judgment to the judgment of the Executive, the people ought to keep them at home and stop their getting any money out of the Federal Treasury. There is no use for them in the functioning machinery of the Government. [Applause.] That is the first proposition.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. And would not the gentleman also add that when the time comes when the Members of this House will yield to the judiciary they should stay home?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DINGELL. I will agree with the gentleman on that.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; we will get together.

The attendance is just a bit slim. Some of the boys are out kind of cooling off a bit. That is all right; believe me, they have had a good deal of heat put on them in the last few days.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No; I cannot.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Very briefly.

Mr. FULMER. Is it not also a fact that a lot of pressure has been brought to bear on the attorneys connected with Congress to pass this bill?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I really do not know. But I must go on. This is a serious matter.

In the concluding statement of the President's message the statement is made "can least afford to spend either governmental or private effort in the luxury of litigation." I know the meaning was not intended which the words separated from the context would indicate, but the notion seems to run through this discussion that there is something bad, something to be criticized in the attempt to provide for individuals the possibility of a real day in a real court.

Mr. Speaker, there was a time in the history of our people when men went to prison and were not privileged to indulge in the luxury of litigation. They rotted in the prisons of the country held by the executive power of the Government. Finally one of the most magnificent provisions in our constitutional system, the habeas corpus, came into being and a man had a right to go to the courts of this country and have tried before a judge, not some other executive agency, the right of any human being to detain him. This bill involves the same principle, Mr. Speaker. I stated candidly to the House when we were here before that at the time this bill was originally considered in our committee I was in the hospital and do not know as other Members do about the details of it; but I do know this bill involves the same great fundamental principles, absolutely basic in the philosophy of Anglo Saxon systems of government that anybody who feels himself aggrieved by an agency of government or by a private citizen has the right to have his matter publicly tried in the courts of this country. It is a sad day in America that men sneer when the great fundamental question of the rights of a complete trial in a court of the land is proposed.

What do we do in this bill? The first thing we do is to provide some opportunity to the people affected to be heard by the rule-making, the lawmaking agency. The rules of these agencies are laws for the average individual. Is there anything bad about that? Do you gentlemen complain about that? Ought not that to be done? These agencies are permitted in the secrecy of star-chamber proceedings to formulate rules governing the vital interest of our people. Is it right to deny the people to be affected the opportunity to be heard and to contribute the benefit of their suggestions? Is that something to be sneered at? Has that right ceased to be sacred among the American lawmakers of this country, and will they sneer at it? That is what this bill proposes to do. And you are asked to defeat a bill that guarantees this sacred fundamental right. Let us be honest, let us be sensible about it.

Does anybody doubt that as we have brought these powers of Government up from the States and so concentrated them in Washington and have so overloaded the legislative machinery of this Government functioning normally, that we have been compelled to set up these bureaus and that we have given them the power to make rules that have the force and power to construe the rules and the power to enforce the rules. Yet we sit here and sneer at this effort to establish a basic right to effective judicial review of law as stated. I did not have any part in it and I did not help frame the bill, but I know its purpose and, generally, its provisions.

The bill is not perfect, of course, but the opponents of the bill, those who want to defeat the attempt to establish the power over these agencies which it proposes is like a horse which does not want to go along. Any little thing by the roadside becomes an object of fearful proportions. These executive agencies do not want this bill. They do not want to be supervised or restrained by anybody or any other agency of government. That is a perfectly natural attitude to develop. It is a development resulting from the character of power they possess. I want to emphasize this is not personal. They are functioning according to the rules. They are operating naturally. There seems to be a limitation upon human governmental capacity, upon the ability of self-restraint, which will not permit such power to make rules, to construe those rules and enforce those rules to be put with any one group of human beings without such persons abusing that concentrated governmental power. That is out of actual experience. That is the reason why we have three coordinate branches of the Government distributing these powers among three different groups of persons. Nobody just theorized about that. Our people found by actual experience that the abuses of such powers so concentrated forced them to do what this bill is trying to do. That is what we are trying to do here today and that is all we are trying to do. What is wrong with that?

I want to emphasize I mean no reflection upon the present executive personnel. We are dealing with principles and policies of government and with human nature.

I do not mean any invidious comparison, but I would not risk anybody here with such power. I do not question the good intentions of these people. They want to do a good job. They want to do a good job and they do not want to be interfered with by anybody. Hitler does not want to be interfered with. He is trying to do what he considers is a good job and I imagine the same is true with Mussolini. Now, you boys of the newspapers, do not get me wrong about this thing. But this is the same breed of power. This power to make rules, this power to construe rules, this power to enforce rules is the same breed of power that Mussolini and Hitler have. Does anybody question that? Nobody questions it. You just cannot question it. How enthusiastic would those boys be if there was a legislative branch over there and somebody would introduce a bill to permit a private citizen a real complete court review of what they did? We are talking, not about persons, but about powers, about putting these three powers of government in the same personnel, without an effective opportunity afforded the citizen to present his views as to the rules while they are being made and while they are being construed and applied to him. That is what we are discussing.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Very brief.

Mr. SABATH. Is it not a fact that the legislative branch of the Government authorized these departments to adopt rules and regulations?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. SABATH. This is trying to deprive them of that right.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Why was that done? Because we had accumulated so much legislative business, much of it brought up from the States that ought to have been left there, we could not attend to it. Now, having been forced to create these bureaus and departments, we have authorized them to make the rules, which we had to do, and now we propose to establish the character of governmental supervision which all Anglo-Saxon experience has demonstrated is necessary, namely, to permit a court of the country, not those who make the rules, to review them.

Men who profess to believe in our system of government are now criticizing an effort to deprive the people who make the rules of the power, in a large measure, finally to construe those rules. What do you think about that? I repeat, what do you think about that? We have gone a long way since those heroic days when our ancestors took such power from the executive branch of the Government where it had been concentrated and lodged it in the courts of the country. I sometimes wonder if we have not pretty nearly made the round trip, if we have not pretty nearly made the circle back where we were when our ancestors began their magnificent fight to supplant centralized government with a government of three coordinate branches, one the legislative, to make the laws, to determine the policy; another, the executive, not to make the laws but to execute them, to effectuate the public will as declared by the chosen persons, selected by the people for the specific purpose of making the laws, and the other the judiciary, neither to make the laws nor to execute them but to interpret and apply them. How far are we from where they started? We have not been traveling in a circle, as a matter of fact. We have lost our way and taken the back track. Because we can fly through the air and talk through the air is no sign we are wiser than all the peoples who have gone before us, who had the time to think deeply in the silent places.

Mr. Speaker, these are great hours. This is a great day. This is no small matter. We profess to be fighting the battles of democracy in the world today. It might be worth while for us to stop awhile and consider what we are doing to this democracy ourselves. Here is a place to do some of the fighting for democracy, fighting against a concentration of power as fatal to a democracy, as alien to any democracy as the philosophy of any of the governments whose philosophy we profess to oppose. The only difference is in degree, not in character.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I cannot yield to anyone now.

Mr. Speaker, we have a great big job to do right here in America. We cannot keep on going like we are going, bringing these powers up here from the States, concentrating them until they exceed any capacity of a system or machinery of government which the people can control; then turning the power to make rules, construe rules, and enforce rules over to people who never got a vote in their lives, and you talk about a representative system of government. [Applause.] A representative system of government is a democracy that has outgrown itself. We have representatives because all the people cannot be here. We have to have these appointed people. I want to repeat I am not criticizing them. We are considering principles and policies of government. That is no reason why, if we have to have people to make rules, we cannot provide that your citizen and my citizen who feel aggrieved can go to a court of the country and in the open daylight turn the public view on it and let the people see all about it. That is what we are trying to do by this bill. Proceedings under this bill do not of necessity suspend. I want to get this across in view of what my distinguished friend stated. Such proceeding does not act as a supersedeas. Now, I like the Attorney General.

Personally I like him very much, but he found more things in this bill to get scared of than we all imagined were in it.

I will be candid with you. I cannot see how this bill can reach final conclusion at this session, and we all know it. But this great House of Representatives on this memorable day in the history of our Nation, when democratic government is fighting with its back to the wall, when the great principle of three coordinated branches of government, each one discharging its constitutional responsibility, is being debated in the forums of the world, cannot afford, it seems to me, to permit a bill to be defeated which it has twice approved, that upholds a great principle, for which our ancestors gave their lives on a hundred battlefields that their posterity might enjoy. We cannot afford to endorse the principle of permitting any group of appointed people or elected people for that matter, to make rules which have the force of law and to have the power to construe those rules and the power to enforce those rules, all the powers a king ever had, all the powers that Mussolini claims, all the powers that Hitler exercises, with no effective complete assurance of a day in court. I hope I will not be misunderstood. I am not criticizing these persons of the executive branch of the Government. I am talking about the inevitable consequences of placing that sort of concentrated power in any group of people, I do not care who they are. God Almighty's plan is effectuated as much by the limitations imposed upon human beings as by the capacity given to human beings. All the history of the governments of the ages has demonstrated that He has placed a limitation upon human capacity which makes it impossible for a free people to live under a government where any group of persons can make the laws, construe the laws, and enforce the laws; and nobody here can deny it. I speak under a sense of duty, an unpleasant duty but a compelling duty; let the results be what they may. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House on reconsideration agree to pass the bill, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding?

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 153, nays 127, answered "present" 8, not voting 141, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The bill and the message, together with the accompanying papers, are referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed. The Clerk will notify the Senate of the action of the House.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DELANEY asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, ending 20 years of service in the House, it may not be amiss for me to make some comment on my observations of its work.

First, and of supreme importance, under both Republican and Democratic control, has been the steady march toward subordination of the legislative branch of Government.

The makers of our Constitution carefully devised a system of checks and balances under which the legislative, executive, and judicial branches should have some measure of control over each other. It was natural, it was inevitable, that each should seek to enlarge its prestige and its powers. For a century and more each succeeded in varying degree. According to their temperament, the Presidents also in varying degree sought to control legislation. At times strong legislators sought to force their views upon docile Presidents. Less conspicuously, Justices of the Supreme Court interpreted the Constitution to meet their own views of the public welfare. Yet, on the whole, the checks and balances worked out their purpose.

With the World War, the President became, for the time being, supreme. After that war the Senate reasserted itself. Legislative subordination, however, had become so acceptable to Congress as a whole that it continued to look to the President for leadership. The habit grew, until now almost no important bill is passed upon save upon administrative initiative or with previous approval of the Chief Executive. The effect of this has been to diminish the importance of Congress. Particularly is that true of the House of Representatives. Here we no longer pay attention to debates. The conclusion being foregone, there is usually no occasion for Members to stay in their seats and listen—rarely does a speech change a vote.

One result is that oratory as our fathers knew it has almost vanished. There have been contribution factors. The use of the microphone is one. It makes effective gestures impracticable. It distorts the voice. It has manifest advantages for the hearer, indeed, but it must be admitted that it has destroyed oratory.

Another effect on debating has been produced by the perfecting of the rules to the end that business may be expedited. This end was desirable with the growth of business and was necessary. It has resulted, however, in restricting unduly the time for adequate discussion of the more important questions.

Debate in the House has been made far less effective by growth of the practice of reading speeches. The written speech gets few hearers and carries little weight. Better is the practice in the English House of Commons where nobody may read.

Improvement has been made in the handling of private bills. They remain, however, a time-wasting factor. Private bills are generally exceptions to law. They are meant to dispense equity. The present method of doing this does no credit to Congress. It is uncertain, it is often accidental, it takes precious time from more important things. Here again Congress might well look to Parliament for at least some measure of remedy. There appeals for relief are studied by an office at work the year round, semijudicial in its nature, which submits its findings to Parliament where they are usually approved without time-wasting discussions.

Much progress has been made in these 20 years in the preparation of bills. It will be hard for newer Members to understand the opposition to the proposal for trained help of bill drafters. One Congressman stoutly fought the idea with the declaration that if a Member could not write a bill himself his secretary could do it. Now, the aid of the bill-drafting lawyers is warmly commended by all the committees that use their services.

I am not one of those who demur because bills are submitted by the Departments. Surely, they furnish the best basis for legislative work. Their purpose, however, should not be unquestionably accepted. To do that would be to admit the English system is the better, the system whereunder all the laws are made by a committee of the House of Commons known as the Cabinet. Rarely, the House of Commons makes important change in what the Government proposes. Did the Government object to amendment and were it defeated, it would resign. Here no forfeiture of office confronts a Cabinet. Congress has its way and that is what makes it worth while to be a Congressman.

I shall miss the associations of the House. They have been a constant source of gratification to me. I have found the Members irrespective of party differences to be generous gentlemen, courteous, kindly, honorable. The House is a patriotic body of hard-working men, each seeking the public welfare according to his lights.

Of the thousand and more men with whom I have worked, not one has led me to suspect venality. No taint of corruption attaches to them.

It is not true that they are improperly influenced by lobbyists. The existence of a lobby here is a myth. Rarely has man or woman entered my office with the evident purpose of influencing my vote. The exceptional cases have been those of reformers who in their zeal have argued for some measure to make the world better. There have been many letters—thousands of them, urging this or that action, but with no trace of self-interest. I recall no instance of threats save of very few that were evidently the product of unbalanced minds. For the most part my constituents have been willing to let me do my own thinking. I have no quarrel with those of my associates who think it is their duty to keep their ears to the ground and try to find out what the folks at home are thinking. My own preference has been to reach my own conclusion in the light of the knowledge obtained by the information and arguments presented here.

If in this and other particulars I have won some measure of the respect and good will of my associates, I shall leave the House thankful for the opportunity to try to be of service here. In any case I would make record of my appreciation of the friendship of my fellow Members. All of them I wish well.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech made by the President of Mexico at his inauguration and several other speeches made during the time of the inauguration of the President of Mexico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLAHERTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein several communications received by me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I have three requests: I ask unanimous consent, first, to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech which I shall deliver to the Young Democrats of the State of New York; second, to extend my own remarks and include therein two paragraphs from the constitution of the Rubber Workers of America; and third, to extend my own remarks and include therein a paper by Mr. C. G. Hoag, of Haverford, Pa.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VREELAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a radio address.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therewith two very short addresses commemorating Pan American Aviation Day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

ORGANIZED LABOR AND THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE CITY OF CHICAGO

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, last Monday the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], after objecting to adjournment, saw fit to criticize the minority as well as the majority leader of the House on their agreement to adjourn until today, even though there was no business to transact on Tuesday. Of course, I was not surprised at his action, because he had been opposed to adjournment for many, many weeks. I recall the letter sent out by him on June 5, 1940, and the reasons given against adjournment. I shall not read his letter, which I feel was manifestly unfair to his party, to the President, and to the country. The letter demonstrates that the reasons for keeping the House in session were purely political. May I quote but a few of the pertinent excerpts:

> If five or six of us will every day get a special order for 10 or 15 minutes on consecutive days, go on the floor, and "bawl hell" out of him (the President). * * *
> True, the first day no one but Republicans [and very few of them] will listen. But if we are forceful enough, some Democrat will take the floor to answer. If we have our special orders in advance, we will have opportunity to make reply immediately.

Thus, acting upon the plan outlined in the letter of the gentleman from Michigan, the Republican membership about 6 weeks ago voted as a unit against adjournment of Congress; and, to my amazement, many of them left Washington on the same day. Shortly thereafter some 12 Republicans left Washington on a junket trip to Panama, which was the subject of comment by Pearson and Allen.

In line with his letter of "bawling out" everybody, in concluding his remarks on adjournment last Monday, he began assailing organized labor. It is strange, indeed, that the gentleman never criticizes the large, powerful industrial leaders, like Messrs. Ford, Girdler, Weir, Sloan, and Fisher, but criticizes the men who organize for the purpose of obtaining a living wage to enable them to decently maintain their families.

A few days ago I placed in the RECORD a statement showing the tremendous profits of the big industries for the year 1939 and the first 6 months of 1940. In going over these figures, I feel that the statement of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] calling attention to the avariciousness of the manufacturers and industrialists is fully justified.

But my colleague from Michigan sees only the danger to America because labor is and will continue to organize. If some of the industrialists and their publicists think they can bring about the repeal or emasculation of the beneficial labor laws, they are mistaken. Not only do we need the manufacturers in our preparedness program, but we need contented and satisfied wage earners without whom no wheel could turn.

Mr. Speaker, the Republicans, and even some Democrats, who are viciously opposed to organized labor, endeavor to place the responsibility for the delay in the defense program on the shoulders of organized labor. This I dispute, and to give labor's stand in this situation I insert excerpts from a statement given out by Mr. Philip Murray, president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, appearing in the New York Times of December 18.

STATEMENT BY MURRAY

In his statement, Mr. Murray said:

The national-defense program is lagging, and public confessions are being made about plane production falling 30 percent below schedule, light tanks production being only four a day, and of other serious inadequacies rampant throughout the program.

Instead of facing the facts and assessing the blame where it belongs, squarely upon the shoulders of industry to whom the defense program has been virtually turned over, unfair efforts are being made to blame labor. It would be well for critics of the C. I. O. to look into and try to understand the tremendous public service which the C. I. O. affiliated unions are rendering this country, before they start their wholly unwarranted and very ignorant sharpshooting practices against C. I. O. unions in America.

Labor's cooperation in the promotion of the Nation's defense program has been established by its record in the major basic and defense industries of the country.

It is not the intent nor has it ever been the purpose of our C I. O. organizations to impede, hamper, or restrain the continuity of operations or the constant flow of production where such collective-bargaining agreements are in existence. Nor has this been the result of C. I. O. activities.

We naturally hope and intend to improve our conditions of employment and our wage standards. This we contend is a legitimate, constitutional, and God-given right. We will naturally refuse to yield to the greed and rapacity of certain vicious employers who have no regard for either the needs of their employees or the welfare of the country.

Mr. Speaker, the indirect insinuations and open charges that labor is in any way responsible for the delay in carrying out our defense program have been also clearly answered by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, and many others. The real facts are that industry is responsible because many defense material manufacturers have been trying to gouge the Government and, if they persist in this attempt, in most likelihood the Government will be forced to take over some of the plants.

Mr. Speaker, I am not amazed or surprised at the criticism of the gentleman from Michigan or his effort to charge labor with delay in preparedness that may have occurred as reported by Mr. Knudsen, but I do hope that some day in the near future my colleague will realize and recognize the benefits that accrue to the thirty or forty millions of American wage earners due to the fact that they have succeeded in organizing in order to protect their own interests. My colleague never objected to the organization of large trade, industrial, and mercantile interests; the United States Chamber of Commerce or the National Association of Manufacturers. He must certainly realize that they have organized to protect their interests, their rights, and for their benefits. He must realize, too, that organized labor only desires to provide decent living for themselves and their families, to which they are certainly entitled. No man who toils, no matter how much he earns, who belongs to any of the labor organizations has ever accumulated so large a sum of money as to endanger our institutions.

CHICAGO UNDER THE ADMINISTRATION OF MAYOR EDWARD J. KELLY

Mr. Speaker, completing his tirade on organized labor the gentleman from Michigan without provocation turned to me. He started to assail the good name of Chicago and its administration; and it is really for that purpose that I have asked for time to answer the attack. Had the gentleman called attention to the Republican city administration under former Mayor Big Bill Thompson, or the Republican State administration under former Governor Len Small, he would have been justified. But, surely, he was not justified at this time in assailing and attacking the fair name of Chicago, its people and its officials, because I say without fear of successful contradiction that today the city of Chicago has less crime in proportion to population than any other city in the United States. We have a clean city, and under the present Democratic administration we have paid off over $40,000,000 of indebtedness which was accumulated under Republican administrations. I recollect 5 years ago, shortly after Mayor Kelly took office, school teachers, school employees, firemen, and policemen of Chicago had not been paid for over a year and a half, all due to Republican misrule. Notwithstanding this handicap, under the splendid, honest, and efficient administration of Mayor Kelly, we have paid off, as I have stated, $40,000,000 of indebtedness, and, in addition, are keeping up with the current expenditures. We in Chicago have accomplished a great deal, and repeat that we have a splendid city—the greatest city in all the world.

I don't need to emphasize that Chicago is one of the world's most beautiful cities, nor to point out that its boulevards and parks are without parallel. But perhaps the gentleman from Michigan would be interested in a comparison of the Chicago of today, the Chicago under Mayor Kelly, as against the Chicago of a Republican era. Still, I don't believe that the Republicans would really recognize this new Chicago, for many reasons. Take the police and fire departments, as an example. Politics has been taken out of those departments, and crime has been reduced over 50 percent since Mayor Kelly took office. And don't overlook the fact that Chicago runs its police department at 50 percent less cost per capita than New York City does. The fire department has as fine a record, and the Chicago Fire Department is considered by other cities as one to be copied.

When the Republicans ran Chicago—in an era when the depression had the city panic-stricken; when civic leadership was lacking, business in the doldrums, school teachers unpaid, Chicago's financial paper worthless—these Republicans spoke of the great things they were going to do. But it remained for the Democratic administration, under Mayor Kelly, to accomplish these great things. There is the subway system, as just one example. In itself it is a fitting monument to a great administration. There is the saving of over $80,000,000 in municipal expenditures since Mayor Kelly took office. There is the achievement of keeping the public-school system in operation when the Republicans had cast it upon its own resources. These critics who malign Mayor Kelly, who speak in generalities and talk of machine politics, purposely overlook the progress of the city of Chicago since he took office. They do not tell you of the comprehensive improvements made in the police and fire departments, in the public-health program. They do not mention the miles and miles of street repairs, paving, sewer construction, and general improvement in the city. These developments place the city of Chicago years ahead of any other city in the country. Mayor Kelly has worked for additional public recreational facilities, parks, playgrounds, community centers, beaches, and has carried forward a better-housing program. And these improvements have been made with a minimum of taxes. Under Mayor Kelly, special assessments have been eliminated. Oh, I could go on for hours telling you of the difference in Chicago since Mayor Kelly took office. But it is not necessary that I do so. There are always those who criticize without knowing the facts. There always will be. But when they have long since been forgotten, the city of Chicago, one of America's greatest and most beautiful cities, will have its wide boulevards, its green parks, its sanitarium, its superb libraries and museums, its great water-supply system—all these things, tributes to a great Chicagoan, a great mayor.

MICHIGAN

Why the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] should attack Chicago surprises me, for only 2 weeks ago his leader in the State of Michigan, Mr. Frank D. McKay, the national committeeman, together with others, was indicted for fraud and corruption.

I hold in my hand a copy of the Detroit News of November 28, on the front page of which appears in heavy headlines:

United States grand jury again indicts McKay—accused of fraud in pipe-line bond deal.

Now who is McKay? He is the Republican national committeeman for the State of Michigan. With Fred C. Ehrmann, secretary of the State liquor control commission; Isadore Schwartz, reputed to have acted as McKay's bodyguard; William H. McKeighan, former mayor of Flint; Fisher L. Layton, former Flint City official; John H. Marolf; Charles and Earl J. Williams; James A. Trimble; Don Florey; Wellington E. Niles, a purchasing agent for the State administrative board; and Henry Glaster. McKay has been indicted on charges that the State has been defrauded of hundreds of thousands of dollars. One charge is that the sum of $325,000 was wrongfully paid to McKay and his henchmen. Yet the gentleman from Michigan, in view of this corrupt situation in his own State, has the temerity and nerve to assail the city of Chicago. I was first going to ask leave to insert in the RECORD the entire article appearing in the Detroit News, which carries an account of the graft and corruptive acts of these high officials of the gentleman's State, but I shall not do so.

AS TO THE CHARGE OF DELAY IN PREPAREDNESS

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, as to the Republican charge that there is delay in defense preparation, the President for more than 2 years has urged and pleaded for a national defense and preparedness program, but of course was violently assailed and attacked by the opposition. So far as I am concerned, I called the attention of the House to the Hitler danger in a speech, which I delivered on March 18, 1938, wherein I warned the country of the necessity of a larger navy and national defense. I am constrained to ask unanimous consent to insert excerpts from this speech, as the predictions I made have followed since then in the course of European affairs. If there had been the slightest cooperation from the other side at that time, our national-defense program would be far advanced and of material help to those countries fighting to maintain democracy.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 18, 1938]

EXPRESSED BELIEF IN SECRET CONSPIRACY 3 YEARS AGO

Three years ago I voiced belief that a secret or tacit agreement existed between Hitler, Mussolini, and Japan, but my warning went unheeded. The strategy practiced by those countries conformed exactly to that predicted by Professor Masaryk, who was intimately aware of Germany's ambitions.

In the Orient, Japan pursued a course toward domination of the yellow races, apparently with preassurance that Italy and Germany would so engage the attention of the European democracies that interference in China would be impossible.

In Ethiopia, Mussolini's war machine grinded to its conquest while Hitler's silence gave approval.

Internal dissent in Spain, nourished by the dictator countries, finally flamed into civil war, and the legions of Italian and German soldiers took stand in battle against the established government.

Hitler, demanding the return of Germany's lost colonies, only cloaked his purpose of European aggression, and it was long ago clear that he would one day climax the years of planned propaganda in Austria by an invasion of that country. His seizure of Austria is but a prelude of more ambitious plans. Peace- and liberty-loving Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Hungary, and the other small independent nations now see his shadow across their lands—Memel, Danzig, and the Polish Corridor, Alsace-Lorraine, and the much-desired Ukraine.

For the time being, engaged in consolidating his gains, he may utter reassuring words to Poland and Yugoslavia. But they have only to recall his utter disregard of treaties and his oft-repeated statements as to his ultimate aims to realize how necessary it is that they prepare to resist invasion, for invasion is bound to come.

AMERICA MUST TAKE NOTE OF WHAT IS GOING ON IN THE WORLD

One may properly ask how does all this affect America? Who knows? In this fateful hour, with all the civilized world well-nigh breathless, I do not feel that we should follow the vascillating policy of Great Britain, who, in the opinion of many well-qualified students of international affairs, may be the next prey of the remorseless triumvirate. Many ripe scholars feel that the suppression of Great Britain will mean the consummation of a plan to form three great powers outside of North and South America. I doubt very much that France, which is fighting domestic problems with her back to the wall, and Russia, despised by the capitalistic groups of the world, could, after the disappearance of the other countries I have named, long withstand being dismembered also. There is not the slightest doubt in my mind but that Hitler, Mussolini, and the raving-mad Japanese war lords are in a conspiracy to divide the entire world among themselves, or at least as much of it as they can manage to grab.

POLISH LEADERS SHOULD NOT FORGET TREATMENT ACCORDED POLES IN PRUSSIA

Great Britain, rather late, is commencing to realize its danger. Does Poland realize her danger?

The leaders in Poland might well hearken back to other days, and consider the former treatment of Poles in Prussia. Recalling this, and viewing the present prejudice which governs in Germany, Poland should properly estimate the future insofar as her relations with that country are concerned.

AMERICA MAY NOT BE AS SAFE AS SHE FEELS

Up to about 12 years ago we confidently believed ourselves properly protected against possible attack from any and all quarters; but in view of the increased and ever-increasing knowledge of aviation and mammoth airplane carriers, are we really free from military danger?

If this nefarious triumvirate should effect the dismemberment of the great British Empire, what would become of Canada? Could we still feel free and at ease without present-day Canada?

Only a little while ago I read in the public press about concessions that had been or were contemplated to be granted by Mexico to Japan in Lower California. That recalled to my mind the tentative offer by Germany in 1917, in the Zimmerman note, to give Mexico a part of the United States if Mexico would join Germany, and the offer to Japan of the Philippine Islands in return for military aid. When those audacious offers were first brought to light it was thought they were sheer allied propaganda, but we were convinced of the authenticity of these reports by documentary evidence that came into possession of our Government.

In view of all this and our enemies within, I feel that it behooves us adequately to protect ourselves against even the remotest eventuality. I have heard it said with plausibility that if England had stated her position unequivocally in the early days of 1914, and if America had been prepared in 1916, these acts would have had a most salutary effect, and it would not have been necessary to send millions of our young men across the sea and expend billions of dollars. Consequently, and repeating, I feel that we owe it to ourselves to prepare for any, even the most imaginable possibility. Therefore, I am ready to vote for the construction of a navy and an air force that will be unmistakably adequate for our proper defense.

I LIKE TO FEEL THAT I CAN CHANGE MY VIEWPOINTS IN ACCORDANCE WITH CHANGED CONDITIONS

And so, in conclusion, let me say that in view of the alarming world conditions to which I have alluded, I shall vote and work for the passage of the pending bill. This may be surprising to some of the critics who have accused me of being a pacifist, charging that I was against adequate national defense; but let me say to them it is not they who have changed my view. I was just as conscientious when I opposed large Army and Navy appropriations in past years as I am conscientious today in supporting this bill. I have changed my view because and only because world conditions have changed. When I get so old or so benumbed of brain and character that I cannot change my view in accordance with changing conditions and a changing world, it is time for me to be carried out feet first, and I want to be.

I have criticized conditions and things at times, and I shall do so again whenever I see anything that I think merits criticism. But I love this country. I will vote any amount of money necessary to protect it from enemies either within or without. Today, perhaps more than at any other time in its history, the United States of America stands out against the dark and stormy seas of racial persecution, intrigue, conspiracy, and jealousy as the one and only enduring beacon light of hope.

I am grateful to the people of my district for having permitted me for so many years to be a Member of this great American Congress, the greatest democratic legislative body on earth, wherein every man is accorded the unfettered right to say what he pleases. Let us strive to preserve and promote this priceless heritage for ourselves and posterity. I do not expect to be here forever, but I do want the Stars and Stripes and a democratic form of government to endure here forever.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be privileged to extend my remarks and insert brief excerpts about Chicago and also certain extracts from the Detroit News.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COLE of Maryland). Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DELANEY] is recognized.

HON. CHRISTOPHER D. SULLIVAN

Mr. DELANEY. Mr. Speaker, it is with a feeling of genuine regret that I realize the end of the Seventy-sixth Congress will mark the close of the congressional career of one of my warmest friends and most distinguished colleagues from the State of New York. I refer to the Honorable CHRISTOPHER D.

SULLIVAN, most affectionately known to all of us as Christy, who is voluntarily retiring from Congress after a period of 24 years of continuous service.

It was my privilege to have been a Member of the Sixty-fifth Congress with my devoted friend the gentleman from New York, CHRISTY SULLIVAN. Now, having reached the allotted span of threescore and ten years and because of the heavy responsibilities placed upon him as the leader of Tammany Hall, the great Democratic organization of New York County, he has decided to let a younger man assume the duties of congressional service.

Although not a resident of New York County nor a member of Tammany Hall, yet I feel that I could not allow this opportunity to pass without paying a brief tribute of respect to my good friend and distinguished colleague and to call attention to the fact that after Christy retires from the Congress I shall be the only Member from New York State still a Member of the House of Representatives who served in the Sixty-fifth Congress.

Death and retirement for various causes have taken their toll during the intervening years. The roll call of the Sixty-fifth Congress would find the following Members from New York responding to their names:

Frederick C. Hicks, Port Washington; Charles P. Caldwell, Forest Hills; Joseph V. Flynn, Brooklyn; Harry H. Dale, Brooklyn; James P. Maher, Brooklyn; Frederick W. Rowe, Brooklyn; John J. Fitzgerald, Brooklyn; John J. Delaney, Brooklyn; Daniel J. Griffin, Brooklyn; William E. Cleary, Brooklyn; Oscar W. Swift, Brooklyn; Reuben L. Haskell, Brooklyn; Daniel J. Riordan, New York City; Meyer London, New York City; Christopher D. Sullivan, New York City; Fiorello H. LaGuardia, New York City; Thomas F. Smith, New York City; Peter J. Dooling, New York City; John F. Carew, New York City; George B. Francis, New York City; Walter M. Chandler, New York City; Isaac Siegel, New York City; G. Murray Hulbert, New York City; Jerome F. Donovan, New York City; Henry Bruckner, New York City; Anthony J. Griffin, New York City; Daniel C. Oliver, New York City; Benjamin L. Fairchild, Pelham; James W. Husted, Peekskill; Edmund Platt, Poughkeepsie; Charles B. Ward, Debruce; Rollin B. Sanford, Albany; James S. Parker, Salem; George R. Lunn, Schenectady; Bertrand H. Snell, Potsdam; Luther W. Mott, Oswego; Homer P. Snyder, Little Falls; George W. Fairchild, Oneonta; Walter W. Magee, Syracuse; Norman J. Gould, Seneca Falls; Harry H. Pratt, Corning; Thomas B. Dunn, Rochester; Archie D. Sanders, Stafford; S. Wallace Dempsey, Lockport; Charles B. Smith, Buffalo; William F. Wadlow, Buffalo; Charles M. Hamilton, Ripley.

Having enjoyed such a warm friendship and close association with CHRISTY SULLIVAN for so many years, I shall greatly miss his companionship in the next Congress. He is a man who possesses the finest traits of character and all of the sterling qualities of manhood, a man of recognized ability and demonstrated devotion to public service. He has rendered faithful and patriotic service to his district, the great State of New York, and the Nation as a whole.

Mr. SULLIVAN served on various committees with great credit and distinction, but because of his well-known trait of modesty, he never accepted a chairmanship. The goal to which many Members aspire to complete their period of service in the House of Representatives and the only committee in the House to which Democratic Members must be elected by a party caucus is the Committee on Ways and Means. Mr. SULLIVAN is now completing a decade of distinguished service as a member of this committee, where he has served for many years with his friend and colleague from the State of New York, the Honorable THOMAS H. CULLEN.

After nearly a quarter of a century of distinguished congressional service, CHRISTY SULLIVAN may leave with the assurance that he enjoys the fullest measure of confidence, respect, and esteem of his colleagues who have served with him and that he has their sincere best wishes for his continued success in his field of chosen endeavor. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under special order of the House heretofore made, the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. PATRICK, is recognized for 20 minutes.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas, chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. SUMNERS], came before us day before yesterday and spoke on the same subject, as near as I could get it, that I wish to talk about for a few minutes today. I could not get entirely what the gentleman had in mind, I will confess. He got me all enthused and then left me sort of mystified, got me inspired and then did not tell me how to work my inspiration off. I am one of those fellows, I believe, the gentleman from Texas refers to them as "top-water thinkers." I am one of those, I suppose. Being one of those top-water thinkers I have to have it made pretty plain, set out in metes and bounds, before I can understand exactly what is being reached as a conclusion. So in this case he made me fall in love with the girl and then did not introduce me to her.

Among other things, he said, "The heart of America is sound." That is what the chairman of the Judiciary Committee said. Well, I got that; at least, phonetically I got it. But we are also interested to know whether her judgment is sound. We want to know even if her money is sound. We certainly want to know if the philosophy behind her judgment, and incidentally behind her money, is sound. If we feel satisfied that it is, then we can work with so much more comfort in what we call legislation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I gladly yield to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. During the course of the remarks of the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee he referred to the phrase used by the President in his veto message, "the luxury of the courts." My distinct impression is that the President used that expression in the sense of the cost of court proceedings. Every lawyer knows that if a client is poor, the cost of court is very prohibitive, no matter how small the case may be.

Mr. PATRICK. Incidentally, while I am a lawyer, I am afraid many of my own clients have found their court proceedings were luxuries, whether they wanted them to be such or not. They went in them as a necessity, in many instances, and came out finding them nothing more than a luxury.

Our destiny is to have not merely unto ourselves a country in this world—to live in it, away off to ourselves, to find ourselves a land and make of it our land, but vastly more. We must be willing to serve it. We must be willing to accept truth, accept the facts about national life, and we must strive to at least make of this the best we can in the Nation. We must strive to lash our Nation to the shores of eternity with bonds of steel, bonds that will guarantee safe anchorage for those who are to follow us.

"IF GERMANY WINS"

Hitler looks toward Paris today and boasts, "Nothing can stand in the way of the German soldier"; Goering points to the west and announces with words of purported finality that much has been accomplished for the cause of "the people"; Goebbels rides at night through the villages of northern France and declares that France sleeps well under German influence. I do not believe it. It is my belief that Hitler represents the forces of might; might that worked while the French patriot trusted too much those who then slept on the job, thinking a Maginot Line and a love of liberty rendered France safe from any probable force, and, therefore, failed to prepare while a hostile neighbor was sowing militarism with his spring plowing and who grew armaments even as he raised his crops of grain and raised his children; but Goebbels reckons against the certain history of men when he thinks all France is asleep because he sees no flare nor stir among her quiet peasant villages as he drives along under her stars at night. How many a sturdy young heart is beating in the breast of a youth awake in an unlit home? How many a hushed exchange went on today between neighbors? This is France, France the land of Lafayette, of Joan de Arc, of true patriotic zeal—as Vincente Ibanez's figure spoke in the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse—

And if they should enter, what does it matter? The course of Right will not die. It suffers eclipses, but is born again; it may be ignored and trampled underfoot, but does not therefore cease to exist; and all good souls recognize it as the only rule of life. A nation of madmen wishes to place Might upon the pedestal that others have raised to Right. Useless endeavor! The eternal hope of mankind will ever be the increasing power of more liberty, more brotherliness, and more justice.

I believe Hitler is an exponent of force under a totalitarian rule; that his flaunted new order is a doctrine that tends to degrade men and to render them less free and less self-respecting. Believing that, I believe as confidently as I believe in the ultimate triumph of right that if those who represent the forces of liberty and of brotherliness and justice will do their duty in this hour, the Axis Powers will be thrown back in defeat.

Furthermore, I believe it is our duty now, that as we believe in our form of government, and since the forces of totalitarianism have marched against it, and since the loud voice of totalitarianism has proclaimed its benediction, declaring it outmoded and unworkable, that it is our stern duty to give every aid and comfort at our command to those who are at present fighting the battle of democracy across the seas. Apparently Fate has not decreed that our part shall be to attend the conflict in person. I do not see any impending change that will call for more than foodstuffs, fighting material, and the like; but it does seem that we should, if we love and believe in our form of government, be, without stint or hesitation, ready to throw all we may into the provisions boat of those who today fight our battles in Europe.

I believe that is the feeling of the great majority of the people in our United States. Our greatest draw-back perhaps remains the isolationist, who still is able to make his voice heard in high places, the man who with wishful phrases and unfinished thinking would imagine that some great unknown preventative will save us from our own folly and neglect if we will piously declare that we are too good to be approached by any foe and will let out no effort until the lion is upon us. This in a world of aggression in which war has already been declared upon our very theory of the government of men among men. This when a foe who says he is our foe, an announced foe, an armed and prepared foe, is already establishing his organization and developing his "fifth column" on our shores. For the life of me I cannot see what is blinding the sight of our gentlemen of the isolationist faith.

Furthermore, it is my earnest conviction that we must find a way to eradicate all ideas of conflict between those who fight for the same thing. In this connection we ought by no means to have any even apparent conflict between the Dies committee and the Department of Justice. An apparent conflict is unfortunate because it tends to make people feel there is an issue when none exists, think there is American weakness where there is not. The minority on this floor without confining themselves to the province of criticism, which is theirs by right, have sought, not to hinder the program, but have criticized us for not going forward with the defense program more speedily and effectively.

That is a wholesome and encouraging thing. That shows that the end in view and the purposes of Americanism are not a group of divided purposes. In fact, it is not purposes at all but one purpose.

The "new order" for which the Axis is today throwing in its years of labor and offering up its young men on the altar of war is not a thing to be confined to Europe. No pretense that it could be confined to Europe is made. It is an open bid for a way of life, an order to run throughout the world. Germany began by shouting: "We are encircled. Our breath of life is being cut off. We are a great and superior people. We are not to be encircled, circumscribed, surrounded," as we would call it. "We can and will break it up."

That is and has been Hitler's cry. Break up what? Democracy—no less. It is more social than territorial in its nature. One Hitler speech certainly, the most recent one, is enough to cite as to that statement. Perhaps, after all, we made our great national mistake in 1920. We refused to go into a World Court necessary to carry out the point we thought had been won by victory and arms. We foolishly felt that when Germany surrendered the point had carried and the world was safe for democracy. Germany did not think so. So it was not done. The Allies missed the bus then even after they had hailed and brought it to a stop, a dearly bought stop. And the United States became or pretended to become an isolationist nation. That is now history, of course, and it is behind us, but it mirrors to us facts which we must today acknowledge. It startles us but it should startle us.

There is no possible way to mistake the fact that every advance the axis makes in Europe is a march against our form of government and way of life and a threat to us. It is surprising to recently be able to hear the term "if Hitler wins" come from the lips of the isolationists. It is inconceivable that one can believe in and rely upon the American way and remain an isolationist, thinking there is even the remotest chance of a win by the axis, and still hold to his belief. That is how I feel. The only way I could be an isolationist would be to feel so sure of ultimate victory for the Allies that our case could safely rest there.

It is as certain, Mr. Speaker, as the existence of life and of the pursuit of man's ambition that were England to lose, Germany would come into prompt command of the control of the trade of the high seas and that could and would mean but one thing for this country of ours—war—war with the odds against us. Yet I am not today making any plans to live in a world in which the greatest human influence and control is a man with a mackerel eye and a Charlie Chaplin mustache. I would not be interested in the acceptance of an order that would choke to death the very principles democracy is based upon. Isolationism is at this time the most short-sighted, weak, and hopeless philosophy that I can conceive being advanced to a nation like ours, confronting what she today sees before her.

I think now England can win the war if we will only do our part, and I mean if we do what we should. But we should hasten along. Perhaps we do not have to, but I feel that we should repeal the Johnson Act and certain curtailing neutrality legislation, merely to provide elbow room in case something comes up with which they will interfere, because, as the President so plainly stated in his interview with the press yesterday, a way has been found, and I think we are convinced now that while President Roosevelt is not an indispensable man he is a mighty handy man to have around in times like these. I think we are also convinced that Mrs. Roosevelt is not doing his thinking; neither is Mr. Landon, because neither of them hit the bull's-eye as to the idea that the President had in mind to furnish proper aid to England.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did the gentleman notice in the press that Mrs. Roosevelt was supporting a bill that I introduced, namely, one to stabilize prices?

Mr. PATRICK. I did not notice that, but I am glad to see it. Maybe the gentleman and Mrs. Roosevelt may get together on something, since the gentleman and Mr. John Lewis got together.

Mr. HOFFMAN. We did not get together on the election because we did not accomplish anything.

Mr. PATRICK. I was not surprised. After all we are all Americans, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan, and we should stand together on some things.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; the defense program, for instance, and we are glad that the President is back so we can accomplish something.

Mr. PATRICK. I appreciate the gentleman's compliment.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I would not attempt to argue with the gentleman if he expressed an opinion.

Mr. PATRICK. I am sure the gentleman has had opinions in the past, but he has never expressed them before in public.

Actually for more than 150 years our Nation operated as a great Government of separate States. So now that is something to offer the world at this time. Whatever happens at the end of this war the world will not be exactly in the same shape it was in. Now we have something to offer in the form of government that is and has been ours for all these years. We need not feel that Germany is going to be offended so long as we are powerful enough to stand in her way. The offense that Germany recognizes is that of being a small nation and in a position to be assimilated, and the smaller and more helpless the nation the greater waxes her indignation and her fury. Yet Herr Hitler has the audacity to nominate the axis as a have-not fighting the haves. The time has come in this world, I fear, when unfortunately it is unsafe for any nation to be a small nation without the strengthening support of something to give it vigor and power to defend itself. America has that. America has a United States that has run these 150 years. We can show the world that a democracy of separate States has and will work as one country. Whenever victory is won in any measure by the totalitarian governments and the Axis Powers across the sea, it is a denial of the truth of the success of our way of government. The axis' new order is a binding together for totalitarianism as ours is a binding together for democracy, great enough to protect and strong enough to preserve the integrity of each State.

I favor fearless assertion of this position by my country. I want us to adopt with confidence and with enthusiasm the plan advanced by the President in his press interview on yesterday and want to see us speed up the program and the plan that will help sturdy, faithful democratic peoples establish more firmly than ever the right of man to live and be undiminished in his hopes, loves, ambitions, freedom of right of worship, and to save mankind from the reducing influence, the degrading influence of totalitarianism, and the ambition of the ruthless fanatic. I thank you.

The SPEAKER. Under a special order previously entered, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. STEARNS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

GREECE

Mr. STEARNS of New Hampshire. Mr. Speaker, from the dawn of European civilization the name of Greece has stood for the great human ideals of freedom and democracy. In the fifth century B. C., when the western world was faced by the threat of conquest by the armed forces of the mighty totalitarian power of that day, Persia, it was the Greek people that stood as a barrier to the Asiatic conqueror. The names of Marathon and Thermopylae are immortal reminders that the battle is not always to the strong, but that spiritual values may have power to conquer material might.

Again in the fifteenth century of our own era, the Greeks stood opposed to the tidal wave of Mohammedanism that was sweeping all before it on its westward course. This time the burden was too great, and the failure of the western European nations to recognize their own interest in the contest meant the rule of Islam in the Balkans for 500 years.

Again at the opening of the nineteenth century the name of Greece was on every tongue when her hardy sons, opposing their apparently puny strength to the Ottoman overlord, strove to regain her freedom. Nowhere was this struggle of a brave people to be free watched with more sympathy than here in the United States. In his annual message to Congress in 1822, President Monroe gave official expression to the interest of our Nation in stirring words:

> The mention of Greece fills the mind with the most exalted sentiments and arouses in our bosoms the best feelings of which our nature is susceptible. Superior skill and refinement in the arts, heroic gallantry in action, disinterested patriotism, enthusiastic zeal and devotion in favor of public and private liberty are associated with our recollections of ancient Greece. That such a country should have been overwhelmed and so long hidden, as it were, from the world under a gloomy despotism has been a cause of unceasing and deep regret to generous minds for ages past. It was natural, therefore, that the reappearance of those people in their original character, contending in favor of their liberties, should produce that great excitement and sympathy in their favor which have been so signally displayed throughout the United States.

Since that day Greece has won its independence, and despite almost insuperable obstacles of poverty, geographical exposure, and international intrigue has maintained and strengthened it. At the beginning of the present war the Greek flag was on every sea, and the Greek people were advancing steadily in education, in commerce, and in all the arts of peace. Forced by the poverty of their homeland to seek a living abroad, many of her sons have made for themselves an honored name in other lands, and in none more so than in our own, where no racial community stands higher in its reputation for eager intelligence in contributing to the commonweal.

Today again, as in the past, Greece finds herself fighting the battle of civilization against despotism, and fighting it with the same heroic courage that she did 2,000 years ago. Nowhere even in the present shipwreck of international law has aggression been more unprovoked or unwarranted; nowhere have the odds seemed more clearly against the victim; and nowhere has the instant and spontaneous resistance of a free people met with more thrilling success. In a time when many people are basing all their expectations of victory on the preponderance of material strength, we are reminded by the heroic offensive of the Hellenic army, as by the heroic resistance of the people of Britain, that there are imponderable forces that can tell against the juggernaut of brute force.

I believe it would be contrary to all our traditions if some recognition were not given, in this assembly of the representatives of a free people, to this heroic battle of a people struggling to maintain their freedom; I believe further that our Government should take cognizance of this heroism, and of our traditional friendship for Greece, by extending its assistance in some form.

We are committed, thank God, to furnishing all possible assistance to Great Britain, and this need is so urgent and our unreadiness, unfortunately, so great that this must take precedence of any other commitments if we are not to be too late. But while realizing how much Great Britain is doing in the Mediterranean area, and that every additional ounce of help we give to her increases her power to help Greece, I still hope that it may be possible for us in some direct way to give concrete expression to our admiration for the Greek people in this latest phase of their age-long fight against oppression. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. Under a special order previously entered, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

LABOR'S REAL FRIENDS

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein excerpts from certain newspapers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], with whom I have no personal quarrel, persistently attempts to brand me as being unfriendly to labor. He assumes to speak for labor. But his remarks might be construed, though he does not so intend, as an aid to those who prey on labor. He overlooks the fact that the vote in the Fifth Illinois District which he received at the last election was 35,637; that his principal opponent received 14,540; that his district is a comparatively small district if population and employment be the test.

In the Seventh Illinois District the Republican candidate who was defeated by less than 9,000 votes, received 220,793 votes. The defeated candidate in the Illinois Seventh District received more than 6 times as many votes as did the winning Democratic candidate [Mr. SABATH] in the Fifth Illinois District.

In the Fourth Michigan District the Republican vote was 65,667, and the majority of the Republican candidate was 25,224, lacking but a few hundred of being within 10,000 of the total vote received by the gentleman from the Fifth Illinois District [Mr. SABATH]. And thousands of the voters of the Fourth Michigan District are workingmen. My home town has a C. I. O. union.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] is completely mistaken in his charge that I am unfriendly to labor. He fails to make the distinction, and that failure is characteristic of those who think as he does, between the man who works and the man who exploits the worker. I will do anything within reason to aid the man who works. I will do everything I can to expose the labor racketeer. There is no truth or justice in the insinuation of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] that I am unfriendly to labor.

I favor legislation which will secure to employees the right to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, something which the present N. L. R. A. professes to give but which it does not, under the rulings of the N. L. R. B., accomplish. Proof of this is found in the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in more than one case.

I am unfriendly to labor racketeers. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] has never drawn the distinction between honest, patriotic union men and criminal racketeers, so many of whom ply their profession in the city of Chicago.

Many times have I spoken on the floor of this House in behalf of the man who desires to work. I hold no brief for any industrialist or business executive. So far as I know, no Member of this House would assume to defend any one of them engaged in any unjust or unlawful practice.

On the other hand, I have listened in vain for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] to utter one word of criticism, of condemnation, of any union racketeer, of any convicted union criminal racketeer.

The union men that I oppose, whose practices I condemn, are men who are injuring the cause of labor; who at the present time are delaying our national-defense program.

The gentleman suggests that my conduct has behind it political motives. Again he is mistaken.

The State's attorney of Cook County is a Democrat. I here quote an article from a great daily newspaper of Chicago, The Chicago Tribune, under date of December 16, 1940, which describes the kind of so-called union officials that I condemn. That article is as follows:

CRIME RECORDS OF UNION BOSSES BARED IN DRIVE—COURTNEY WILL SEEK TO CUT OFF FLOW OF CASH

State's Attorney Courtney, it was learned yesterday, has laid out an intensive campaign against racketeering union leaders which he plans to put into effect with the advent of the new year.

His strategy will be to cut off the gangster's sinews of war—money. He plans to make sure that the control of legitimate unions is kept from the remnants of the old Capone mob, now headed by the astute Frank Nitti. The rich treasuries of these organizations offer an even more lucrative field for exploitation than the handbook and slot-machine rackets, which also continue under attack by the State's attorney's office.

STUDIES POLICE RECORDS

Another aim of the prosecutor is to prevent men with police records—and already identified with labor organizations—from remaining in key positions in Cook County unions. Many of them have been duly elected and cannot be forced out of office, but the State's attorney's police have orders to keep close watch on them and see that their influence is minimized by scrutinizing elections when these office holders come up for reelection. The prosecutor will see to it, he asserts, that intimidation will not play a part in these elections.

* * * * * * *

Police have compiled the records of many of the present union officials who have been engaged in shady dealings or have been taken into custody. The list is a long one.

SOME OF THE RECORDS

Some of the better known possessors of records are—

Max Caldwell, business manager of Retail Clerks' International Protective Association: April 25, 1932, 6 months' probation on charge of assault with deadly weapon; July 1934, indicted for conspiracy, found not guilty in June 1935; October 28, 1937, charged with assault, acquitted.

J. Livert (St. Louis) Kelly, president of Negro Bartenders', Waiters', and Waitresses' Union, Local 444: August 7, 1924, fined $5 as inmate of disorderly house; April 16, 1926, bonds forfeited on similar charge; January 9, 1929, 1-year probation on charge of carrying a gun; March 6, 1931, fined $2 for disorderly conduct; July 6, 1934, bonds forfeited on confidence-game charge, changed to violation of bail-bond law.

FREED ON ASSAULT CHARGE

Louis Romano, just resigned as president of Bartenders' and Beverage Dispensers' Union, Local 278: June 20, 1923, charge of murder nol prossed; June 10, 1927, fined $25 for disorderly conduct; August term 1928, grand jury voted no bill on charge of assault to kill.

Charles Youngblood, business agent for painters' district council: February 26, 1920, fined $200 and costs for disorderly conduct; February 28, 1920, sentenced to Joliet Prison for robbery, paroled in 1925; June 5, 1928, returned to Joliet for parole violation; December 24, 1928, released on writ of habeas corpus; January 17, 1929, returned to prison from writ hearing; February 3, 1930, reparoled; March 15, 1939, shot and wounded and would give police no explanation.

George Meyers, business agent of Glaziers' Union, Local 27: June 30, 1930, charge of conspiracy quashed. September 19, 1933, fine of $200 and 6 months' probation on charge of assault and battery.

STILL IN PENITENTIARY

Gus Novotny, business agent of Upholsterers' and Furniture Workers' Union, Local 18: March 7, 1938, sentenced to Joliet, 1 to 10 years, for malicious mischief; June 16, 1939, sentence affirmed by Illinois Supreme Court; July 29, 1939, entered Joliet; still there.

Eugene O'Connor, business agent of Tent and Awning Makers' Union, Local 9: December 20, 1919, received at United States detention barracks, Leavenworth, Kans., as Army deserter; May 14, 1923, fined $10 for disorderly conduct; October 4, 1930, fined $50 for disorderly conduct; May 12, 1932, 6 months' probation for disorderly conduct.

Oscar Kofkin, vice president and business agent of Taxi Cab Drivers' Union, Local 777: October 17, 1930, fined $2 for disorderly conduct. Later arrested three times on similar charges, all dismissed; January 18, 1938, dismissed on charge of carrying deadly weapon.

SENT TO REFORMATORY

Nicholas (Dean) Circella, representative in Chicago of George E. Browne's State Employees International: December 13, 1915, plea of guilty to robbery and given probation for 1 year; September 14, 1916, sentenced to Pontiac Reformatory after plea of guilty to assault to rob; four charges of robbery stricken off; September 1, 1921, paroled from Pontiac; April 23, 1923, discharged from parole.

George B. McLane, business representative of Bartenders' and Beverage Dispensers' Union, Local 278: December 22, 1922, found not guilty of robbery, charge of assault to murder stricken off.

Maurice Timpanaro, financial secretary of Cooks' and Pastry Cooks' Union, Local 88: May 1928, arrested in Kenosha, Wis., as bombing suspect; June 24, 1933, arrested in Elmwood Park for breaking windows; August 20, 1927, arrested in Des Moines, Iowa, for investigation.

RELEASED ON MURDER CHARGE

James Blakely, president of Miscellaneous Hotel and Restaurant Employees Union: January 30, 1935, arrested and held to criminal court in bonds of $10,000 on charge of attempting to murder his wife, released when she refused to testify.

Thomas J. Burke, president and secretary-treasurer of Theatrical Janitors' Union and first vice president of Building Service Employees' International: March 11, 1925, fined $100 on charge of carrying a gun (under name of Joe Gould); October 12, 1933, arrested in St. Louis, Mo., as suspect, released; April 14, 1938, arrested in Detroit, Mich., no charge, released.

William Bosel, member executive board of Bowling Alley and Pin Setters' Union, Local 25–B: February 26, 1932, sentenced to 6 months in the bridewell for petty larcency; July 24, 1933, fined $1 and sent to bridewell for 5 months on charge of contributing to delinquency (original charge was rape).

RECORDS OF SCALISE AND BIOPP

Probably better known to the public than any of the above are George Scalise and William Bioff, each of whom has served time for criminal activities.

Scalise became eastern representative of the Building Service Employees' International Union in 1934. In 1937, with the aid of gangster connections, he took over the presidency of this union and inaugurated a reign of terror among the other officers, who were allowed no voice in the affairs of the union.

Regarding the treasury as his private property, he arbitrarily raised his salary from $12,000 to $20,000. He also took huge sums for expenses and these were never acounted for. When it was disclosed that he had once served a term in the Federal penitentiary for pandering, his union career came into the limelight. Recently, in New York, he was convicted of stealing from the international and was sentenced to 10 to 20 years in prison.

INDICTMENTS PENDING HERE

Still pending here are indictments, obtained by Courtney, charging Scalise with embezzling $118,000 from the 70,000 union members, most of them elevator operators, scrubwomen, and janitors.

Bioff was tried in Chicago in 1922 on a charge of pandering and was sentenced to 6 months in the bridewell. An appeal was taken and failed, but Bioff didn't go to jail. He stayed out and grew into a labor leader.

In 1936 he went to the west coast as representative of George E. Browne, president of the International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees, and became the boss of 35,000 members of the union.

From the Washington Post I include a description of so-called union activities which deserves the attention of every Member of the House:

CARPENTER TELLS OF ATTEMPTS TO GET DEFENSE JOB

To the EDITOR OF THE POST.

SIR: No one can make me believe there isn't something screwy about this defense program. The Post of December 13 prints a statement by Representative TABER, of New York, declaring that a shortage of skilled labor is slowing up the defense program, construction of barracks, etc. The truth is that union-labor leaders are the ones slowing up the program.

I am a carpenter, and a good one. I can take my box of tools and go on a job and do anything that is required of a carpenter to do. On the 14th of November I went out to Fort Meade and applied for a job. I was told that I could go to work immediately, but as it was raining hard and I was not dressed for working in the rain I was told to report Monday, November 18, when I could go to work. On Monday when I went out there, expecting to go to work, I found between 2,000 and 3,000 men, both white and colored, being herded around and formed into four long lines in front of the windows of the employment office.

There was no way to obtain any information, the military police not knowing anything. There was no system, no loudspeaker telling the crowd which windows to go to or whether anyone would be hired or not. It was a cold, raw day and many were thinly dressed. There were men there from nearly every Eastern State. Many, like myself, had been told to report that morning to go to work. I stuck around until 11 o'clock, when I saw one carpenter given an order to go to work. I talked to him and found that he had been in line from 7 a. m. He had to join the union first and was thereby given precedence over others in the line. I was watching closely and did not see any of the lines advance a single foot in 3 hours. It was easy to see that at the rate men were being hired that mob of men wouldn't be hired in a month of Sundays. Yet it is being printed in the papers every day that there is a shortage of skilled labor.

Figuring that if it was necessary to join a union before getting a job I might as well join the Washington union and thereby get the Washington pay, I came back to Washington to the union headquarters here. Two or three hundred men were grouped on the sidewalk in front of the offices. The door was locked and the office filled with men. Soon word was passed out that no work permits would be given out and no new members taken into the union. The crowd, disappointed, slowly melted away.

December 5, I called up the offices of the contracting company at Fort Belvoir and inquired if they were taking on carpenters. They said that if I could read blueprints to come on down and they would give me work. I went down to the employment offices that afternoon and talked with the employment man. He inquired of my qualifications and said that if I joined the union I could go to work in the morning, as they needed men who were qualified. He likewise asked me if I could trim, build stairs, and read blueprints. I told him that I could not only read his blueprints but make them for him if need be.

I immediately returned to the union headquarters in Washington and was told by the girl in the office that no work permits would be given out before Friday afternoon and possibly not before Monday morning at 8 o'clock.

Monday morning found me in front of the headquarters in a line of men reaching from the office door to the curb at Tenth and K Streets. At 9:30 word was sent out that no one would be given work permits nor allowed to join the union that day. No date was announced when one could join the union. The crowd faded away.

Now, somebody is lying. I talked to men in that crowd who had been promised jobs the same as I had if I joined the union. The papers say there is a shortage of skilled labor. But if you can't work unless you join the union, and if the union will not take you in, how is the Government going to obtain the skilled labor needed to do the work? There is something screwy somewhere. I know carpenters who have gotten jobs. A man who worked with me on another job got in and drew down $90 for his first week's pay. I know other men who were just as good who couldn't get in. It looks like many are called, but few are chosen.

But I know there is no scarcity of skilled carpenters around Washington, and if the Government can't get them it is because of the ruling that only union members are allowed to work on Government jobs, and the unions are holding the whip hand over the Government. The unions might be able to fool Mrs. Roosevelt and some others, but they are not fooling the ones who do the work. With the papers filled with the unpatriotic sabotage of labor unions throughout the country, it is amazing the indifference manifested by our Congress and officials who are charged with the protection of our Nation, but still more amazing is the active encouragement held out to these un-American groups by those who have sworn to protect the people. The Post has carried reports of the activity of the Governor of Maryland and the Representative from the Sixth District of Maryland in encouraging the work of the C. I. O. in Maryland. Evidently they take the position that they are the duly elected officials of the C. I. O. instead of the State of Maryland.

The Department of Labor was brought into existence in order that the laboring people of the Nation might have someone to speak for them in the affairs of government, but it has turned out that the Department of Labor is the sounding board of union labor and that the millions of laborers of the Nation who do not belong to organized labor have not only no one to speak for them but they are discriminated against by the very ones who should protect them. What a travesty. What a burlesque on fair play, honesty, and square dealing in government, that the strong and well organized should have the backing and active support of the Government, while the unorganized, the weak, and poorly paid are neglected, discriminated against, and hounded. Organized labor has little right to yell "unfair, unfair," when it is the unfairest thing in the world. I often wonder if Katharine Hepburn, the great advocate of organized labor, ascertains if every purchaser of a ticket to her shows is a union laborer. Surely she would not want to receive any money but union money. Is the C. I. O. the only taxpayer in Maryland that the Governor and Representative from the Sixth District get their salaries from? Is organized labor the only source of revenue whereby our public officials are supported and thereby no one else should be permitted to share in the benefits of government? Are the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L. to be the sole beneficiaries of Government largess, while all the rest of the Nation labor for their benefit? It can easily be proven that organized labor pays less into the Government in the form of revenue than all the rest of the country, so there is no reason why they should receive a larger share of the Government's favors than any other class of citizens. Still the cry of "unfair, unfair," like the cry "unclean, unclean," by the lepers of old is the plaintive bleat of the big, strong labor unions. Appropriately enough, organized labor is not only unfair to society at large, but it is unfair to the country, to labor, and to themselves. It is unpatriotic, it is certainly un-American, and it is doing more to hinder, hamstring, sabotage, and delay defense than any other influence in the Nation today. The Army announces that it is behind with its program of housing the draftees, Knudsen warns the country of the lag in plane construction, and the National Guard lacks housing facilities all because union labor controls the bottleneck between plans and production. America is courting the doom of France. Unionism ruined that nation. How long are the President, Congress, and the people of this country going to stand helplessly by and allow a gang of ruthless, selfish gangsters in the guise of unioneers wreck this country? Let no one claim there is lack of skilled labor while unions stand between the worker and the job.

A SKILLED CARPENTER.

TAKOMA PARK, MD., December 15.

This skilled carpenter is not alone in his demand that American citizens be treated fairly.

OPPORTUNITY FOR THE MAN WHO WANTS TO WORK. JUSTICE TO THE TAXPAYER

"Equal justice under law," runs the legend over the entrance to the Supreme Court building.

Equal opportunity for the unfortunate should be the motto of the administration. We have heard not a little about the "princes of privilege," the "privileged class," about the one-third who are "underprivileged." The occupants of the White House have been vociferous in their protestations against businessmen, industrialists, those who furnish the money to create jobs. Administration spokesmen have been bitter in their criticism of those who have, loud in their insistent demands that those who have not shall be given more.

But the administration's acts belie its words. The administration refuses to be practical right here in Washington.

The average number of unemployed during the month of October 1940, which are the latest figures available, as given by the A. F. of L., was 8,130,000; as given by the C. I. O., 8,919,000, and the total money appropriated during 1939 for relief, exclusive of special agencies such as the Youth Administration and other miscellaneous forms, was $2,612,299,052.

Here in Washington, at this Christmas season, hunger and cold are the portion of many and not long ago it was stated that the relief rolls were growing larger. Billions of dollars have been appropriated for relief; billions of dollars have been appropriated to make work, to create jobs, in order that those who had no jobs might be given employment.

Here in Washington, Federal employees, who receive compensation out of tax money, for the Government has no other money, employees of the District, who are paid in part out of Federal money, are depriving the unemployed of the opportunity to stay off of or to get off of the relief rolls.

District and Federal employees belong to a privileged class. They are protected by the civil-service laws. They are secure in their jobs. They know the amount of compensation which they may expect before they make application for a job. They are favored by being granted 30 days' vacation with pay—a longer vacation than is granted to any other employee anywhere in the United States. They are given 15 days' sick leave with pay—more time than is given to any other employee anywhere in the country. In all, they have 45 days' vacation with pay.

They have a short workweek. They have a short workday. The average number of hours during which they work to earn their compensation is far less than that of any other class of employees.

Federal and District employees were granted vacations and sick leave, first, because it was said that every worker needs time from toil to build up against the body waste and the mental strain caused by continuous service. One of the reasons for granting a vacation of 30 days with pay was the plea that many Government employees living in the District could not benefit from a shorter vacation for the reason that they could not go to their old homes out in the States to see their friends and relatives and return to their work in a less period.

What is the result? Instead of accepting their jobs and their compensation, their short day, their short week, and being satisfied to let others who were without jobs or others who, having jobs, find it difficult to earn a livelihood so that they can enjoy average living conditions, have an opportunity to work, many of these District and Federal employees are crowding other workers out of an opportunity to be employed.

Is there any reason why this Government should set aside from the money collected from workers a sum to give a certain class of employees, namely, District or Federal employees, jobs on the public pay roll and, at the same time, permit those employees to work at jobs when, as a result, more Federal money must be appropriated to take care of those who are thus thrown on public relief or deprived of employment?

As long as there are not jobs enough to go around there would seem to be no reason why employees paid by the public, working on one job which they were glad to accept, in which they are protected in every way, should be permitted to deprive others less fortunate, some who are hungry, some who are practically destitute, of the opportunity to work.

It would be a fine exhibition of the Christmas spirit if those who are secure in their jobs, who are certain of their pay checks, would just step back and quit depriving the man or the woman who is dependent, or who has a family dependent, upon his or her ability to obtain work, from getting that work.

Chris Panagos, president of the District of Columbia Cab Drivers Mutual Benefit Club, entered his protest today and stated that there were between 700 and 1,000 District or Federal employees who were driving cabs, either on leave of absence from the Government while receiving pay, on leave of absence without pay, or after they had finished their daily work with the District or Federal Government.

He wanted to know why it was that the cab drivers, who, he said, have great difficulty in earning enough so that they might enjoy the American standard of living, should be forced to come into competition with Government-paid employees.

He also wanted to know how a Government employee, who worked 6 or 8 hours, could be expected to be a safe driver, if, upon finishing his work for the Government, he put in 6 or 8 additional hours attempting to drive a cab.

Some are also curious about the wage-hour law, which limits the work to be done in a week in some classes to 40 hours, but which apparently permits the Government employee to work a 30-hour week or a 40-hour week for the Government, and then put in an additional 4 or 6 hours per day in private employment.

The District of Columbia has sent up a list of those in the District's employ, who are paid in part from the appropriation of public funds, which shows that, as of December 10, approximately 1,000 of the District employees were on leave. How many of these are driving cabs, working for private employers, or working on jobs where they are paid in part out of tax money, no one seems to know.

Nor is there any reliable evidence showing the number of Federal employees in the city of Washington or elsewhere who are drawing pay on two jobs, while several million of our citizens are unable to obtain one job.

Is it not about time that Congress takes action, so that those who, having one job for which they receive tax money, shall not be permitted to work at a second tax-paid job until the unemployed who are qualified and available have an opportunity to work?

The SPEAKER. Under a special order previously entered, the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] is recognized for 20 minutes.

THE DEFENSE PROGRAM

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, this morning, in reading the paper, I read an item which should give us all some concern because it was indicated that some arms plants face seizure. It was stated that the President said yesterday that the Government was considering taking over two or three plants for arms manufacture because they had not been cooperating satisfactorily under the defense program.

Further discussing means of speeding lagging arms production, it was stated that no action had been taken as yet under the draft-industry law, but that some cases were under investigation.

It was also proposed to lease war materials to England.

In addition to this, Mr. Phillip Murray, president of the C. I. O., lays the delay and lag in the defense program to "rather stupid method."

These statements should vitally concern every Member of this House who has the national welfare at heart and the completion and fulfillment of our national-defense program.

Let us look at this situation as it is.

We all know that there apparently is not the proper correlation, coordination, and cooperation in our national-defense program.

We all know that this program has been sagging down and that it is at least 30 percent behind its original program of production.

I do not think that this is any time to discuss the lease of war materials to England, especially in view of the fact that we cannot get out enough production to take care of our own needs, much less those of England. I do not mean by this that we should not help England, but I am looking the matter squarely in the face and saying that the first thing we should do is to see that we get into production and produce something, first for ourselves, and then lease to England. If this wrangling, bickering, disputing, and contention over our national-defense program is not ironed out, there is not going to be anything for ourselves or England either. Therefore, I think our first duty is to devote our energies and everything that we have to seeing that this program is carried out.

Now, what will it avail the United States Government to take over industry, particularly if it, in turn, is going to meet the same kind of resistance, slow-down, bickering, contentious wrangling program as has been advanced by the C. I. O.?

We are not all juveniles and some of us at least still have the capacity to think. You all know where this bottleneck in our program lies. I think any fairminded man can point his finger fairly and squarely at the C. I. O. and their program of riot, contention, strife, and endeavor to stop our program. You all know that, according to the news, these people are now converging upon Washington under the banner of "keeping this country out of war."

I believe the great majority of this House is dead against this country going to war, and I am one of that majority, primarily because this country is not prepared for war. On the other hand, I do not believe that the primary motive of the C. I. O. is to come here to keep this country out of war, so much as it is to come here to see that they retain their full, undisturbed power over the program of national defense and to perpetuate themselves in that power.

I say to our Executive and the United States at large, that the finger has been pointed at industry and the lack of industrial cooperation, but the administration has failed to put its finger on the real cause—namely, the lust for power of the C. I. O. and the misapplication of the law under the N. L. R. B.

I put this fairly and squarely to the people of the United States as a whole, both Houses of Congress, and the administration, to step in and put the finger of blame where it properly belongs, on this C. I. O. group, and to immediately begin to clean house in its program and throw every one of these persons and organizations out of the picture. This having been done, a chairman of the national-defense program should be appointed and vested with power to coordinate and correlate this program as it should be, and obtain the cooperation of all parties concerned.

This should not have to be brought about by force, but I believe public sentiment demands that both business and industry, and the C. I. O., should show enough patriotic interest to preserve and protect this country.

Industry cannot produce if labor does not cooperate. I believe the average laboring man in this country is just as patriotic as any industrial owner, and that he is crying for the privilege of cooperating, and the great mass of labor in general will do the same thing. While we are willing and ready and thankful that this is the case, let it be understood at the same time that we are not going to close our eyes and become blinded to the fact that there is a minority group, headed by the C. I. O., who put their racket and racketeering methods ahead of the patriotic interests and welfare of this country.

It is also stated that these war materials, which it is hoped can be leased to England, could be subject to mortgage. I again say, that if no war materials are produced, there can be no mortgage on them, because you cannot place a mortgage on a thing that does not exist, and the first thing to do is to produce the materials.

I think another obligation is to fulfill our present program so far as our own needs are concerned. Then, on top of that, the administration should straighten out this mess, and if they want to help England, deliver to England 100 percent and on time, those things they have already ordered.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I yield to the gentlewoman from Illinois.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. I wish the gentleman would elucidate that point.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. It just simply means this, that if there is no war material produced you cannot lease it and you cannot use it.

If they did not need them, they would not have ordered them. I think all this talk about finances, and generalization about what we are going to do away out in the future, is second to delivery of those things that are needed so badly right now.

I am further interested in Mr. Murray's statement on "stupidity." My answer to him is that the most stupid thing that has been done, all told, is to have placed the C. I. O. on the national-defense program. It is a question whether this should be first or second, and that the next most stupid thing that was done was to give so much consideration to that proven un-American C. I. O. group as they have had; this coddling of them, this pampering, this giving in to their every whim and wish in order that they may throw all other labor groups out of the window and destroy them, and then finally make a Communistic republic out of this country, the listening to them and the upholding of their destruction of the right of individual liberty—those things to me are the most stupid things that have been done, and that is Mr. Murray's answer.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman has noticed that Mr. Bridges has come east by plane. Has the gentleman learned whether he is going to Australia voluntarily or whether the Labor Department intends to deport him, or whether the Department of Justice intends to prosecute him, or what he is going to do?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. No; Mr. Bridges came in here to go into consultation with Mr. Murray to further our program according to his interests. I wish that he had taken the direction the other way, to Australia, I hope that he takes it soon, and I hope this administration can see that.

I think Mr. Murray's further idea that he can come to Washington and put pressure on many Members is going to receive a rude shock, because I think the Members of Congress are now coming to see their duty so plainly that Mr. Murray will find his strong-arm methods are now out of date.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not believe we should generalize too much on the C. I. O. in making these charges, because I know of hundreds of fine, hard-working, patriotic members of the C. I. O. It is true that some of the leaders are subject to criticism, but I believe we should differentiate between those who would destroy labor within the C. I. O. and those who are just as honest in their motives as we are. Also I might add that I do not know what issue some of us would have if the Justice Department would take it into their hands to deport Harry Bridges. It seems to me we would not have anything to talk about then. One of these days they may double-cross us by deporting him, and then it would take an issue away from us.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I agree with the gentleman that there are many good, patriotic men within the group known as the C. I. O.

Mr. WOLCOTT. And women.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. But the group to which I am directing my remarks is the racketeer, the highjacker, the un-American, the Communist group in the C. I. O., which is in the minority, but this minority is controlling the whole group. I am not directing my remarks to the patriotic individual who is the real American in the group. If Bridges is deported, his deportation will have a very salutory effect on others of his stripe. We will have plenty of issue with the remainder, as the gentleman well knows.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman does not wholly agree with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] that if Harry Bridges was deported that would end all our troubles, does he? Because, for example, we would have this unemployment issue and we would still have this national bankruptcy and we would have the national-defense program and there would be quite a few things to attend to here.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. That is true. There are many things beyond Harry Bridges, but it would be a very good start and I think his deportation would have a very salutary effect upon these racketeers in this country who are emulating Harry Bridges.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the gentleman will yield, you cannot blame labor for our bankrupt condition. There is not much relativity between the bankrupt condition of the Federal Treasury and labor and, surely, labor should not be charged with that.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. But if they increase the amount involved, it will have some effect. There is an increase now of $250,000,000 in the airplane industry alone, and if that is increased we might find ourselves bankrupt because, after all, it is a quarter of a billion dollars they have asked in the airplane industry and they are going to act also in the lumber industry and the steel industry and in connection with the sawmills of the country, as well as the aluminum interests and every other industry they can lay their hands on.

Miss SUMNER of Illinois. And the farm industry.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. And the farm industry, yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I understood the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] to say that if Harry Bridges were deported we might not have any issue. It is true there is no connection between Harry Bridges and national bankruptcy. We still have national bankruptcy, and we will have unemployment after Harry Bridges is gone, and we will have those questions, and I do not think the gentleman needs to worry about the millenium coming at once.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am in favor of deporting Harry Bridges. I am equally in favor of it with the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], but I think it is rather unfair to charge all C. I. O. members with being undesirables simply because there are one or two who should be kicked out of the country.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. If the gentleman will permit, no one has ever charged anything like that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It has been proven in the last 60 days that there are many good, hard-working American citizens in the C. I. O. who are just as jealous of the preservation of the American form of government as you and I.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I cannot yield further. If I were an attorney I would say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] that that question has been asked and answered.

Mr. HOFFMAN. No one has made any such charge as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has suggested here, that all C. I. O. are unpatriotic. No one has dreamed of doing that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman understands that I have not charged the gentleman from Michigan or the gentleman from California with making that statement. Of course, I would not want anything I have said to be interpreted as meaning that either of the gentleman has made that charge.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I do not like Mr. Murray's calling into the C. I. O. conferences such men as Harry Bridges, to go over what he terms "routine organization matters." You all know who Bridges is and what he is, but I am going to handle this at a different date.

It is reported that the President stated, "It is for the Commission to keep everlastingly at the problem and keep pushing people." I agree with him in his general statement, but ask for their cooperation, but I certainly believe he should get in and "push the C. I. O. around," and see that they adopt American methods and work for our American ideals and our national defense and see that their racket of profiteering on national defense is pushed out of the country.

Mention has been made of the "silly foolish dollar sign." I am rather sorry to see our American dollar termed in this way, for, after all, it is the American dollar that must pay for these things. If it was not for the billions of dollars that Congress voted, at the President's request, to carry out this program, we would have no national defense at all, and, unfortunately, that same dollar must again be thrown in the face of the American taxpayers to pay for this whole program, and it is going to be a hard, heavy load for them to assume. I believe that our people are patriotic enough to make any sacrifice in dollars to make this country safe, regardless of how heavy it may be, but at the same time, I believe it is the opinion of the great American people that they do not want those dollars wasted, either in uncalled-for excess profits on the part of industry, nor in excess payments to racketeers for the C. I. O. racket. It is the American dollar that is today making this program possible.

I yield to no man in support of the President in a real program for defense, and I feel that I am supporting him in his defense program in pointing out to him the bottleneck in the whole program, and in putting my finger on the delay caused by the C. I. O.

With reference to the 40-hour week, we all know that the supervisorial and executive ends of all these positions are working hours and hours overtime, for which they receive nothing extra.

We all know, too, that there is a limited number of men in the skilled and precision division of this work, and that it takes a long time to train others in these same capacities. Therefore, is it not reasonable, in this emergency—and it is an emergency—to work longer than 40 hours a week? Is it also not only reasonable to think that it would be better to work 40 hours a week than to meet final destruction because we would not work, the same as they did in France? Is it also not reasonable to believe that, if the man-power of this country can be drafted and taken into a program, and these same men can accept this in a patriotic spirit, that the C. I. O. can be at least reasonable enough to defer their unpatriotic demands to the welfare of the country?

I think it is our duty, for every single one of us in this Congress, to see that no special interest destroys the program that we have appropriated the billions of dollars for. I think it is our further duty to see that every dollar of this goes into national defense and is properly spent, and none of it is diverted, either for excess profits to industry, or excess profits to C. I. O. racketeers. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I was very much interested in what the gentleman had to say about manufacturing goods and lending them to England. I hope the gentleman will bring out the fact that the goods we propose to lend are military products or wartime goods and as I understand the press reports this morning, the President proposes that we are to receive back in payment for these wartime goods, peacetime goods. I hope somebody sometime will develop from the administration what Australia, Canada, New Zealand, and British Africa are doing with reference to supplying peacetime goods to the buying customers of the world while this war is being prosecuted and while we channel all of our labor and manufacturing ability into the production of wartime goods to be sent to England.

In other words, it seems to me that the President is now proposing that we borrow the money with which to produce these goods at the present time to be loaned to England and, subsequently, that we forfeit our internal markets to England so that she may ship back dollar value of peacetime goods, closing our factories and throwing our people out of work as, when, and if the hostilities cease. Would the gentleman mind commenting on that?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. I think we have to look forward to the time when those manufactured products begin to flow into this country from England and to think what might happen to us.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. THOMAS F. FORD, for the balance of the session, on account of sickness in family.

To Mr. CELLER, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. MILLS of Arkansas (at the request of Mr. CRAVENS), for today, on account of business.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, December 19, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

2072. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting draft of a proposed bill to amend section 32 of an act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1935, as amended, and to encourage the exportation of agricultural commodities or products thereof, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

2073. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report covering expenditures made from the appropriation "Education of Natives of Alaska, 1939–41"; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

2074. A letter from the Chairman, Federal Communications Commission, transmitting a letter with respect to the subject of whether or not any new wire or radio communication legislation is required better to insure safety of life and property pursuant to the second proviso of section 4 (k) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

2075. A letter from the Chairman, Federal Communications Commission, transmitting report of the Commission on the special study of the radio requirements necessary or desirable for safety purposes for ships navigating the Great Lakes and the inland waters of the United States; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

2076. A letter from the Veterans of Foreign Wars, transmitting report of the national officers of the Veterans of Foreign Wars; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2077. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting official notice pursuant to section 160, title 5, United States Code, of the ratification of the first 10 amendments to the Constitution of the United States by the States of Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Georgia; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. TABER:

H. R. 10735. A bill to provide for the more expeditious and efficient procurement of the national-defense needs of the Army and Navy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY:

H. Res. 645. Resolution creating a select committee of the House of Representatives to be known as the Committee on Peace; to the Committee on Rules.

SENATE

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, November 19, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Father of lights, who sometimes makest us to be glad in the midst of sighs and tears: Even as the world sighs and weeps, we beseech Thee to fill our hearts with the holy joy of Christmas as again we hear the song of angels and the antiphon of a mother's lullaby, crooned to her blessed Child. Grant to us all that in true humility we may be clothed with the garments of innocence as we commemorate the birth of Him who abhorred not our flesh but was content to be born of the Virgin Mary. We bless Thee for the dawning of the light in Bethlehem's manger, when in the fullness of time Thou didst gather Thy light into life, so that even simple folk could see Jesus, the star of the morning; Jesus, the light of the world. May this light be about us and our children from the cradle to the grave, that we may be numbered among those farsighted souls who from the mountaintops of vision herald the coming of the day and bear aloft the torch of purity and truth, to the ushering in of peace and good will to men. We ask it in the name of the blessed Christ Child. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Monday, December 16, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT—APPROVAL OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

On December 6, 1940:

S. 4373. An act to amend the act of June 25, 1938, entitled "An Act extending the classified civil service to include postmasters of the first, second, and third classes, and for other purposes."

On December 16, 1940:

S. 3765. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg., and for other purposes;

S. 3934. An act authorizing the State of Michigan, acting through the International Bridge Authority of Michigan, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the St. Marys River, from a point in or near the city of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., to a point in the Province of Ontario, Canada;

S. 4135. An act to legalize the construction of the State highway board of Georgia of a free highway bridge across the Withlacoochee River, between Valdosta, Ga., and Madison, Fla., at Horns Ferry;

S. 4370. An act authorizing the President to appoint an Under Secretary of War during national emergencies, fixing the compensation of the Under Secretary of War, and authorizing the Secretary of War to prescribe duties; and

S. J. Res. 306. Joint resolution extending the time for submitting the final report of the Temporary National Economic Committee.

On December 17, 1940:

S. J. Res. 302. Joint resolution authorizing the President to invite foreign countries to participate in the Pan American Cotton Congress.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5336) for the relief of Peter Bavisotto.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10712) to permit the relinquishment or modification of certain restrictions upon the use of lands along the Natchez Trace Parkway in the village of French Camp, Miss., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House having proceeded to reconsider the bill (H. R. 6324) to provide for the more expeditious settlement of disputes with the United States, and for other purposes, returned by the President of the United States with his objections to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, it was Resolved, That the said bill do not pass, two-thirds of the House of Representatives not agreeing to pass the same.

SENATOR FROM WASHINGTON

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have here a telegram from the former Senator from Washington, Mr. Schwellenbach, advising the Senate of his resignation from this body because of his appointment to the bench. I also have a telegram from Hon. Clarence D. Martin, Governor of Washington, announcing the appointment of Hon. MON C. WALLGREN to the vacancy created by the resignation of Senator Schwellenbach, Mr. WALLGREN having been recently elected for the full term of 6 years beginning January 3, 1941. I ask that these telegrams be read to the Senate, and that following them the Senator-designate be permitted to take the oath of office.

The telegram from Governor Martin states that the commission is on its way by air mail, but it has not yet reached here. Under those circumstances it is customary to have Senators sworn in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The telegrams will be read.

The legislative clerk read the telegrams, as follows:

SPOKANE, WASH., December 16, 1940.

Col. EDWIN HALSEY,
Secretary, United States Senate:

Simultaneously with this telegram, I am submitting the following telegram to Clarence D. Martin, Governor of the State of Washington, at Olympia, Wash.:

"I herewith submit my resignation as United States Senator from the State of Washington. This resignation to be effective 12 o'clock noon, Pacific standard time, December 16, 1940."

L. B. SCHWELLENBACH,
United States Senator.

OLYMPIA, WASH., December 18, 1940.

Hon. EDWIN A. HALSEY,
Secretary, United States Senate:

I have today appointed MON C. WALLGREN to fill the unexpired term of LEWIS B. SCHWELLENBACH in the United States Senate. I trust you will regard this notification as sufficient credentials for induction. Official certificate of appointment air mail you today.

CLARENCE D. MARTIN,
Governor of Washington.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The telegrams will be placed on file.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator-designate, Mr. MON C. WALLGREN, be permitted to take the oath of office at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WALLGREN, escorted by Mr. BARKLEY, advanced to the desk, and, the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him by the President pro tempore, he took his seat in the Senate.

SENATOR FROM IDAHO

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the Senator-elect from Idaho, Mr. THOMAS, is present and ready to take the oath of office. His credentials have been presented and accepted by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials have been filed. The Senator-elect will advance to the desk and take the oath of office.

Mr. THOMAS of Idaho, escorted by Mr. DAVIS, advanced to the desk, and, the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him by the President pro tempore, he took his seat in the Senate.

HJALMAR M. SEBY—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 316)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, the bill (S. 3729) which proposes to pay to Hjalmar M. Seby, of Abilene, Tex., the sum of $14,369.61 in settlement of claims said to have arisen in connection with a contract for extending and remodeling a post-office building at Vernon, Tex.

It appears that on November 28, 1933, the claimant entered into a contract with the Public Works Administration for extending and remodeling the above-mentioned building. Because of delay on the part of the contractor in progressing with the work entrusted to him, his right to proceed was terminated pursuant to the terms of the contract and the surety company on his bond completed the operation.

The amount which it is now proposed to pay to the contractor consists of two separate items. First, is a sum of $6,218.90, constituting the balance which was due him at the time that his right to proceed was terminated. It appears, however, that at the request of the surety company the Government has already paid that sum to the company to enable it to meet claims against the contractor for labor and materials which had accrued while he was still engaged in the work. Consequently, the enactment of this legislation would result in a duplicate payment on the part of the Government insofar as this item is concerned.

The second item, amounting to $8,150.71, is said to represent the value of tools and materials left by the contractor when the work was taken over by the surety company. The amount is disputed and it appears, in fact, that on October 15, 1934, an inventory of the materials and equipment on the site was made in the presence of the defaulted contractor, a representative of the surety company, and two representatives of the Government. A report of the inventory was prepared and agreed to by the representative of the surety company and representatives of the Government, and the materials on the site which could be used in completion of the work were appraised by the parties as having a value of $1,714.19, which amount was allowed as a credit in the adjustment of the final account under the contract. Other evidence in the record tends to show that no other property of the contractor was retained or used in any way by the Government.

Despite the appearance of some evidence to support the contention of the contractor that Government representatives improperly interfered with his work, for the reasons herein stated I must withhold my approval of this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 19, 1940.

RATIFICATION OF FIRST 10 AMENDMENTS TO THE CONSTITUTION

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of State, reporting, pursuant to law, that official notice has been received in the Department of State of the ratification of the first 10 amendments to the Constitution of the United States by the States of Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Georgia on March 2, 1939, April 19, 1939, and March 18, 1939, respectively, which was ordered to lie on the table.

FINAL ASCERTAINMENT OF ELECTORS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of certificates of the Governors of the States of Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Michigan, New Jersey, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wisconsin of the final ascertainment of electors for President and Vice President in their respective States at the election of November 5, 1940, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table.

RADIO REQUIREMENTS FOR SAFETY OF VESSELS NAVIGATING THE GREAT LAKES AND INLAND WATERS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, the unanimous report of the Commission on a special study of radio requirements necessary or desirable for safety purposes for ships navigating the Great Lakes and inland waters of the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, that is a report made in response to legislation by the Congress itself. With the approval and at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. BAILEY], from which the legislation came. I ask unanimous consent that the report may be printed, with illustrations, as a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the report will be printed as a Senate document, with illustrations.

PETITIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution of the Assembly of the State of California, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

House Resolution 14

By Messrs. Tenney, Yorty, Gannon, Bashore, Kellems, Phillips, Carlson, Clarke, Call, Dilworth, Waters, Allen; Mrs. Daley and Miss Miller:

"Whereas there has for the last several years been an investigation conducted by a committee of the United States Congress, headed by MARTIN DIES, to unearth and bring to light all subversive and un-American activities being carried on in the United States; and

"Whereas in this period of national emergency, when every step must be taken to stamp out all elements in this country who are seeking to deter and ruin the program of national defense and to destroy the democracy which exists in this Nation; and

"Whereas the Dies committee has and still is performing work of inestimable value in exposing the subversive and destructive forces operating in this country and in awakening the American people to realization of these dangers in our midst: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly of the State of California, That the Congress of the United States is respectfully urged to continue the operation of the Dies committee; and be it further

"Resolved, That the chief clerk of the assembly is hereby requested to transmit copies of this resolution to the Vice President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives from California in the Congress of the United States, and that such Senators and Representatives from California are hereby respectfully urged to support such legislation."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a resolution unanimously adopted by the executive committee of the Indiana Committee for National Defense, Indianapolis, Ind., setting forth the policy of the committee in relation to the national defense, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Mrs. Eva Aronson Mehlinger, of Boston, Mass., praying for a 4-year Presidential term, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORT OF DAUGHTERS OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Printing, reported a resolution (S. Res. 339), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Forty-third Annual Report of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution for the year ended April 1, 1940, be printed as a Senate document.

INVESTIGATION OF RAILROADS, HOLDING COMPANIES, AND AFFILIATED COMPANIES

Mr. BARKLEY (for Mr. WHEELER and Mr. TRUMAN), from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, pursuant to Senate Resolution 71, Seventy-fourth Congress, authorizing an investigation of interstate railroads and affiliates with respect to financing, reorganizations, mergers, and certain other matters, submitted additional reports, which were ordered to be printed, as follows:

Alleghany System: Midamerica Corporation; its uses as a holding company (pt. 25 of Rept. No. 25);

Alleghany System: Sale by George A. Ball; tax avoidance through charitable foundations (pt. 26 of Rept. No. 25); and Alleghany System: Acquisition of control by Robert R. Young (pt. 27 of Rept. No. 25).

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

On December 12, 1940:

S. 3729. An act for the relief of Hjalmar M. Seby;

S. 3765. An act to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at Astoria, Clatsop County, Oreg., and for other purposes;

S. 3934. An act authorizing the State of Michigan, acting through the International Bridge Authority of Michigan, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge or series of bridges, causeways, and approaches thereto, across the St. Marys River, from a point in or near the city of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., to a point in the Province of Ontario, Canada;

S. 4135. An act to legalize the construction by the State Highway Board of Georgia of a free highway bridge across the Withlacoochee River, between Valdosta, Ga., and Madison, Fla., at Horns Ferry;

S. 4370. An act authorizing the President to appoint an Under Secretary of War during national emergencies, fixing the compensation of the Under Secretary of War, and authorizing the Secretary of War to prescribe duties; and

S. J. Res. 306. Joint resolution extending the time for submitting the final report of the Temporary National Economic Committee.

On December 16, 1940:

S. J. Res. 302. Joint resolution authorizing the President to invite foreign countries to participate in the Pan-American Cotton Congress.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 10712) to permit the relinquishment or modification of certain restrictions upon the use of lands along the Natchez Trace Parkway in the village of French Camp, Miss., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

MORATORIUM ON FARM MORTGAGES—OPINIONS OF SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES (S. DOC. NO. 315)

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed as a document eight opinions of the Supreme Court of the United States on the act relating to farm bankruptcies, commonly known as the Frazier-Lemke law. This is a very important compilation for attorneys who handle these cases, as well as for judges who have such cases under consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The opinions referred to are as follows:

No. 530. October term, 1936: Robert Page Wright, bankrupt, petitioner v. Vinton Branch of the Mountain Trust Bank of Roanoke, Virginia, et al. On certiorari to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit (March 29, 1937);

PAYMENTS TO SHORT-LINE RAILROADS

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, for several days I have had pending a motion to call up the motion made by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that the vote by which the Senate passed House bill 10098 be reconsidered. I desire to call my motion up at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Colorado that the Senate proceed to consider the motion of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that the vote by which House bill 10098 was passed be reconsidered.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the motion by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that the Senate reconsider the vote by which it passed the bill (H. R. 10098) to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for termination of Federal control of railroads."

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I now move to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

PROGRESS OF PREPARATIONS FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, recently I wrote a letter to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, dealing with reports and rumors relative to the unsatisfactory progress being made in preparations for our national defense. I ask that the letter be read by the clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

DECEMBER 19, 1940.

HON. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Chairman, Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: In view of the uncertainty in the public mind caused by the many statements and criticism, official and otherwise, concerning the unsatisfactory progress of our national-defense efforts, it occurs to me that it is imperative that the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs and the Senate Committee on Military Affairs hold a joint hearing and provide an opportunity for the various officials of Government directing national defense, the representatives of organized labor, and the industrial leaders of our country, to give to the Congress a frank, complete, and detailed statement relative to the defense situation. The responsibility of Congress does not end with the voting of multiplied billions for defense. Congress must see that the program for which this money has been appropriated is carried out without waste, without jockeying, and without unreasonable delay.

Congress has another important responsibility. It must see that the public is accurately informed as to the progress which is being made. It has been an invariable rule in all situations of this kind where doubt, suspicion, and mistrust are caused by contradictory statements and a lack of complete information, that the morale of the people is adversely affected. It has been stated on many recent occasions that the British Government has come to realize that it is necessary and advisable to be more frank with its people.

My constituents are demanding the facts, and I insist on giving them all of the facts.

Yours very sincerely,

ED C. JOHNSON,
United States Senator from Colorado.

CONTINUATION OF PRESENT SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement for the information of the Members of the Senate.

The papers this morning carried a story to the effect that Congress might adjourn today sine die. I wish to state that no effort to that end is to be made. I believe it was contemplated in the House of Representatives that there would be an attempt to pass a concurrent resolution today for sine die adjournment, but the effort will not be made. I have no assurance that any such concurrent resolution could pass through the Senate without the presence of a quorum, and I am not willing to call Senators back to Washington merely to vote on sine die adjournment. Therefore I wish to say, for the information of Senators, that the effort for an adjournment sine die is abandoned. So far as I know, we shall proceed with our 3-day recesses as we have been doing for several weeks.

ADDRESSES AT INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT MANUEL A. CAMACHO, OF MEXICO

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. President, on December 4 last it was my privilege to attend in Mexico City the inauguration of President-elect Manuel Avila Camacho, and I returned to the United States with a quickened faith and deep, confident hope that there is now ripening between the people of Mexico and the people of the United States an abiding friendship which will make possible their mutual defense and the continental solidarity of North America.

At an early date in the next session of Congress I intend to address the Senate more at length, giving a statement of my observations while in Mexico and the principles which I believe should be followed by our Government in its relations with Latin America.

At this time I rise only to read into the RECORD three speeches that were made the day after the inauguration in the embassy of the United States by President Camacho, Vice-President-elect Wallace, and Sol Bloom, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the House of Representatives.

President Camacho is of handsome and statesmanlike appearance, his demeanor giving every evidence that he is possessed of courtesy, dignity, courage, and intellect. His eloquent address struck an inspired and high note on international relationships, and I am confident that Mexico, under his direction, and the United States, under the leadership of President Roosevelt, will successfully seek and find the road leading to increasing friendship, social intercourse, safety, and solidarity.

The address of President Camacho is as follows:

Mr. Ambassador Extraordinary, Mr. Ambassador of the United States, I wish to state at the outset the satisfaction felt by my people and by myself with the presence at the inaugural festivities of Mr. HENRY A. WALLACE, Vice-President-elect of the United States.

Doubtlessly, the mission over which he presides has meant for Mexico a new reason for unswerving friendship between our two peoples. This circumstance is so much happier inasmuch as at the present time all motives that strengthen the unity of the nations of America must be taken advantage of.

I consider it a fortune for both our countries to be surrounded by the best auspices to strengthen our friendship and to give, with our relations of neighbors, the clearest demonstration that continental fraternity shall find in us the stanchest solidarity.

I trust that the solution to our problems shall find as a fundamental base the most absolute good faith; and for all difficulties mutual knowledge, good will, a spirit of open cooperation, and a peaceful and honorable path, which, once trod upon, will lead to stronger friendship and to a feeling of justice which will make said friendship everlasting. I wish to specially praise Ambassador Daniels, in whom Mexico has found a just and comprehensive spirit, and whose friendly attitude, even in the most difficult moments of our international life, has cooperated to defend and develop the friendship not only of the Government but of the entire people of Mexico. Doubtlessly, Ambassador Daniels has followed with deep sentiment and friendship for Mexico the inspiration of President Roosevelt, with whom I shall have the pleasant opportunity of sharing the responsibility of strengthening during the next 4 years the friendship of our two nations.

The words of Mr. WALLACE filled me with particular satisfaction, and I acknowledge with pleasure that the aspiration of an organized peace upon this hemisphere is extended throughout all our nations. In all America is shared the desire that there prevail in the world the regime of the new democracy as an instrument of the people to live in justice and the regime of the law of nations as a guaranty of fraternity.

Mr. WALLACE, when you return to your country we beg you to take back with you the unmistakable feeling that you have witnessed amongst the Mexican people a deep friendship for the great democracy of the United States, of sympathy for President Roosevelt, of adhesion to the doctrine of pan-American solidarity, and with this feeling the resolution of Mexico of assuming within its sovereignty the responsibility derived from the solidarity common to all the free nations of America to uphold upon this hemisphere the burning torch of international law and of human liberties.

The following is the speech delivered by Vice-President-elect HENRY A. WALLACE:

Excellencies and friends, Mr. President, it is a great pleasure to me to be able to extend to you the greetings of the President of the United States, Franklin Delano Roosevelt. It is also our high honor to receive you, the President of Mexico, for the first time in this our Embassy. I am sure that the warm friendship which has been manifest by yourself and by those many acts of courtesy and hospitality since our arrival in Mexico demonstrate a cordiality between us which will long exist. The current of intercourse between our two great nations has been quickened and there can be no doubt that the moral, cultural, and economic exchanges between our peoples will increase and flourish. Not only am I happy at this prospect, but in addition to that demonstration of growing solidarity in the Americas which has been shown at this the time of your inauguration. I listened with particular interest to your inaugural address and feel that it gives assurance that Mexico will go forward in its high destiny under capable hands. I wish you, Mr. President, in all sincerity a happy and most successful term of office.

I now read the remarks of the Honorable SOL BLOOM, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives:

Mr. President, Mr. Vice President, Mr. Ambassador, I regret exceedingly that I cannot speak Spanish, and perhaps some of you are regretting that you cannot speak English, so that makes us both even. But still our hearts are set on one specific thing, that that which is happening today throughout the world in other hemispheres shall not happen on this hemisphere. The further indication of the desire of the Government and people of the United States to forge ever more cordial relations with the Government and people of Mexico is seen in the designation by President Roosevelt of the Vice-President-elect of the United States to serve as special representative at the inauguration of Gen. Manuel Avila Camacho as President of Mexico. That reciprocal feelings are entertained in Mexico has been evidenced by the cordial reception of this delegation by the officials, people, and press of the Republic of Mexico. For some time there has been a tendency toward the solution of the problems confronting the two countries in a broad spirit of cooperation. This has been true in hemispheric matters. Mexico and the United States have more and more merged with their sister republics in pursuance of the highest objectives of humanity, prosperity, and hemispheric defense. This tendency has also been manifested in the field of problems pertaining to the two countries. An interchange of tourists between our countries has reached a high level and there are indications that that interchange will increase greatly in the coming months. In the fields of exchange of information and governmental cooperation much progress has been made. Officials of the Department of Agriculture of the United States have enjoyed cordial relations with their opposite members in the Mexican Government in matters of mutual interest. In the cultural field a beginning has been made toward making the Government and people of the United States aware of the rich cultural treasures of Mexico, and, along with this, plans are under way to make better known in Mexico the accomplishments of the United States in literature and a number of other fields. These and other indications of friendship and mutual desire for better relations between our two countries augur well for the future.

It has also been a pleasure while in the city of Mexico to meet the envoys and representatives from the other foreign countries and to renew old friendships and make new ones, and I can assure these missions that we will always be glad to greet them in Washington.

And in conclusion, Mr. President, may I thank you and your Government for the magnificent hospitality of your magnificent city, which my family and I will never forget.

Mr. President, I ask that translations of the remarks I have made to the Senate today, together with translations of the three speeches I have read, be printed in the RECORD in the Spanish language.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the translations were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DISCURSO DEL SR. SHERIDAN DOWNEY, SENADOR DEL ESTADO DE CALIFORNIA DE LOS ESTADOS UNIDOS, EL JUEVES, 19 DE DECIEMBRE DE 1940

Señor Presidente, el cuatro de diciembre, tuve yo el gran privilegio de asistir a la inauguración del Presidente Manuel Avila Camacho, en la Ciudad de México, y volv a los Estados Unidos con la firme convicción y con alta esperanza de que se está efectuando entre el pueblo de México y de los Estados Unidos una amistad perdurable que facilitará la defensa mutua y la solidaridad continental de la América del Norte.

Al principio de la próxima Sesión del Congreso pienso pronunciar un discurso en el Senado con más detalles, narrando mis observaciones durante mi estancia en México y los principios que, a mi ver, nuestro gobierno debe seguir en sus relaciones con la América Latina.

Ahora, me levanto solamente para que consten en el "Diario de Sesiones" tres discursos pronunciados el día después de la inauguración en la Embajada de los Estados Unidos por el Presidente Camacho, por Vice-Presidente-electo, el Señor WALLACE, y por el Señor Sol Bloom, Presidente del Comité de Asuntos Extranjeros de la Cámara de Representantes.

El Presidente Camacho es de agradable presencia y tiene todo el aire de un estadista. Es muy caballero, cortés, grave, valiente e inteligente.

Su elocuente discurso da una nota muy inspirada y alta en el campo de las relaciones internacionales, y estoy seguro de que México bajo su dirección y los Estados Unidos bajo la dirección del Presidente Roosevelt buscarán y encontrarán fácilmente el camino que conduce a una amistad cada vez más estrecha, a cordiales relaciones sociales, a la seguridad, y a la solidaridad.

Es mi deseo que mis observaciones junto con los tres discursos que voy a leer ahora se impriman en el "Diario de Sesiones" en inglés y en español.

DISCURSO DEL SEÑOR GENERAL DE DIVISION MANUEL AVILA CAMACHO, PRESIDENTE DE LOS ESTADOS UNIDOS MEXICANOS

Señor Embajador Extraordinario, Señor Embajador de los Estados Unidos, debo desde luego declarar la grata impresión que para mi pueblo y para mí personalmente ha significado la presencia en estas Fiestas Inaugurales del señor HENRY A. WALLACE, Vice-Presidente-electo de los Estados Unidos.

Indiscutiblemente, la misión que él preside ha significado para México una razón más de firme amistad entre nuestros dos Pueblos. Esta circunstancia es tanto más feliz cuanto que en los momentos actuales deben aprovecharse todos los motivos que fortalezcan la unidad de las naciones de la América.

Considero una fortuna para nuestros dos países el encontrarnos rodeados de los mejores auspicios para fortalecer nuestra amistad, y hacer con nuestras relaciones de vecinos la más clara demostración de que la fraternidad continental encontrará en nosotros la más firme adhesión.

Confío en que la solución de nuestros problemas encontrará como base fundamental la más absoluta buena fé; y para todas las dificultades el mutuo conocimiento, la buena voluntad, un espíritu de franca cooperación y un camina pacífico, honorable, que al transitarse deje una amistad más firme y un sentimiento de justicia que la hará perdurable. Quiero hacer un elogio especial del señor Embajador Daniels, en quien México ha encontrado un espíritu justo, comprensivo, y cuya actitud amistosa, aun en los más árduos momentos de nuestra vida internacional, ha cooperado para defender y fomentar la amistad no sólo del Gobierno, sino de todo el Pueblo de México. Seguramente que el señor Embajador Daniels ha seguido con grandes sentimientos de amistad para México la propia inspiración del Presidente Roosevelt, con quien tendré la grata oportunidad de compartir la responsabilidad de estrechar y hacer más inquebrantable en los próximos cuatro años la amistad de nuestras dos naciones.

Las palabras del señor WALLACE me llenan de una especial satisfacción y declaro reconocer con beneplácito que la aspiración de una paz organizada en este hemisferio está extendida en todas nuestras naciones. En toda la América está compartido el deseo de que prevalezca en el mundo el régimen de la nueva democracia como instrumento del Pueblo para vivir en la Justicia y del Derecho Internacional como garantía de fraternidad.

Mr. WALLACE, cuando usted retorne a su Patria le encarcemos llevar los sentimientos inconfundibles que usted ha comprobado del pueblo mexicano, de amistad por la gran democracia de los Estados Unidos, de simpatía para el Presidente Roosevelt, de adhesión a la Doctrina de Solidaridad Panamericana; y con esos sentimientos la resolución de México de arrostrar dentro de su soberanía las responsabilidades que se deriven de la solidaridad común de los pueblos libres de América para mantener ardiente en este Hemisferio la antorcha del Derecho Internacional y de las libertades humanas.

TRADUCCION DEL DISCURSO DEL HON. HENRY A. WALLACE, VICE-PRESIDENTE-ELECTO DE LOS ESTADOS UNIDOS DE AMERICA

Señor Presidente, es para mí una gran satisfacción poder extenderos los saludos del Presidente de los Estados Unidos, Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Es también para nosotros un gran honor recibiros, Señor Presidente de México, por primera vez en esta nuestra Embajada. Tengo la seguridad de que la firme amistad que habéis manifestado personalmente y por aquellos múltiples actos de cortesía y hospitalidad desde nuestra llegada a México, demuestran una cordialidad entre nosotros que habrá de perdurar. El intercambio habitual entre nuestras dos grandes naciones ha sido acelerado y no puede caber duda que el intercambio moral, cultural y económico entre nuestros pueblos aumentará y fructificará. No sólo siento alegria con esta posibilidad sino también con esa demostración de creciente solidaridad en las Américas, que ha sido demostrada en esta la ocasión de vuestra inauguración. Escuché con particular interés vuestro discurso inaugural y considero que da seguridad de que México seguirá adelante en la realización de su alto destino, bajo manos capaces. Os deseo, Señor Presidente, con toda sinceridad un período gubernamental feliz y plasmado de éxitos.

OBSERVACIONES DEL HON. SOL BLOOM, PRESIDENTE DEL COMITÉ DE ASUNTOS EXTRANJEROS DE LA CÁMARA DE REPRESENTANTES DEL CONGRESO DE LOS ESTADOS UNIDOS DE AMÉRICA

Señor Presidente, Señor Vice Presidente, Señor Embajador, siento mucho que no puedo hablar español y quizás haya entre Vds. quienes no puedan hablar inglés, de manera que nos hallamos en la misma situación. Pero, sin embargo, ponemos todo nuestro esfuerzo en conseguir una cosa concreta y es que lo que acontece hoy en la mayor parte del globo no va a acontecer aquí en este hemisferio. Nuevamente muestras del deseo de nuestro gobierno y del pueblo de los Estados Unidos de fomentar relaciones más cordiales con el gobierno y el pueblo mexicano se pueden ver claramente en la designación hecha por el Presidente Roosevelt nombrando al Vice Presidente Electo de los Estados Unidos para servir de Representante Especial en la inauguración del General Manuel Ávila Camacho como Presidente de México. La recepción tan cordial de esta delegación por los altos empleados del gobierno mexicano, por el pueblo y por la prensa mexicana es una prueba evidente de los sentimientos recíprocos. Por mucho tiempo se ha notado una tendencia hacia la solución de los problemas que afrontan ambos países en un espíritu amplio cooperación. Esto ha sido la verdad en cuanto a los asuntos de este hemisferio.

México y los Estados Unidos se han unido cada vez más con las Repúblicas Hermanas, de conformidad con los objetivos más altos de humanidad, prosperidad y de defensa del hemisferio. Esta tendencia se ha puesto de manifiesto también en el campo de los problemas referentes a ambos pueblos. Un intercambio de turistas entre nuestros países ha alcanzado ya una cifra muy alta; y hay indicaciones que este intercambio va a aumentar muchísimo en los meses venideros. En el campo de intercambio de información y de cooperación gubernativa hemos progresado mucho. Los miembros del Departamento de Agricultura de los Estados Unidos han mantenido relaciones muy cordiales con los empleados del gobierno mexicano en asuntos de interés común. En el campo de la cultura el gobierno y el pueblo de los Estados Unidos han comenzado a enterarse de los ricos tesoros artísticos de México, y al mismo tiempo se llevan acabo planes para dar a conocer la literatura, el arte, y otras diversas actividades culturales de los Estados Unidos. Éstas y otras indicaciones de amistad y deseo mutuo de tener relaciones cada vez más estrechas entre ambos países es un augurio de un gran porvenir.

Ha sido un gran placer, mientras estuve en la Ciudad de México, conocer a los enviados y a los representantes de otros países extranjeros y reanudar amistades viejas y hacer otras nuevas; y puedo asegurar a estas misiones que siempre tendremos mucho gusto en estrechar sus manos en Washington. Y en conclusión, Sr. Presidente, permítame darle las gracias a Vd. y a su gobierno por la hospitalidad generosa de su magnífica ciudad de la cual yo y mi familia jamás nos olvidaremos.

RELIEF OF UTE INDIANS OF UTAH

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs is not present, nor is the ranking member of the committee on the Democratic side here at this time. There is on the calendar of the Senate a bill which has passed the House, and there is a great deal of interest in the measure. It was amended by the Senate committee, but the committee has agreed to withdraw the amendment so that the bill as it passed the House can be enacted, if it is agreeable to Senators. I think the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] will explain the bill. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 2238, House bill 9705.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9705) to make more effective use of certain parts of the public domain, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

Mr. McCARRAN. May we have an explanation of the bill?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, but I have given some consideration to the bill in question. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], chairman of the committee, reported the bill favorably, but he indicated that a number of amendments which had been added in the committee might be eliminated as they did not relate to the question involved in the bill itself. There were a number of other amendments, which I understand were not regarded by the committee as of great importance.

The bill is a measure in behalf of the Ute Indians of Utah. It would settle a controversy of long standing between the Government and some of the Indians of Utah, as well as many white settlers who have acquired lands formerly belonging to the Indians, and also lands which they obtained from the Government of the United States.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SCHWARTZ. Does the bill in any way affect any of the Indians in the State of Wyoming?

Mr. KING. No; not at all. Its provisions are confined to a State which some believe was the founder of Wyoming.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Does the bill affect lands located in the State of Colorado belonging to Indians of Utah?

Mr. KING. I think it would permit Ute Indians located in Utah to have determined in the courts their rights to lands in Colorado which, as I understand, are regarded as Indian lands.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Does the Senator know whether the objection to the bill made by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has been eliminated or adjusted?

Mr. KING. The senior Senator from Colorado suggested a number of amendments, some of which are not controversial and would readily be accepted. They are not, as I understand the bill, of sufficient importance to prevent the consideration of the bill. I understand, however, that two or three amendments were suggested by the Senator which he regarded of more or less importance.

The passage of the bill has been delayed, and it is apparent that unless immediate action is taken upon the bill it will not be passed during this session. I am advised that the House probably will adjourn tomorrow; and it is therefore important that the bill, if it is to be passed, be acted upon by the Senate today in order that the House, before it adjourns, may consider it. I am advised that if all amendments are disagreed to the House will accept the action of the Senate, and thus permit the passage of the bill before adjournment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. The senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. Does the Senator from Utah know whether or not his objections and the amendments which he has offered have been adjusted?

Mr. KING. As I have indicated, most of the suggestions made by the Senator's colleague would readily be agreed to. They do not, however, affect the important and vital principles of the bill, and, whether accepted or not, they would not be of sufficient importance to warrant defeat of the bill. As I have indicated, there are several amendments which the Senator from Colorado, as I am advised, does regard as possessing merit.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Would the Senator from Utah object to having the bill go over until the very next session? Perhaps the senior Senator from Colorada will be back then.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean the session to be held next Monday?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I also request that consideration of the measure be postponed until Monday next.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am just advised by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] that the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] will be here tomorrow, and also that the Congress will not adjourn, at least for several days. In view of the position taken by the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] and the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN]—and, as I understand, they both object to the present consideration of the bill—I assume that any effort to secure its consideration and passage at this time would fail. Any objection is equivalent to postponement at least for the day. Therefore, I shall feel constrained to accept the situation, but will ask the Senate to consider the bill when it meets next Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF ACT RELATING TO PANDERING

Mr. KING. Mr. President, Senate bill 4415, Calendar No. 2340, to amend the act entitled "An act in relation to pandering, to define and prohibit the same, and to provide for the punishment thereof," approved June 25, 1910, is a measure very much desired by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The Attorney General has requested that the measure be passed. It is a bill applying to the District of Columbia, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4415) to amend the act entitled "An act in relation to pandering, to define and prohibit the same, and to provide for the punishment thereof," approved June 25, 1910, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of the act entitled "An act in relation to pandering, to define and prohibit the same, and to provide for the punishment thereof," approved June 25, 1910, is amended to read as follows:

"That any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall place or cause, induce, procure, or compel the placing of any female in the charge or custody of any other person, or in a house of prostitution, with intent that she shall engage in prostitution, or who shall compel, induce, entice, or procure or attempt to compel, induce, entice, or procure any female to reside with any other person for immoral purposes or for the purpose of prostitution, or who shall compel, induce, entice, or procure or attempt to compel, induce, entice, or procure any such female to reside or continue to reside in a house of prostitution, or compel, induce, entice, or procure or attempt to compel, induce, entice, or procure her to engage in prostitution, or who takes or detains a female against her will, with intent to compel her by force, threats, menace, or duress to marry him or to marry any other person; or any parent, guardian, or other person having legal custody of the person of a female, who consents to her taking or detention by any person, for the purpose of prostitution or sexual intercourse, shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and by a fine of not more than $1,000."

SEC. 2. Section 2 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. Any person who, within the District of Columbia, by threats or duress, detains any female against her will, for the purpose of prostitution or sexual intercourse, or any person who shall compel any female, against her will, to reside with him or with any other person for the purposes of prostitution or sexual intercourse, shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and a fine of not more than $1,000."

SEC. 3. Section 3 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of arranging for or causing any female to have sexual intercourse with any other person or to engage in prostitution, debauchery, or any other immoral act, shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and a fine of not more than $1,000."

SEC. 4. Such act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"SEC. 6. Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall pay or receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of the procuring for, or placing in, a house of prostitution, for purposes of sexual intercourse, prostitution, debauchery, or other immoral act, any female, shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and by a fine of not more than $1,000.

"SEC. 7. Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of procuring and placing in the charge or custody of another person for sexual intercourse, prostitution, debauchery, or other immoral purposes any female shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and by a fine of not more than $1,000.

"SEC. 8. Any person who, within the District of Columbia, knowingly, shall accept, receive, levy, or appropriate any money or other valuable thing, without consideration other than the furnishing of a place for prostitution or the servicing of a place for prostitution, from the proceeds or earnings of any female engaged in prostitution shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and by a fine of not more than $1,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill, as indicated, has the approval of the Attorney General. The committee report accompanying the bill contains a letter from the Attorney General of the United States recommending passage of the bill. The District Commissioners have approved the bill, and the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia has also approved it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KING. I request that the committee report, containing the letter from the Attorney General to which I referred, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred a bill (S. 4415) to amend an act relating to pandering, to define and prohibit the same and to provide for the punishment thereof, approved June 25, 1910, having considered the same, report thereon favorably with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The purpose of this bill is set out in the following letter from the Attorney General of the United States:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., October 17, 1940.

Hon. WILLIAM H. KING,
Chairman, Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I desire to direct your attention to the anomalous state of the District of Columbia law relating to pandering.

Section 3 of the existing law (act of June 25, 1910; 36 Stat. 833; D. C. Code, title 6, secs. 179–183) prohibits the procuring of a woman to live over a period of time in a state of illegal cohabitation, but has been held not to apply to one who procures women for isolated instances of sexual relations with different persons.

Sections 1 and 2 of existing law require that prohibited acts must be accompanied by force and must be done against the will of the woman. Such restrictions make it impossible to prosecute one who shares in the profits of vice in those instances in which the woman willingly engages in such activities.

Accordingly, I recommend the enactment of legislation to provide for more efficient means of combating the organized traffic in vice in the District of Columbia. I am enclosing herewith a draft of a proposed bill to amend the act of June 25, 1910, to effectuate this purpose.

Section 1 of the proposed measure would amend section 1 of the present law in order to permit prosecution for the prohibited acts, even though committed without force and not against the will of the woman. All of the provisions of sections 1 and 2 of existing law which are not enlarged by or incorporated in section 1 of the proposed bill are included without material change in an amendment to section 2 of the present law.

Section 1 of the proposed bill would also amend section 3 of the present law so as to make it an offense to procure, for consideration, a woman for isolated instances of sexual intercourse, as well as for other immoral purposes.

Section 2 of the proposed measure would add three new sections to existing law. These sections are designed to facilitate the prosecution of commercialized vice and relate to the paying or receiving of money in relation thereto.

Section 6 provides for the prosecution of procurers of women for houses of prostitution who receive compensation for their services and for the prosecution of those who pay procurers for such services.

Section 7 would permit the prosecution of procurers of women for persons whose operations do not include the providing of a house of prostitution.

Section 8 is designed to prevent persons from participating in the earnings of prostitutes.

The proposed measure would provide for punishment by imprisonment for a period not exceeding 5 years and a fine of not more than $1,000 for violation of any of the provisions thereof.

I am informed by the Director of the Bureau of the Budget that there is no objection to the submission of this recommendation.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT H. JACKSON,
Attorney General.

ISSUANCE OF LICENSE TO LOU DAVIS TO PRACTICE CHIROPRACTIC IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 8665, which is Calendar No. 2338. The bill provides for the issuance of a license to Lou Davis to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia.

The Congress has passed a number of bills relating to physicians who did not happen to be in Washington at the time legislation relating to the licensing of physicians was passed. Since then, by special legislation, we have permitted several physicians to engage in the practice of their profession within the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 8665) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Lou Davis was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any limitation relating to the time within which an application for a license must be filed, the Commission on Licensure to Practice the Healing Art in the District of Columbia is authorized to issue a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Lou Davis in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress entitled "An act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia," approved February 27, 1929, and on condition that the said Lou Davis shall be found by said Commission to be otherwise qualified to practice under the provisions of said act.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Utah if a report from the Committee on the District of Columbia accompanied House bill 8665. If so, I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the committee presented a report to accompany the bill. The report contains a letter from John Russell Young, acting president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia. I join in the request made by the Senator from Connecticut that the report be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8665) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Lou Davis, having considered the same, report favorably thereon without amendment and recommend that the bill do pass.

The following letter has been submitted by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in support of this measure:

JULY 13, 1940.

Hon. JENNINGS RANDOLPH,
Chairman, Committee on the District of Columbia,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. RANDOLPH: The Commissioners have for report H. R. 8665 (76th Cong., 3d sess.), entitled "A bill to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Lou Davis."

The purpose of this bill is to authorize the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic to Lou Davis notwithstanding the fact that he failed to apply for such license within 90 days from February 27, 1929, the date of the approval of an act to regulate the practice of the healing art to protect the public health in the District of Columbia, as required in said act.

The Commission on Licensure states that it has no objection to the passage of this bill and the Commissioners, therefore, have no objection to its passage at this session of Congress.

Respectfully,

JOHN RUSSELL YOUNG,
Acting President, Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

REAL PROPERTY IN THE DISTRICT EXEMPT FROM TAXATION

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it has been claimed by some residents of the District of Columbia that considerable real property in the District of Columbia has not been taxed, and that information regarding real estate is necessary in order that a just and equitable revenue measure may be imposed upon the District. A resolution has been prepared and submitted to me with the request that I ask for its adoption. Accordingly, I now bring it to the attention of the Senate and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 340), as follows:

Resolved, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby requested to submit to the Senate at the earliest practicable date an itemized statement showing the following information: (1) All real property in the District of Columbia which is exempt from taxation, (2) the assessed value thereof (including improvements, if any), (3) a reference to the statute under the authority of which such property is exempt from taxation, and (4) the present use of such property. Such statement shall show real property owned by the United States and by the District of Columbia in separate schedules.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred in part to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

POSTMASTER NOMINATIONS REPORTED AND CONFIRMED

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I report favorably the nominations of 28 postmasters which have either been approved by the Senators from the respective States or are not objected to. I ask that the nominations be confirmed and that the President be immediately notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The nominations are confirmed, and the President will be immediately notified.

UNITED STATES PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE

Mr. KING. Mr. President, from the Committee on Finance I report favorably the nomination of David Cooper to be dental surgeon in the United States Public Health Service. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate confirm the nomination at this time, and that the President be immediately notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed, and the President will be notified.

UNDER SECRETARY OF WAR

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, certain nominations made by the President of the United States have been received by the Senate today. They are nominations which I think ought to be acted upon immediately without reference to committees.

I present the nomination of Hon. Robert Porter Patterson, of New York, to be Under Secretary of War. Mr. Patterson is now Assistant Secretary of War. The Senate has heretofore confirmed his nomination in that capacity. I ask unanimous consent that his nomination as Under Secretary be now considered and confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert Porter Patterson, of New York, to be Under Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none, and the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified.

NOMINATIONS IN THE COAST GUARD

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of sundry nominations in the Coast Guard without reference to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none. The nominations will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast Guard.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the Coast Guard be confirmed en bloc, and that the President be immediately notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Coast Guard are confirmed en bloc, and the President will be notified.

DEPUTY DIRECTOR OF SELECTIVE SERVICE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the President has today sent to the Senate the nomination of Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey to be Deputy Director of Selective Service, under the provisions of section 10 (a) of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be now considered and confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be read.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Brig. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey to be Deputy Director of Selective Service, under the provisions of section 10 (a) of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR SERVICE—CHARLES BRIDGHAM HOSMER

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the President has also nominated Charles Bridgham Hosmer, of Maine, now a Foreign Service officer of class 1 and a secretary in the Diplomatic Service, to be also a consul general of the United States of America. This is a promotion of a career officer in the State Department. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be considered at this time and confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Charles Bridgham Hosmer, of Maine, now a Foreign Service officer of class 1 and a secretary in the Diplomatic Service, to be also a consul general of the United States of America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the President has also sent to the Senate the nomination of Walter M. W. Splawn, of Texas, to be an Interstate Commerce Commissioner for a term expiring December 31, 1947. This is a reappointment; and, if there is no objection, I should like to have the nomination confirmed today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, what is the status of the nomination?

Mr. BARKLEY. This is a reappointment, because the term for which Mr. Splawn was previously appointed, and in which he had been serving, has expired.

Mr. AUSTIN. The nomination has not been referred to any committee?

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it has not. It came to the Senate just today.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will there not be ample time for consideration of the nomination before the present session ends, after reference to committee has been made?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; there will be ample time if a sufficient number of the members of the Committee on Interstate Commerce to hold a meeting are in the city.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think this is such an important office that the nomination ought to follow the usual procedure. I make the suggestion, not because I have any special objection to the nomination but because there are other nominations of corresponding importance which I should not like to have so informally treated as this action would amount to if we permitted unanimous consent for the confirmation of the nomination without any consideration at all by a committee. I do not want to appear to be unfair.

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall not press the matter. I see from the nomination that it is for a term which expires December 31, 1947. I assume that means that the present term expires on December 31 of this year.

Mr. AUSTIN. We shall have time to take up the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

IN THE ARMY—NOMINATIONS REPORTED AND CONFIRMED

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD], chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I send to the desk numerous routine Army nominations favorably reported by the committee, and ask unanimous consent for their present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY—NOMINATIONS REPORTED AND CONFIRMED

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I send to the desk numerous routine promotional nominations favorably reported by the Committee and ask unanimous consent for their present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I should like to know the titles of the offices to which the nominations refer.

Mr. BARKLEY. These are Navy nominations. They consist of nominations as rear admirals, captains, commanders, and so forth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the list of nominations just presented by the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in connection with all the nominations confirmed today and also heretofore, the resolutions of confirmation of which are now in the hands of the Secretary, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

COAST GUARD—NOMINATIONS REPORTED AND CONFIRMED

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, from the Committee on Commerce, I report favorably the nomination of Harold C. White to be a chief boatswain in the Coast Guard. I will say that although I have a brother by the name of Harold White, the nominee is not related to me. I have no doubt that he is a worthy citizen, although not a member of my family. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none, and the nomination is confirmed. Without objection, the President will be notified.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, December 23, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We praise Thee, O God, our Heavenly Father, that Thou dost make the sun to shine upon the evil and the good and sendest the rain upon the just and the unjust. Thou lovest all men regardless of rank or station and givest them a worth beyond the values of this world. We thank Thee that Thou hast sent Thine only begotten Son to spread the evangel of Divine love. As we approach the doorway of the birth of our Lord, let love and good will mount the thrones of our beings; let them flow through the channels of our daily lives. God bless America; may her mission be to cut the fetters of oppression and not weld them, to heal wounds and not produce them; to quench the fires of hate and not kindle them. The Lord bless you and keep you; the Lord make His face to shine upon you and be gracious unto you; the Lord lift the light of His countenance upon you and give you peace. In the name of our blessed Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Baldridge, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 8665. An act to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Lou Davis.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 10098. An act to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920.

RESIGNATION

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation:

DECEMBER 19, 1940.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SIR: I hereby resign my office as Representative in Congress of the United States from the Second District of Washington.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

MON C. WALLGREN.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes today at the conclusion of business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CORRECTION OF ROLL CALL

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Speaker, on roll call 119, in the Committee of the Whole, I am shown as being absent. I am positive I missed neither the roll call of May 20, nor any at this session of the Congress. I ask unanimous consent that the permanent RECORD may be corrected to show that I was present on that call.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from W. H. McConnell, of Parlier, Calif.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein two resolutions, one by the Ancient Order of Hibernians in America of Anaconda, Mont., and the other by the Phil Sheridan Club of Anaconda, Mont.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include an editorial from the Ohio Republican News on, The Right of Free Speech.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

By unanimous consent Mr. VAN ZANDT and Mr. PITTENGER were given permission to extend their own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an address delivered by John C. Beukema, at Detroit on December 5, 1940, on the subject of the St. Lawrence seaway.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an order recently issued by the Post Office Department forbidding the further use of the mails to the National Old Age Pension Association and Dr. J. E. Pope.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the St. Louis Star Times.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE NATIONAL-DEFENSE PROGRAM

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN A. HALL. Mr. Speaker, the anxiety for the success of our national-defense program is not, I hope, limited to any segment or group within our American society. The rights and privileges of labor, fully as much as the opportunities for profit to capital and the security of every man, woman, and child, depend upon the survival of our present form of government.

Is it not possible, then, for these groups and individuals to awaken to the stupendous job we have before us? Are they blind to the fact that billions of dollars of orders have already been placed with thousands of contractors all over the country and that these orders should be well on the way toward completion? I speak of the 50,000 airplanes, 130,000 engines, 17,000 heavy guns, 25,000 light guns, 13,000 trench mortars, 33,000 shells, 9,200 tanks, 300,000 machine guns, 400,000 automatic rifles, and 1,500,000 regular rifles. I speak of the responsibility which labor must face to contribute at least 18,000,000,000 man-hours.

Of what avail is the apprehension, the worry, the continual agitation to get things done if industry and labor and every citizen in America are not willing to place the problem of national defense which William S. Knudsen has termed "the greatest production problem of any country in modern times" ahead of every other desire and objective in our public and private lives?

If, then, it is the overwhelming desire of the country at large to succeed in the building of this mighty defense program, steps must be taken that are far more drastic than have already been entered upon. If the primary purpose and desire of the American people are to realize a completion of this huge task, then they must be willing to drop all other activities, to sacrifice every other motive, to place all other pursuits in abeyance voluntarily until present lagging of the national-defense program is supplanted by the completion of vast armaments and trained manpower sufficient to protect them against the ruthless forces they hate and fear. [Applause.]

FIRST THE NAVY, NOW THE ARMY, TOLD WHERE TO HEAD IN—CANNOT EVEN TOOT ITS HORN OVER THE RADIO

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, some will recall that, in the late summer of 1939, more than a year ago, a C. I. O. affiliate in Detroit, according to the then Acting Secretary of the Navy, held up preparations for national defense and told the Navy where it should head in. That union defied the Navy to "come and get" its own materials. The Navy took it lying down for 41 days.

It is the Army's turn now. One Petrillo, president of the A. F. of L. American Federation of Musicians, denied the Mutual Broadcasting System the right to transmit music played by the One Hundred and Fourth Engineers Band at Fort Dix.

A series of patriotic concerts at Fort Dix had been planned to promote interest in the national defense. But, under the orders as issued by Petrillo, citizens will not have the privilege of sitting by their firesides and listening to the Army bands play the Star-Spangled Banner, America, or any other patriotic selections, as transmitted over the radio.

According to the press:

Petrillo announced that radio listeners would have to get along without broadcasts by Army bands from Army posts until he had an opportunity to go to Washington, D. C., and make a deal with the War Department on the extent to which such broadcasts could be given.

ADMIT IT'S GOOD CAUSE

"This is a good cause and we're all for it," Petrillo declared, "but if we allowed radio stations to put music on the air from Army camps whenever they wanted to they could soon dispense with our men. We are in favor of their going on the air with programs telling about life in the Army, but we want protection against the loss of jobs for professional musicians.

"I can't let them run wild. There's no telling where this thing might end. It's all right with us if they put on a couple of Army bands, but I want to know how often they plan to do this thing."

Many people have assumed that Army bands could play when and where the Army desired. Some of our citizens are so naive as to have believed that broadcasting was under the jurisdiction of the Federal Communications Commission. Now we learn that the "big boss" is, or at least so he thinks, Mr. Petrillo, who was recently given great praise in a nationally circulated monthly magazine.

It might be well for the Government to adopt the language of Mr. Petrillo with reference to the activities of some of these gentlemen. He said:

I can't let them run wild. There is no telling where this thing might end.

How would it be for the Army and the Navy to get together with the Federal Communications Commission and tell Mr. Petrillo to toot his own horn, at least insofar as the Army and Navy bands were concerned?

Suppose, as in the olden days, the Army depended on bugle calls; that a war was on and that a charge or a retreat was to be ordered, the orders transmitted through the bugle. Would the Army officer be able to give the order without first seeing Mr. Petrillo? And what a mess we would be in, if Mr. Petrillo or his business agent did not happen to be on the field of battle. There the Army would be, all tied up, the commanding officer unable to tell it whether to go forward or backward until he had heard from Mr. Petrillo.

Captain Cook, public-relations officer of the Forty-fourth Division, had asked permission to play a brief selection at the opening of the program, a full number at the middle, and a military theme at the end. Petrillo would not permit that. So the captain said that bugle calls would replace the band music. He added that Petrillo had granted a request for 1 minute of incidental music by a regimental band on another program last Thursday.

There is one thing that the unions seem to have overlooked. A man can still be conscripted without joining and paying an initiation fee.

COMMUNISTIC UNION KICKS DISTINGUISHED CAPTAIN, RECIPIENT OF DISTINGUISHED SERVICE MEDAL, AROUND

No greater act of effrontery, no more insulting defiance of the Federal Government, no more abject, subservient submission to the will of a disloyal, unpatriotic organization has ever been witnessed than that being enacted here in the Nation's Capital today.

Washington today is honored by the visit of Capt. Joseph A. Gainard, who comes to receive from Secretary of the Navy Knox tomorrow the Navy Cross for his heroic action aboard the City of Flint when he saved that ship from capture by the Germans.

He rendered distinguished service when he ended a strike on another United States ship then in the harbor of Montevideo, Uruguay. Captain Gainard was loyal to his country. In being so, he put down a mutiny on the Algic. Today, although competent, although loyal to his country, although having proved his loyalty in time of great personal danger to himself, he is prevented from commanding a merchant ship because the National Maritime Union, which has often been accused of being controlled by Communists, has him on its blacklist.

Several members of the crew who mutinied in the harbor of a foreign land were later tried, found guilty, and sent to prison for a violation of our Federal laws. Today these men—who were guilty of mutiny, as they were; tried and convicted, as they have been—can get jobs, but the loyal patriot, Captain Gainard, is denied command of a ship.

The following is the morning newspaper account of the incident:

LAURELS AND THORNS—GAINARD, OF THE "FLINT," TO GET MEDAL, BUT CAN'T GET A SHIP—HERE FOR CEREMONY, SKIPPER TELLS HOW SEA UNION BALKS HIM

Capt. Joseph A. Gainard, one of the most distinguished of America's merchant marine captains, is in Washington today to receive the Navy Cross from Secretary of the Navy Knox tomorrow for his heroic action aboard the City of Flint.

But Captain Gainard, for all his reputation, cannot take command of a merchant ship because the National Maritime Union will not forgive him for obeying orders and putting down a mutiny.

"No private owner could afford to give me a ship," said the man who put down the mutiny on the Algic. "The National Maritime Union wouldn't go out so far on the limb as to deny me a crew. They'd send me a crew of such hardened troublemakers I'd never finish the voyage."

He referred to the union whose strikes on his ship, then in Montevideo (Uruguay) harbor 2 years ago brought him to national prominence. Several members of his crew were tried later in Baltimore and found guilty of mutiny.

"What would you think," he said last night, "if you stepped aboard and found one of the ringleaders in that mutiny, a man who was sent to prison for his part in it, serving as fourth officer 2 years later? That's what I did not long ago."

Gainard holds no love for the union or for crews which "send a committee to the master several times a day with imaginary complaints."

"There's a Soviet aboard every United States merchant ship," he declared. "No master who gives them an inch remains for very long in command of his ship. I wouldn't put up with any foolishness."

Since Gainard brought his adventure-laden ship, The City of Flint, to port in Baltimore last January, he hasn't been to sea. But he has flashed into the news again; charges of neglect of duty brought by a cook and a mess boy on the Flint through the National Maritime Union (C. I. O.), were dismissed by the Maritime Commission in February as without merit.

"Before the voyage ended," Gainard said last night, "they were two of the best men I had. When they left the ship at New York they gave me their addresses so I could send for them when I got another ship. I don't believe they knew what they were signing."

But Captain Gainard has not been given another ship.

The slim New Englander sat back and reminisced, with the mind of a man who has spent most of his life taking what luck handed him, of the meals he fed his crews in the early days. He remembered a minor battle he had with his company's purchasing agent because he bought turkey for his crew in South America in June, the South American turkey season. He remembered his old practice of giving his men several days off during long stays in port.

"You can't do that now," he explained. "The union won't let you. Now they want nothing but overtime.

"One time a seaman on my ship got very sick and a hospital launch was sent out from shore to take him off. You wouldn't believe it, but some of the crew put in a claim for overtime for passing their own shipmate over the side."

On his last trip with the City of Flint before she was captured by the Deutschland, Captain Gainard and his crew rescued 219 survivors of the Canadian passenger ship Athenia, torpedoed off the Irish coast September 3, 1939. During the first World War he was on the President Lincoln when she was torpedoed.

In recognition of his devotion in freeing his last command, the City of Flint, from the Nazis in November 1939, he was awarded the cross last August. It will be presented by Secretary Knox, under present tentative plans, in the Secretary's office at 10:45 a. m. tomorrow.

The decoration he will receive tomorrow carries with it a citation for "skill, fine judgment, and devotion to duty" throughout the trying month his ship was under a German prize crew.

With reference now to another matter:

In the press of last night was information to the effect that the ranking minority member on the District Committee had taken notice of the fact that Government employees, while there is still unemployment, are holding two jobs.

It was suggested that the remedy might be through a lessening of the number of Federal employees. My information is too limited to know whether that be the proper solution. It is clear that Federal employees, whose jobs are secure and whose compensation is reasonable, should not be permitted to deprive unemployed of Government jobs created through the expenditure of Federal funds.

The morning mail brings a letter which charges that a director of finance in one of the departments, who draws $8,500 per annum, "finds time to go about and lecture at Government expense and on Government time."

It might be well to inquire whether the director of finance receives compensation for lectures, if he gives such lectures; how much of his time is spent in giving lectures, and whether the lectures are propaganda for the department and hence fall under the prohibition of a Federal statute, or whether they are private ventures.

Another Washington resident states that Thomas J. Frailey, who serves as a member of the Veterans' Appeal Board in the Veterans' Administration at $5,000 per year, also receives compensation from Southeastern University—Y. M. C. A.—as a professor in the law school. The university authorities decline to state the amount of his compensation. The Veterans' Administration states he receives $5,000 per annum.

Still another Washington resident, who made application for a job in a local store, was advised that they did not need additional employees. He says that a Government employee, a machinist who is working in the Naval Gun Factory here in the city from 4 o'clock in the afternoon until 12 at night, in shop 28, is holding down the job for which he applied, working from 9 in the morning until 2 in the afternoon.

He said he did not think it quite fair that this Government employee should be permitted to deprive him of the opportunity of earning a livelihood.

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, and to include a short table.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. HINSHAW]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, yesterday great headlines appeared in the newspapers as follows:

Roosevelt proposes to lease war materials to England without repealing the Johnson Act. The President suggests plan to remove silly, foolish dollar sign by means of gentlemen's agreement.

When I saw these headlines in the papers my blood boiled for I wonder whether the President of the United States, who has sworn to uphold the Constitution, has any respect whatever for law. When the law seems to interfere with anything that he wants to do, instead of changing the law as it should be changed according to our Constitution, and by oath he promised to obey, he finds some way to evade it. This is not honest; it is not right; it is not in accordance with the principle of trying to do things in the right way according to honesty and integrity or law. If the Johnson Act was good when the Congress enacted it, why is it not good today? If the Neutrality Act that we worked so faithfully on in 1938 and 1939 was a good law, why is it not good today? The President let the people of this country know that he was for neutrality. The Congress did the same. Today they are anything but neutral. The propaganda that has been going on in this country to get us into this war has been tremendous. Millions of dollars have been spent in circulation of propaganda through paid newspaper and magazine advertisements and over the radio. I am not saying that we should not try to keep the world safe for democracy, but I do say we should do it in a way that is honorable and just.

Then in today's New York Times we see the statement in large headlines:

White House advises $3,000,000,000 order be placed at once. London is assured.

Now the President can assure London to do this; why cannot he assure France, Belgium, Holland, Norway, Italy, Spain, or any other nation to do the same? Does he figure that this is going to be an outright gift without the consent of the American people? Suppose, as he said, we loan Great Britain submarines, cruisers, battleships, airplanes, or any other implement of warfare, to be returned in kind after the war. Is this neutrality, I ask? Suppose the worst does befall Great Britain and half of our Navy might be sunk. How are they going to return the payment of battleships and submarines and cruisers? What will we have for defense, I ask? Has the President assumed the attitude of complete dictatorship? We had an election in November and the majority of the people voted for him, but yet there are 20,000,000 people who do not see eye to eye with him, and I am one of them. It seems to me we ought to have a little respect for our own judgment, and when the President calls our monetary system a "foolish dollar sign" it shows that he has been most foolish in the squandering of billions and billions of dollars of the taxpayers' money—more billions than any President ever had—and the people take it whether they like it or not.

This, I say, is only bringing our democracy to the brink of the greatest disaster that this Nation has ever known, and this administration certainly will be responsible for it in great measure. Great Britain did not fulfill her obligations to America, nor did any of the other defaulting countries when they refused to pay their obligation to us when they could, and it seems to me they ought to pay to the limit of their ability before the President gives them everything they want without any sanction of the American people or the Congress. I am against this whole policy of doing things in this way. We are building navies and armies for every country in the world except our own. We talk about adequate defense. If we get rid of all our sea power and all of our munitions of war, how can we defend ourselves? I am for defending the American people first, last, and all the time against not only one nation but against any nation of the Eastern Hemisphere, or combination of nations who might want to attack us. I think we are playing with fire and if we do not watch out our own house will burn.

Mr. Morgenthau did not state that we should remove the silly, foolish dollar sign by means of a gentlemen's agreement. He figures on trying to borrow the money from the American people with the understanding that these are going to be loans fully secured to be paid back to the American taxpayers. If Great Britain wants all these things, let her give us a few of the islands in the West Indies or Bermuda, or something tangible close to our own shores that we could use to advantage in the protection of the Western Hemisphere. And we do not want any 99-year leases after we make a lot of improvements so that in 99 years our country will lose all the improvements we will make. Now is the time to deal with Great Britain or any other foreign country for America, and the lasting benefit of the American taxpayers. But let us deal with them on a basis that will bring security to our American Government and happiness to the American people. A great wholesale lease by the President of our Army and Navy that is liable to be lost may become the greatest injustice and betrayal of faith and confidence of the American people that was ever assumed by the hands of a Chief Executive. In the name of heaven let the American people write, and write at once, to the President of the United States and tell him not to make any contracts that will take from us the security that we now have. And in building our national defense, let us build our national defense with the idea we are going to protect and defend America, and that we will not do it by making aggressive warfare in the Eastern Hemisphere.

This probably is the last word that I am going to say to the Members of Congress before Christmas, and I wish to each and everyone of you a merry, merry Christmas and a prosperous, contented, happy New Year. This I say not only to the Members of Congress, but I say it to all American people. And may the God in heaven give comfort and strength and happiness to all people over the world is my wish at this Christmas season.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a radio address by Mr. Kuehl, who is an attorney in the R. F. C. He talked on the alien registration law and interpreted it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GEHRMANN]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of the business in order for the day and after any special orders heretofore entered, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 4 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW]?

There was no objection.

MAX VON DER PORTEN AND WIFE, CHARLOTTE VON DER PORTEN

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (S. 4085) for the relief of Max von der Porten and his wife, Charlotte von der Porten, and its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER]?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, Mr. von der Porten and his wife were and are citizens of Germany. At the advent of the present regime in Germany he was not in accord with the policies of Hitler and left Germany, going to Turkey, where he became an adviser of the then ruler of Turkey. The United States was in the course of preparation at that time of the so-called Aluminum Trust cases, and it was found necessary to secure the assistance of a man who was acquainted with the operations or machinations, if you please, of the aluminum people in Europe. A representative of the Department of Justice, Walter Rice, went to Europe and enlisted the assistance of Mr. von der Porten and then prevailed upon him to come to the United States. He has played a very large part in the preparation of this lawsuit, which incidentally is the longest case ever tried in the history of our courts. It has taken now over 2 years. Because of the assistance Mr. von der Porten gave the United States, which, of course, was adverse to a great many German industrialists, it is the judgment of the representatives of the Department of Justice that if he returns to Germany he will face a firing squad.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This bill permits him to stay in the country?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; and deducts from the German quota the usual points.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Did we not pass this bill at one time previously?

Mr. WALTER. No. This bill has passed the Senate, but not the House.

Mr MARTIN of Massachusetts. I thought it was on the House Calendar at one time.

Mr. WALTER. No.

Mr. RANKIN. Does the gentleman suppose this man can give us any light on the machinations of the Aluminum Trust in this country?

Mr. WALTER. He has been assisting in that.

Mr. RANKIN. If so, I think we ought to retain him temporarily, at least.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the immigration and naturalization laws, the Attorney General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to record the lawful admission for permanent residence of Max von der Porten and his wife Charlotte von der Porten, as of February 5, 1940, the date on which they were admitted temporarily to the United States. Upon the enactment of this act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct two numbers from the German quota for the first year the said German quota is available.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HERBERT ZUCKER ET AL.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4227) for the relief of Herbert Zucker, Emma Zucker, Hanni Zucker, Dorrit Claire Zucker, and Martha Hirsch.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is all this Zucker legislation about?

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, this family of Zuckers are Czechoslovakians who went to France, then to the United States, and have invested largely in property in the United States over a period going back twenty-odd years. He bought an industry, which was on the rocks in my State, for $290,000, and for years has maintained a pay roll of over $200,000 a year. He seeks now to get a nunc pro tunc classification. This bill has passed the Senate and has been approved by the Committee on Immigration of the House.

Mr. RANKIN. The majority members on the committee have been consulted?

Mr. PLUMLEY. They have, and the leaders on both sides as well.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Vermont?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accord nunc pro tunc examinations under the immigration laws to Herbert Zucker, Emma Zucker, Hanni Zucker, and Dorrit Claire Zucker, citizens of France, and Martha Hirsch, citizen of Czechoslovakia, and if such aliens upon examination be found admissible to the United States except for lack of immigration visas he shall record their lawful admittance for permanent residence as of the date of their temporary entry at New York on November 17, 1939. Upon the making of such record of permanent admission and payment by the aliens of fees fixed by law the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officers to deduct four numbers from the German quota and one from the Czechoslovak quota of the current fiscal year.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to discuss the question of who is promoting war in this country. Charges are being made that there are organizations here, there, and everywhere that are interested more in what is going on over in Europe than here. A great professor at Notre Dame the other day deliberately charged that an organization in New York was busily engaged at this time in trying to put us into war. The organization answered, and both the charge and the answer appeared simultaneously in the Washington Times-Herald of December 17. I ask unanimous consent that both be put in the RECORD so that the public may know something about the matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

NOTRE DAME UNIVERSITY EDUCATOR FLAYS PRO-ALLY GROUP—PUTS "MASS MURDER" LABEL ON COMMITTEE; SAYS IT COURTS WAR

NOTRE DAME, IND., December 16.—The Reverend Dr. John A. O'Brien, University of Notre Dame professor, tonight told students and faculty that "the lives of millions of our youth are being threatened by the propaganda that is dragging our Nation each day close to the brink of war."

Father O'Brien charged the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies should be called the "mass-murder committee," because "its concern is primarily to involve us in war for Great Britain."

DENIES INVASION PERIL

"America has never been in less danger from foreign invasion than now," Father O'Brien said. He said the world would have been better off had the United States remained out of the 1917 world conflict, permitting Europe to "learn the lesson it has to learn sometime" and preventing the Versailles Pact.

"Our tragic entrance prolonged the war, cost the lives of 2,000,000 men, prevented a negotiated peace, and made possible the iniquitous Versailles Treaty," he said.

"That treaty, imposed at the point of the sword, sunk the fangs of hatred into a prostrate foe, sowed the seeds of future wars, and paved the way for the rise of European dictatorship."

LOYALTY TO UNITED STATES FIRST, SAYS COMMITTEE HEAD

NEW YORK, December 16.—Roger S. Greene, associate national director of the Committee to Defend America by Aiding the Allies, said tonight committee members hate war as much as does the Reverend Dr. John A. O'Brien.

Answering the Notre Dame professor's charges that the committee was more interested in Great Britain than the United States, Greene said the "primary loyalty" of committee members to the United States was "beyond question."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by Dr. Manuel Fernandez Supervielle, a very distinguished lawyer, president of the Inter-American Bar Association—Federación Interamericana de Abogados—and also president of the Habana Bar Association, at a dinner given in his honor at the Army and Navy Club, Washington, D. C., Monday evening, October 28, 1940.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on the Judiciary, as all of you know, has been making some examination with reference to some aspects of our national defense and our national solidarity, and all of that sort of thing. There is one thing happening in this country which I do not believe the people properly appreciate. It is a thing about which something ought to be done by public opinion.

We do have in this country a great many German people, many of them just as loyal as we are. Instances have come to my attention of cowardly and brutal treatment of individual citizens who happen to be of German blood and who are just as loyal as we are. There are not many instances of that sort, but there ought to be none. This is not only cowardly and brutal, but it is against the best interests of the country, because if anything could make those people disloyal it is the character of treatment which in some communities individuals have received. Public opinion ought to put its face definitely against that sort of treatment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. CLARA G. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mrs. CLARA G. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, for 16 years I have been connected with the Congress more or less closely, 15 of those years as the wife of a Member and during the past year as a Member of the House of Representatives. I have made many friends here, both Republicans and Democrats. [Applause.]

As many of you know, I did not offer for reelection, so at the closing of this Congress my work with you will come to an end. I wish to take this opportunity to thank you for your many courtesies to me and to say that when I leave I shall carry with me many happy memories of my associations, contacts, and friendships. I wish for each of you a very merry Christmas and happy holiday season. [Applause, Members rising.]

ACOUSTICS

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, while the House of Representatives has been meeting in this room I have noticed that from time to time the Speaker has referred to acoustics. I do not know how many Members of the House know what acoustics are. I remember a story of a man named Tabor, who was a Senator from Colorado for some time, one of the bonanza kings of Colorado. He built a great opera house in Denver—the Tabor Grand Opera House. When he came over to examine it he found that it had above the proscenium arch a picture of a man with whiskers, and another one, and another one. He said, "Who is that guy with the whiskers?" They said, "That is Shakespeare." He said, "What the hell did he ever do for Denver? Paint him out and paint me in." [Laughter.] He said, "How is the opera house, anyway?" The architect said, "Well, it is pretty bad on acoustics." He sniffed a little and said, "I don't smell nothing." Mr. Speaker, "I don't smell nothing here." The acoustics are all right. [Laughter and applause.]

HON. ROBERT LUCE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of paying tribute to one of the great men of this House, one who will this year retire from public office, my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts, the Honorable ROBERT L. LUCE. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is one of the really great Americans of this time [applause]; one who might really and truthfully be classified as a great scholar in politics. This Congress can ill afford to lose him. He has had a long and honorable career not only in the State of Massachusetts but here in Washington as well, where his service covered a period of 20 years. In that time he has been very influential in much of the legislation that has passed through the Congress. His was the authorship that created the National Arboretum. He was mainly responsible for the erection of the Archives Building, where the records of this country will be preserved. These are but two of his many contributions to the welfare of Washington and the country.

For many years he has been a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. When the Republicans were in power he was the ranking member of that committee, and he has occupied that position also during the Democratic administration. During his service he has taken a devoted interest in the financial legislation of this country and has been largely responsible for the form in which many important measures have emerged.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] has taken a wide interest in the rules of this House. He is perhaps one of the ablest parliamentarians this House has ever had. From his long legislative experience he has given to the country a book devoted to parliamentary law.

I rise at this time to say that all of us on both sides of the aisle who have served with him during his 20 years in Congress have come to love, admire, and respect the gentleman from Massachusetts, ROBERT LUCE. He will go into private life with the warmest wishes of all of us for many more happy years. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] is recognized for 10 minutes.

PAY OF IRON WORKERS

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Speaker, on Monday I placed in the RECORD a photostatic copy of the pay roll for the week ending December 11, of the iron workers, foremen, and apprentices, and pushers who are putting up the iron roof supports in the House and Senate Chambers. I ventured to comment upon the facts and express my opinion as to those facts. I had hoped that a Member of Congress would be accorded the courtesy and the privilege of discussing facts, pay rolls, and conditions prevailing in the work being done in the Chambers of the House and Senate without being charged with smearing anyone. The only answer I received from those in charge of that organization was that I was trying to smear labor, but no answer was made to the charges and no statement made that the facts quoted were not correct.

The iron work in the House and Senate Chambers was completed yesterday. I spent some time this morning in going over the facts and pay rolls with the timekeeper who kept the time on that job. I am going to give you certain further facts today which were verified by the timekeeper as he and I went over the pay rolls for the 3 weeks ending December 4, December 11, and December 18. These pay rolls cover all the expenditures for labor except a small sum of $60, which was covered by preliminary pay roll of November 27. These pay rolls, as verified by the timekeeper, disclose that the foreman on this job during the 3 weeks ending December 4, 11, and 18 actually performed 189 hours of service for which he received $625. These figures give the actual time he was on the job, not including overtime or double time; the pay, of course, includes the overtime; 189 hours of actual service for which he was paid $625.

With each five or six iron workers they have a man they call a pusher. The foreman, by the way, got a base pay of $2.50 an hour and these pushers received a base pay of $2.35 an hour. These seven pushers each received during the same 3 weeks $380.70 for 120 hours of actual service rendered. The iron workers, each received $324 in pay for 120 hours of actual service performed with a base pay of $2 an hour. They had apprentices who picked up bolts and helped the workers. These were paid at a base rate of $1.15. They received $123.90, for 88 hours of actual work.

The total pay roll for these workers in the work of erecting this steel structure in the House and Senate chambers amounted to $12,790.43 for handling 237 tons of steel.

There was no cutting of any kind. The fabricating was all done in the factory.

I was in error, or rather the Architect of the Capitol was in error, when he informed me that these men received time and a half for overtime during the week and double time for Saturdays and Sundays. The timekeeper this morning informed me that they received double time for all overtime work and wherever there were two shifts working, they received 6 hours' pay for each 5½ hours of work; for instance, one man worked 6 hours and 15 minutes and he received one-half hour's pay at $2 an hour for the extra 15 minutes.

I was informed, Mr. Speaker, that under the rules of the union a workday in New York is 8 hours a day with double time over and above the 8 hours. Here in the city of Washington they have a rule of double time over and above a 6-hour day. In other words, a man who works in New York would get $2 an hour for 8 hours or a total of $16 pay. In Washington he would get $2 an hour for the first 6 hours and $4 for the next 2 hours, or a total of $20 for 8 hours' work.

I was further informed, Mr. Speaker, that under the regulations of the union the men who unload the iron at the train had to be iron workers. The contractor could not use ordinary labor. These men were paid, under union regulations, the same rate of $2 an hour for unloading the iron from the cars that they would have received had they been working in the House or Senate chamber putting up the iron. I was further informed that under the rules of the union, when they unload iron and require a crane, they must pay an engineer for operating the crane. In many instances the railroad company has its own crane and operates it with their own engineer. In that case the engineer of the iron workers sits there and watches the engineer of the railroad operate the railroad crane and the engineer for the iron workers receives $2 an hour while he watches that railroad engineer operating the railroad crane in unloading that iron.

This occurred yesterday on the Fourteenth Street railroad siding, where an ironworker engineer was paid $2 an hour as he sat watching the railroad engineer operating the railroad crane.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. In just a minute. In order to avoid being accused of smearing anyone I am not going to comment upon the facts. You can comment upon them yourself. Your opinion is as good as mine.

I want to say today what I said the other day that these men, of course, are not working full time. They work as the jobs come along. The business agent of the ironworkers was quoted in the paper as saying that this foreman who drew $267.50 for 76 hours' work for the week ending December 11 was only working 8 months in the year.

I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Did the gentleman go as far as to find out what the average annual wage of any of these workers was?

Mr. ENGEL. I have computed the cost of erecting this iron in the House and Senate Chambers. It cost $54 a ton to bolt together 237 tons of iron beams in the House and Senate Chambers.

Mr. EBERHARTER. What I mean is this: These ironworkers probably work only 6 or 8 months a year, and their average annual wage would not be as much as $2,000 a year. I think in order to be fair to those workingmen you should have an investigation made to see what they have made in the last 12 months. That would show whether they were being overpaid.

Mr. ENGEL. Very well. On December 4 the foreman drew $197.50 for that week's pay. On December 11 he drew $267.50 for that week's pay. On December 18 he drew $160 for that week's pay. I say if he draws that for 8 months, it is excessive.

The pushers received $126.90 for 39½ hours' pay for the week ending December 4. They received the same amount for 38½ hours' work for the week ending December 11, and they received the same amount of pay for 42 hours for the week ending December 18. The ironworkers received $108 a week for 3 weeks, or a total of $324 for 120 hours of work. I submit that is pretty good pay even for that length of time. I cannot, for the life of me, see how anybody can do any building at that price.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. What is a pusher?

Mr. ENGEL. He is a foreman—a straw boss. They have four or five men in a crew, and the pusher is the man who tells the four or five men what to do.

Mr. EBERHARTER. In other words, he pushes them so that they will get more work done. Is not that where the term comes from?

Mr. ENGEL. Yes; these men, who got $324 each for 120 hours of work, had to be pushed by seven pushers who got $380.70 for 120 hours of pushing. That is pretty expensive pushing.

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL. I yield.

Mr. CAMP. Are not these steelworkers, what we call structural steelworkers, most of them working at great heights, and their work is a most hazardous occupation?

Mr. ENGEL. That is very true; but why should we pay men $2 an hour for unloading a railroad car of steel, the same price they get for climbing a 20-story building? Why should we pay an engineer $2 an hour watching another engineer operate a crane? Answer that. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW] is recognized for 4 minutes.

HON. JOSEPH P. KENNEDY

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I think I echo a sentiment that is universal at this time throughout America when I say, "Thank God for Joseph P. Kennedy."

Our Ambassador to the Court of St. James stands four-square first, last, and all the time for America. Unlike some of our other Ambassadors to that ancient court, he has not become infected with foreign prejudices and predilections but has retained his Americanism, pure and undiluted. He is a splendid example of American thought and purpose.

In this critical formative stage of American policy he stands like a great Rock of Gibraltar for the peace, the independence, and the noninvolvement of America.

When he said the other day that he was resigning his commission in order to come home and help President Roosevelt to keep America out of war he gave cheer and hope to millions of our fellow citizens. With his intimate knowledge of the European background and the titanic forces at work in that maelstrom of horrible conflict, he is in a position to render service of inestimable value to the President and the people of America toward steering our course in the direction of peace and away from the yawning chasm of war.

Mr. Kennedy, who is our Ambassador until a successor has been appointed, is now taking a much-needed rest at Palm Beach, Fla. Later his voice will be heard and his influence will be felt in shaping our national policy, and I am sure his wise and patriotic recommendations will be accorded by the public opinion of our country all the respect that is due them.

I have just received a letter from Mr. Kennedy which I think merits the attention of the country. It is a letter of caution against precipitate action that might involve us in war while we are woefully unprepared, and from it I quote as follows:

As it stands today—

Says our Ambassador to Britain in his letter—

our production for defense is nowhere near adequate for the protection of our own situation, let alone aid Britain. While our own defenses are weak, we are limited as to what we can do for Britain, even though we want to. Therefore our first obligation is to speed up defense with all our might. It would be suicidal for our country to get into war in our present state of unpreparedness.

I hope the Ambassador's words will sink deeply into the consciousness of America. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, Mr. VOORHIS of California and Mr. DISNEY were granted permission to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech that I made over the radio last evening discussing the veto of the Logan-Walter bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK].

SHORT-LINE RAILROADS

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, there has just been presented to the House in this message of a moment ago from the Senate the bill 10098, the so-called short-line railroad bill. It passed the Senate in substantially the same form it passed the House, and it passed the House without objection, if I remember correctly. This is a measure, you will recall, to compensate the short-line railroads, the lines found to be left out on a limb when the railroads were turned back by the Government after the previous World War. The great lines were compensated and then the opportunity under relief legislation expired by operation of law. A number of the short lines were left in a state of financial injury, because they did not show an actual loss on running operations during the years of Government control—did not get in the red. As the law was written, or at least construed, they did not recover, but were involved in litigation extending over a great number of years, such a length of time that the original legislation expired before they were given relief. This bill now before us was considered by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and I was a member of the subcommittee that handled the bill. The chairman of the subcommittee was the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SOUTH]. He is not here today, nor is the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA] committee chairman.

Inasmuch as the bill comes back from the Senate substantially as we passed it, the only difference being a limitation that in effect cuts $800,000 from the amount of the bill as it passed the House, I think the House should take final action and concur in the Senate amendment. As the bill passed the House it carried $1,991,000. As it passed the Senate it carries the sum of $1,191,000.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota, a member of the subcommittee that considered the bill.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. As I understand it, the Senate amendments provide a limitation on the earnings of the claimants during the emergency period of the World War to 5¾ percent.

Mr. PATRICK. The gentleman is correct. No claim can go above 5¾ percent of the earnings.

Mr. YOUNGDAHL. And except for that limitation the bill comes back to us as it was passed by the House?

Mr. PATRICK. Exactly as it was passed by the House.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10098) to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920, with a Senate amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

On page 3, line 3, after the word "act", insert: Provided further, That no claim certified under this subsection shall be for an amount in excess of $150,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make a short statement.

The Chair wishes to leave here on Saturday next to spend the holidays with his own people in Texas and, therefore, recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts to offer a resolution.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 646

Resolved, That Hon. WILLIAM P. COLE, JR., a Representative from the State of Maryland, be, and he is hereby, elected Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

Resolved, That the President and the Senate be notified by the clerk of the election of WILLIAM P. COLE, JR., as Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

The resolution was agreed to.

WILLIAM TYLER PAGE

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, today is the fifty-ninth anniversary of the appointment of William Tyler Page as a page in the House of Representatives. During all these 59 years he has been connected in one way or another with the House of Representatives. For 12 years he was Clerk of the House. He is an eminent authority upon the rules and procedure of the House, and upon the form and character of bills. He has been especially active in patriotic endeavors; is the author of the American's Creed, and has given himself wholeheartedly and devotedly to the interests of the House of Representatives.

I rise at this time to pay my tribute to Mr. Page, one of the finest, truest characters who has ever served the House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK] is recognized.

SHORT-LINE RAILROADS

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 10098) to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920, with a Senate amendment thereto, and to concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

On page 3, line 3, after the word "Act", insert: "Provided further, That no claim certified under this subsection shall be for an amount in excess of $150,000."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PATRICK]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my previous objection, based on later information.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] said, 59 years ago today William Tyler Page became an officer of the House of Representatives and in a way he is connected indirectly with my district because during the early part of his service in the House, one Sunday afternoon he saw the flag go up at half mast. He said, "Dudley Haskell has died."

Dudley Chase Haskell was a great predecessor of mine, who served four terms in the House of Representatives from the Second Kansas District from March 4, 1877, until his death in Washington, December 16, 1883.

I know that everybody in the House voices the sentiments of the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and endorses all he said in appreciation of the services of Mr. Page.

To have been for nearly three score years an officer or employee of the House of Representatives is a great distinction in itself and to have been such an intelligent and efficient aid in the House adds distinction that no doubt will never be equaled, certainly never surpassed, in the annals of the House of Representatives.

During these years Mr. Page served as Clerk of the House for a dozen years, and certainly no one ever filled that office with greater efficiency or with more helpful assistance to Members of the House who today render deserving praise as they remember his kind and unobtrusive suggestions and guidance during their junior years in the House.

The American Creed, which Mr. Page wrote in 1917, is worthy to last as long as the Republic endures and to live on the lips of generations yet unborn and to echo from the walls of countless schools where the endless procession of American youth love and salute The Star-Spangled Banner.

Mr. Page was not merely an officer of the House. He was a sort of member at large and was versed as probably no other man in the history of the more numerous branch of our National Legislature as well as an authority on the parliamentary procedure which is illustrated by Page's Congressional Handbook, which was published first in 1913. This has been a great help to Members in their understanding of the rules and precedents of the House.

Mr. Page was not merely a repository of information to Members, but in the truest sense he was a friend of every Member of the House, and his friendship and comradery were reciprocated by the whole membership who from time to time were under the greatest obligations for helpful suggestions and guidance in their work in the House.

I am most happy to join in this tribute to a faithful and distinguished officer of the House whose patriotic service is in harmony with an ancestry which includes a signer of the Declaration of Independence and a President of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK]?

There was no objection.

WILLIAM TYLER PAGE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, every Member who has ever served in this body either with Mr. Page or who has been associated with him in the relationship that he has occupied for so many years to the Members of this House joins in the remarks made by the two previous speakers in paying honor to a great American and to one who has been an outstanding official. It is a pleasure for me as a Member of the House individually and as majority leader to join with the two distinguished Members who have previously and properly referred to our distinguished friend, Mr. Page.

Mr. Page entered the service as a page boy on December 19, 1881, in the Clerk's office of the House. President Garfield had just been assassinated. The period of his service, in which he occupied many positions, including that of Clerk of the House for 6 terms, covered 30 Congresses, from the Forty-seventh to the Seventy-sixth, inclusive. Mr. Page witnessed the convening of 73 sessions of Congress, regular and extraordinary. He served under 14 Speakers. The population of the United States was 51,000,000 when he came here. It is now 131,000,000. The membership of the House was 293. It is now 435. Ten States were added to the Union. Hawaii was acquired and made a Territory. The Philippines, Puerto Rico, Guam, Tutuila, the Virgin Islands, and the Panama Canal Zone became possessions. The Panama Canal was constructed; 2 wars were fought, the Spanish-American and the World War. Mr. Page also witnessed 8 general revisions of the tariff and 15 Presidential inaugurations. In 1881, the year of his advent here, $250,000,000 ran the Government. The ordinary receipts were $300,000,000. Now both run into billions. About five to six thousand Senators and Representatives came and went. When "Uncle Joe" Cannon left Congress about 16 years ago he was the last man to go who was in the House in Mr. Page's boyhood days.

One of the things at the end of life that you and I will treasure most are the friendships that we make. I imagine that if most of us are allowed to live to a good old age we will not be thinking of some great speech we made or some outstanding piece of legislation we may have enacted and fought to obtain enactment into law. That might be a part of our consideration, and properly so; but I think one of the major considerations, if we are permitted in the wisdom of God to live to a ripe old age, will be our friends, those living and those who have taken the journey. I know in my own mind and in the minds of all Members who know Mr. Page that if I and others are permitted to live to such old age, when we will be looking at life backward rather than in the future, when we are thinking of the many friendships we have made, Mr. Page will be one of the foremost in the minds of all of us. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 5336. An act for the relief of Peter Bavisotto.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 56 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, December 23, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

2078. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the president of the Columbia Institution for the Deaf, Washington, D. C., transmitting a report to Congress of amounts and rates paid to superintendent and for teachers for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1940, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, memorials were presented and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of California, memorializing the President and the Congress of the United States to consider their House Resolution No. 14, dated December 4, 1940, concerning subversive and un-American activities; to the Committee on Rules.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9414. By Mr. MERRITT: Resolution of the Queens County Council, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Elmhurst, N. Y., requesting that the Housing Authority investigate each and every tenant of the modern homes, Queensbridge and South Jamaica housing projects in Queens County, N. Y.; vehemently protesting the injustice done many of our citizens who are living in unhealthy and unsanitary homes, who registered for occupancy in these projects but were refused admission because many Communists were on the lists prior to them; and urging that the housing committee be instructed to take strong measures immediately to break the leases of these Communists, who are a menace in any community, and that they be replaced by American families whose children can be brought up in the proper atmosphere; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

9415. By the SPEAKER: Petition of Harry M. Stayfield, of the Dallas County committee on platform and resolutions, Democratic convention, Mineral Wells, Tex., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to subversive and un-American activities; to the Committee on Rules.

9416. Also, petition of the American Legion, Dallas, Tex., petitioning consideration of their resolution with reference to the Dies committee; to the Committee on Rules.

SENATE

MONDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, November 19, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who at Thy birth wast cradled in a manger, wearing our flesh without humiliation or stain: As we approach this Christmastide, help us to rejoice in Thy holy Incarnation, the mystery of which no dream of prophet could reveal, nor words would e'er foretell. We marvel at Thy childlike mind, soaring beyond the disputations of the wise, the calculations of the prudent. We bow our heads in worship as we contemplate the savior-impulse of Thy life, turning men from despair and sin, winning them by the convincing idealism of Thy teaching, holding them by Thy conquering love.

Help us, therefore, this day and throughout the days to come to bear each other's burdens as we witness Thy heart-break over sins that were not Thine own, and see Thy shame for others' lack of shame, that we, being born anew in Thee, may have a share in the redemption of mankind. We ask it in Thine own dear name, Thou Saviour of the world. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Thursday, December 19, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, informed the Senate that Hon. WILLIAM P. COLE, JR., a Representative from the State of Maryland, had been elected Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

The message announced that the House had passed without amendment the following bills of the Senate:

S. 4085. An act for the relief of Max von der Porten and his wife, Charlotte von der Porten; and

S. 4227. An act for the relief of Herbert Zucker, Emma Zucker, Hanni Zucker, Dorrit Claire Zucker, and Martha Hirsch.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10098) to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended; and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H. R. 5336) for the relief of Peter Bavisotto, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

CREDENTIALS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have here the official certificate of the Governor of Washington appointing Hon. MON C. WALLGREN Senator from that State for the unexpired term of former Senator Schwellenbach, resigned. Mr. WALLGREN has already taken the oath of office. I ask that the certificate be filed. It is to take the place of the telegraphic credentials presented at the time Mr. WALLGREN took the oath of office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The certificate will be received and placed on file.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the credentials of BURTON K. WHEELER, duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Montana a Senator from that State for the term beginning January 3, 1941, which were read and ordered to be filed.

AWARDS OF QUANTITY CONTRACTS FOR THE ARMY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, reporting, pursuant to law, relative to divisions of awards of certain quantity contracts for aircraft, aircraft parts, and accessories therefor entered into with more than one bidder under authority of law, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MAILING OF SMALL FIREARMS TO ENFORCEMENT OFFICERS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Postmaster General, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize mailing of small firearms to officers and employees of enforcement agencies of the United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

LEGISLATION BY MUNICIPAL COUNCILS IN VIRGIN ISLANDS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate two letters from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of certain legislation enacted by the Municipal councils of St. Croix and St. Thomas and St. John, V. I., which, with the accompanying papers, were referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIAL

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from Jessie J. Colbert, of Youngstown, Ohio, relative to claim for compensation for disability attributable to military service during the World War, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from J. Tier, of San Francisco, Calif., enclosing literature of the Mothers of the United States of America urging repeal of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, praying that the United States render all possible aid to England and keep out of war, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Kosciusko Rotary Club, of Kosciusko, Miss., protesting against un-American activities of certain alien groups in the United States, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution of the Puerto Rican American Women's League, Washington, D. C., favoring granting to the people of Puerto Rico a greater measure of self-government looking toward eventual statehood, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Affairs.

LEGISLATION RECOMMENDED BY NATIONAL FARMERS' UNION

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred the legislation recommended to Congress by the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, generally known as the National Farmers' Union, in resolutions adopted at its annual convention in Denver, Colo., November 18, 19, and 20, 1940.

I wish with all earnestness to impress upon the Senate that protection of agriculture against still further economic dislocations during this emergency is an integral and highly important part of the national-defense program. The Farmers' Union is one of the major national farm organizations. Its leaders and membership have given years of careful thought and attention to the problems of agriculture. Their recommendations are worthy of the careful consideration of the Senate; and I respectfully urge my colleagues to give careful attention to the legislative recommendations of this great farm organization.

There being no objection, the matter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEGISLATION

1. To provide assurance of full parity prices, the Farmers' Union income-certificate plan must be adopted for all commodities for which it is practicable, and fully adequate Federal payments must be continued on other commodities until permanent, self-financing programs can be developed for them.

2. Further to provide assurance of an annual parity income, Federal crop insurance must be extended to all possible commodities, and especially to cotton.

3. To provide assurance of security in farm homes, the Farmers' Union debt-adjustment bill must be enacted into law without compromising its provisions for scaling down of debts, for credit at the cost of the Government, and for keeping the farmer on the farm.

4. To provide an opportunity to live and to remain on the land to our millions of low-income farmers, funds must be appropriated for a many-fold expansion and extension of the Farm Security Administration programs, together with such further special aids as are necessary.

5. To provide the opportunity for farmers democratically to organize themselves for more effective participation in our national life, the declared intention of Congress toward bona fide farmer cooperatives must be implemented with realistic financial support where necessary, and with emphasis and zeal equal to that shown by the Government in promoting soil conservation. Discrimination against such organizations, either in favor of private-profit enterprise or of Government-conducted operations must be stopped.

6. The health and strength of America, including rural America, must be fortified by assuring an adequate diet to every man, woman, and child in the Nation through greatly increased funds for distributing our farm surpluses to those in need.

In addition to these six major needs of American agriculture, we endorse the following legislative proposals and administrative principles as needed for the full participation of farm people in the common defense:

1. Payments to farmers for preservation of our soil and natural resources should be fully maintained, but should be made on the basis of needed conservation practices, and should be separated from commodity-income programs. We oppose the assignment of any payment made under the various Federal farm programs, except for the purpose of paying crop-insurance premiums as provided in the law. We recommend a reduction in minimum size of benefit payments, and further, increases in the smallest payments.

2. We support the commodity-loan program, except as elsewhere noted; the ever-normal inventory of needed supplies, and surplus-products disposal to foreign markets.

3. We urge that milk and its products be made a basic commodity under the A. A. A., as provided for in the Farmers' Union dairy stabilization bill.

4. We favor the extension of the Federal sugar program, with appropriate changes to give needed protection to family sized growers and field labor.

5. We favor increased marketing information services, continued research for new uses for farm products, continued efforts to remove interstate trade barriers, and the protection of our domestic market for American agriculture.

6. We oppose the transfer of the Farm Credit Administration away from its present status within the Department of Agriculture to its former position as an independent agency.

7. We especially urge that appropriations for the Farm Security Administration be made available to enable low-income farmers to become members of cooperatives, thereby both aiding their own rehabilitation and strengthening the self-organization of farmers who need these most. We continue to support the Government-insured loan as the most practicable method of funding a large-scale program to make owners out of tenants.

8. We shall continue to support adequate appropriations for the extension of cooperative rural electrification.

9. We wholeheartedly support legislation to provide Federal aid for rural health services, urging especially that cooperative hospitals be approved agencies for securing financial aid.

10. We shall continue to support legislation or adequate funds for aiding rural young people, both through such programs as the N. Y. A.

11. We favor an appropriate program of low-cost rural housing to clear our rural slums, with credit at the cost to the Government, and subsidies where needed.

12. We favor old-age pensions, paid from Federal funds, on the basis of age and citizenship. We favor the improvement and extension of our farm programs.

13. We strongly oppose requirements for the payment of poll taxes as a condition for voting, whether in local, State, or national elections, and support Federal legislation to outlaw poll taxes as a franchise requirement for voting in Federal elections.

14. We reaffirm our position that Federal taxation should be levied on the basis of the ability to pay, as based upon net income, and are unalterably opposed to any system of taxation not based on this principle. Since a sales tax has historically been the method used to extort revenue from those least able to pay, we reiterate our continued and consistent opposition to that tax. We favor abolishing tax exemption on Government securities.

15. We urge the restoration to Congress of the power to coin and regulate the value of money.

16. We reaffirm our position that the administrative personnel of Federal farm programs should be farmers democratically elected insofar as legally possible; all other administrative personnel should be persons who understand, participate in, and are sympathetic to farm organizations and the cooperative movement.

17. We affirm again that protection of the family sized farm shall be a constant and primary policy, and aim in the formulation, amendment, and administration of all farm legislation.

18. We are most vigorously opposed to the principles contained in the Walter-Logan bill and urge its defeat.

19. We reassert our historic position as opposed to the sending of American boys to fight on foreign soil, and demand that the Congress of the United States limit military action of this country to a strictly defensive policy, dedicated only to the preservation of our democracy.

20. The Commodity Credit Corporation has accumulated large stocks of cotton, corn, and wheat. In all the Federal laws dealing with warehousing and distribution of agricultural commodities, Congress has directed all Federal agencies to use producers' cooperative associations wherever practicable. In wanton disregard, the Commodity Credit Corporation has entered the field of warehousing and direct handling of cotton and corn. It now proposes the same operation for wheat. This program if continued will destroy the cooperative associations engaged in these fields of marketing.

We demand that the Government withdraw from the field of warehousing and marketing agricultural commodities. Unless this is done immediately, we shall oppose with all our strength any further appropriations for any agency of the Federal Government whose program is in direct competition with producer-owned cooperatives. We solicit the aid of organized labor in this fight to save our cooperatives from destruction.

21. In the emergency that confronts the common people of America at this time, the need for active cooperation between organized labor and organized agriculture becomes of the greatest importance.

We therefore reaffirm our historic position toward organized labor in expressing a continued desire to cooperate with the organized workers in mine, mill, and factory.

We express our deep appreciation for labor's support in the Congress of the United States. We organized farmers recognize that except for the faithful support of those Members of Congress who represent labor districts our national farm program would have been whittled down or wiped off the lawbooks of the Nation for lack of support in Congress.

Organized labor may count on the Farmers' Union for the fullest support in the fight for legislative justice to wage workers. From this position we shall not retreat. We ask labor's support of our legislative program.

MARY JOSEPHINE WILLIAMS

Mr. BARKLEY. On behalf of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably from that committee, without amendment, and ask for the present consideration of the resolution, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read Senate Resolution 338, submitted by Mr. HAYDEN on December 16, 1940, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Mary Josephine Williams, widow of Ora Williams, late a laborer of the Senate under supervision of the Sergeant at Arms, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION—WALTER M. W. SPLAWN

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, at the last session the name of Interstate Commerce Commissioner Walter M. W. Splawn was sent to the Senate, and objection was made to its consideration on that date. I am advised by the acting minority leader the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] that there is no further objection to the confirmation of the appointment of Mr. Splawn. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from further consideration of the nomination, that it now be taken up and acted on as in executive session, and that the President be notified of the confirmation. There seems to be no executive calendar. Therefore, I will not move that the Senate go into executive session for the consideration of the nomination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, as in executive session, the Committee on Interstate Commerce will be discharged from the further consideration of the nomination, which will be read.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Walter M. W. Splawn to be an Interstate Commerce Commissioner for a term expiring December 31, 1947.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed, and, without objection, the President will be notified.

RELATIONS WITH JAPAN

[Mr. SHIPSTEAD asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Washington Times-Herald of December 23, 1940, entitled "Armageddon, Indeed," which appears in the Appendix.]

LETTER FROM SENATOR VANDENBERG TO WILLIAM S. KNUDSEN ON DEFENSE PROGRAM

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to read into the RECORD a letter which I today addressed to Mr. William S. Knudsen:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 23, 1940.

Mr. WILLIAM S. KNUDSEN,
Advisory Commission to the Council of National Defense,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. KNUDSEN: I heartily applaud your recent designation to a place of larger authority in the matter of national-defense procurement, and I trust you will find yourself with ample power to achieve essential though belated results.

In connection with your designation, you have made an earnest, patriotic appeal to the whole American people to recognize the state of national emergency and to throw themselves wholeheartedly into full cooperation with the defense effort.

I respectfully suggest that the surest means to enlist complete American, mass cooperation is to give the American people full information at all times. Thus far they have not had it. Instead, they have had cryptic assurances that "all's well" with defense progress, barring some of your own frank comments to the contrary, when such was not the case.

I fully realize that there are certain things that cannot be publicly discussed in connection with a matter of this nature, and I except from this suggestion which I am making any information which it would truly be "incompatible with the public interest" to make public. But I respectfully suggest that foreign powers undoubtedly find themselves fully advised regarding the general nature of our defense progress; and that there is more to be lost by failing to substantially apprise the American people of their own defense weaknesses than there is to be gained by ineffectual secrecy as respects foreign information.

I recall to you my letter of last September 25, in which I asked for authentic figures regarding actual airplane deliveries, in various categories, upon which we could dependably rely for actual delivery by April 1, 1941. I recall to you your reply of October 1, telling me that while the figures could be made available, "it would be better if the information were kept confidential for a while." I never received the information.

I am sure you had only the international situation in mind. But now that this—and perhaps some weightier domestic reasons for secrecy regarding defense progress—should no longer exist, I earnestly recommend that Congress and the American people be given all the facts—facts as distinguished from mere aspirations—regarding defense progress and defense objectives.

It seems to me that commendable progress is now being made in the direction of this greater candor. With the exceptions that always apply to any rule, I respectfully beg leave to express the hope that the country may have more of it. Particularly in a democracy the people must have maximum information regarding their own public business if they are to be expected to deal with it intelligently and responsively.

With sentiments of great respect, and with warm personal regards and best wishes, I beg to remain,

Cordially yours,

ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG.

ROBERT A. LOVETT

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the body of the RECORD a statement about Mr. Robert A. Lovett who was appointed Thursday of last week by Secretary of War Stimson to a post in the War Department.

Mr. Lovett is connected with the Royal Exchange Assurance, of London, England. I wish to have the record of his connections printed. The Royal Exchange Assurance has connections with the Morgan interests through Lord Bicester and Lord Catto, of Morgan, Grenfell & Co. Mr. Stimson is doing just what many of us thought he would do, in appointing men with such foreign connections as aides in the War Department.

I shall not burden the Senate with a discussion of Mr. Lovett's record, but I do ask that it be placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD following these brief remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Robert A. Lovett is an official of the Royal Exchange Assurance, powerful British insurance organization. The officers of this English company are as follows:

Governor, Lord Bicester; directors, Lt. Col. R. W. Barclay, Hon. R. E. Beckett, Lord Bethell, Hon. David Bowes-Lyons, Lord Catto, Lord Richard Cavendish, Lord Charles Cavendish-Bentinck, A. R. Cook, L. W. Farrow, Sir Charles Eric Hambro, J. E. Humphrey, H. K. M. Kindersley, Capt. A. R. H. Morrell, Sir Spencer Portal, Sir Frederick H. Richmond, John Robarts, Duke of Rutland, J. S. Scott, Somers Somerset, Sir Frank D. Watney.

MORGAN INFLUENCE

Those names show definitely the close tie-up with J. P. Morgan & Co. and the company. As most of you know, the Morgan interest in England is known as Morgan Grenfell & Co. Other prominent banking names of Great Britain are listed, one of which is Hambro.

Who is Lord Bicester?

He is Vivian Hugh Smith, a director of Morgan Grenfell & Co. (English branch of J. P. Morgan & Co.). He is also director of Associated Electrical Industries (Westinghouse), governor of Royal Exchange Assurance, and chairman of Yule Catto & Co. (East Indies merchants).

Who is Lord Catto?

He is director of Morgan Grenfell & Co. (English branch of J. P. Morgan & Co.). He is also director of Andrew Yule & Co., of Calcutta, India; Mercantile Bank of India, Oriental Telephone & Electric Co. (with its holdings in India, Singapore, and places of Far East), Royal Bank of Scotland, Union Castle Mail Steamship Co. (South African line), and Yule, Catto & Co. (East Indies merchants).

BROWN BROS., HARRIMAN & CO.

Mr. Lovett is a partner in Brown Bros., Harriman & Co. These bankers have been active in financing the expansion of certain war-boom industries. Their interest in this war is directly connected with foreign investments as well as their ownership in certain industries in this country that are selling the Government large orders for war.

Not only Mr. Lovett but others in the firm have directorships in foreign insurance. For instance, Thatcher Brown holds many directorships in foreign-controlled insurance companies. These partners are directors in Anaconda Copper (and through its subsidiaries selling much war material), shipping, woolen uniforms, mechanical products necessary for war implements, chemicals, sulfur, etc.

They have a very definite tie-up with Harry Hopkins, who is supposed to know most of the Presidential secrets. Mr. Harriman and Hopkins are extremely close and Harriman was named by Hopkins to many governmental honorary positions.

Brown Bros., Harriman & Co. are also linked with the magazine Time. Some of their other connections will be shown in an exhibit.

THE RIGHTS OF SMALL NATIONS—ADDRESS BY SENATOR KING

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as the country knows, this Republic has been enriched by additions from various countries, among them Finland, Latvia, Estonia, and Lithuania. These people have established themselves in various parts of the United States, have demonstrated their devotion to democratic principles, and are patriotically discharging the duties devolving upon them as citizens of our great Republic.

On the seventh of this month large gatherings of American citizens, composed of persons who had come to America from these Baltic lands, together with their descendants, as well as other American citizens, were held in various parts of the United States for the purpose of paying tribute to the brave and heroic peoples of these four countries and to their achievements. On that day I delivered a radio address over station WOL, under the auspices of the Baltic-American Society of Washington, on the subject of the rights of small nations. I ask unanimous consent that the address may be printed in full in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE RIGHTS OF SMALL NATIONS

We meet today to pay tribute to the brave and heroic peoples of four of the so-called small nations which, during periods of tribulation and oppression, have carried high the standards of liberty and justice and made important contributions to the cause of freedom and moral and spiritual development. They are Finland, Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania, and we send words of greeting and fellowship to those living within their borders who, notwithstanding the vicissitudes through which they passed and the arbitrary rulers to which, from time to time, they have been subjected, still cherish the ideals of democracy and those principles which alone can develop and maintain justice, freedom, and an enduring civilization. During centuries of oppression the inhabitants of the countries referred to kept alive their aspirations for liberty and in the midst of storms and darkness maintained their faith in the ultimate triumph of justice and liberty—of freedom of speech and conscience. They were ever recognized as men and women of valor, undaunted courage, and sincere devotion to the ideals by which their lives were guided. Despotic rulers sought to impose upon them from time to time idealogies hostile to religion and to the moral precepts essential for the guidance of the people along the pathway of progress and civilization.

But time does not permit specific reference to the legion of brilliant and courageous men and women who kept alive the fires of liberty, even under the iron rule of oppressors.

I would be derelict, however, if I failed to state that in many countries today tributes are being paid to one of the greatest geniuses in the field of music the world has ever produced—Jan Sebelius. This is his seventy-fifth birthday, and he has established himself among all lovers of music as one of the greatest figures in the realm of music; and so today not only lovers of music but those who love freedom and who are inspired by noble thoughts and noble deeds will join in paying homage to one of the greatest composers and greatest interpreters of human emotions—Jan Sebelius.

I invite attention to the fact that the last President of the Latvian Republic was Karlis Ulmanis, who, as I recall, was at one time a professor in an important university in this Republic.

The World War, as many believe, was the result of the ambitions of a number of despotic rulers for increased authority and power over their fellow men. There developed during that great conflict a demand upon the part of oppressed peoples for liberation from political bondage and from economic and moral oppression. Following that conflict treaties were written which recognized the independence of Finland, Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. Their boundaries were delimited and they were accorded recognition as independent and sovereign nations by all governments.

Time does not permit a description of the many achievements of the patriotic and heroic people of these four nations. They set up governments, democratic in form, in which law and order prevailed and liberty and freedom became the inheritance of all.

In all lands the peoples of these four nations were recognized as among the most progressive, patriotic, and cultured peoples to be found in the world; they developed a high standard of civilization, and in the arts, in industry, in agriculture, and in all activities and movements characteristic of a dynamic, patriotic, and liberty-loving people they demonstrated their fine and heroic qualities.

I cannot refrain from referring to the fact that this Republic has been enriched by the tens of thousands of persons who left their homes in the nations referred to and who became citizens of this Republic. Estonia has given to America more than 50,000 persons; from Latvia have come to this Republic more than 140,000 persons; and Lithuania has given more than 500,000 persons. From Finland—that land of tragedy and glory—have come to the United States more than 400,000 persons.

These additions to our population have made important contributions to the material, moral, and cultural welfare and development of this Republic. They have found important places in every field of human endeavor, and have discharged with honor and fidelity the obligations resting upon them as American citizens. They and their descendants constitute a valuable addition to this Nation and strengthen the bulwarks of democracy.

One of the valuable and outstanding contributions made by them is the cooperative habit and the spirit of leadership. I might add that the Baltic and the Finnish nations, as well as their Scandinavian neighbors, have exhibited qualities that have given them preeminence during many centuries. They have been brave and courageous; they have loved liberty and have carried high the torch of civilization. The Latvians and Lithuanians find their origin in the days of the dim past when we speak of the Sanscrit peoples and language. The Finns and the Estonians have exhibited qualities of courage and ability that distinguish them among the peoples of the world. They belong to the Ural-Altaic race. I should add that none of these peoples are Slavs or Teutons.

As civilization advanced mankind abolished individual slavery, that is, a situation in which one man was the personal property of another. But mass enslavement of one nation by another still persists, as the present-day despots—Hitler, Stalin, and Mussolini—so barbarously demonstrate. The former autocratic rulers such as the czars and the kaisers kept in subjection millions of peoples. They desired to possess still wider authority and bring more people under enslavement for exploitation. They launched the World War by an attack upon small nations—Serbia, Belgium, and others—desiring the further consolidation of their power and the enlargement of their territory. However, a number of enslaved nations regained their freedom and independence. Some as a result of the Versailles Treaty and others (notably the Baltic nations) through their bravery and indomitable will. It should be added that some of the large autocratic nations suffered mutilation of their territory. The British Dominions and colonies acquired broader opportunities for home rule, and formed, with their mother country England, a commonwealth of nations.

The tendency for a time following the World War has been toward freedom and independence of subject nations, but the present attempt of European despots is to turn back the wheel of progress—back to the dark ages of the despots and robber barrons.

Woodrow Wilson, that great American, in one of his public addresses during the World War, stated:

"Small states of the world have a right to enjoy the same respect for their sovereignty and for their territorial integrity that great and powerful nations expect and insist upon. * * * Self-determination is not a mere phrase; it is an imperative principle of action which the statesmen will henceforth ignore at their peril."

It is not conceivable that Denmark and Norway, Finland, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, whose inhabitants are among the leaders of the world in thought, courage, ability, and moral and spiritual worth, will remain in slavery under the heel of despots—whether foreign or native. The day must come when the peoples of small nations will enjoy all the liberties and opportunities for development and progress which they desire, and when their achievements will give to them a position of primacy among the nations of the world.

It is true that communism and nazi-ism, with their baleful and hateful ideologies, and fascism with its paucity of moral worth, still operate against small states and continue their oppressive policies, savagely assailing those nations which resist their demands.

The despots—Hitler, Stalin, and Mussolini—claim high honor for themselves and their armies for overrunning and enslaving so many small nations. We all remember how Mussolini celebrated the conquest of Ethiopia and Albania by his legions, and what military honors he claimed for them. Stalin celebrated his victory over Finland and the Baltic States with great pomp in the Kremlin in Moscow, praising his soldiers as heroes and bestowing countless titles and privileges upon his army officers. Hitler has done even better; after each conquest he and his propaganda agents have called Germans lordly people and supermen.

After the World War, when the Baltic nations regained their freedom and independence, they began to be known the world over, in industries, international trade, at the Olympic games, in music and literature. Now, after their occupation by a million of the hungry soldiers of Stalin, they appear again to be lost. Not a news item, not a printed word comes out of these countries, save the Communistic sheets praising Stalin as a "demigod," so completely are the Baltic nations hidden in the darkness of Bolshevik oppressors.

The four nations herein referred to, after obtaining their independence following the World War, assumed their rightful place among the nations of the world. They discharged their national and international obligations and obtained the confidence and good will of all democratic and liberty-loving peoples. But the Bolshevik regime dominated by Stalin and his Communistic philosophy, made war upon each of these nations. Finland heroically defended herself against the cowardly and unprovoked assaults of her assailants. Lithuania for more than 22 years maintained her independence, but in June of this year the Bolshevik Government invaded Lithuania, and in violation of solemn treaties destroyed the Lithuanian Government and brought Lithuania and its more than 3,000,000 inhabitants under the cruel and despotic rule of the Bolshevik Government. Estonia and Latvia likewise have lost their independence, and the Bolshevik Government now imposes its iron rule upon them. The conduct of the Bolshevik Government with reference to these four nations calls for universal condemnation.

Certainly the day must come when the shackles of oppression which bind these states will be broken and their inhabitants again enjoy freedom. The Government of the United States has refused to recognize the cowardly aggressions of the Bolshevik regime, and the distinguished Assistant Secretary of State on the 25th of July this year stated:

"During these past few days the devious processes whereunder the political independence and territorial integrity of the three small Baltic republics—Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania—were to be deliberately annihilated by one of their more powerful neighbors have been rapidly drawing to their conclusion.

"From the day when the peoples of these republics first gained their independent and democratic form of government the people of the United States have watched their admirable progress in self-government with deep and sympathetic interest.

"The policy of this Government is universally known. The people of the United States are opposed to predatory activities, no matter whether they are carried on by the use of force or by the threat of force. They are likewise opposed to any form of intervention on the part of one state, however powerful, in the domestic concerns of any other sovereign state, however weak.

"These principles constitute the very foundations upon which the existing relationship between the 21 sovereign republics of the New World rests.

"The United States will continue to stand by these principles because of the conviction of the American people that unless the doctrine in which these principles are inherent once again governs the relations between nations the rule of reason, of justice, and of law—in other words, the basis of modern civilization itself—cannot be preserved."

In conclusion, may I say that the day will come when tyrants and despots will fall. Then will these four nations assume their rightful place among the free peoples of the earth.

RECESS TO THURSDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if there is nothing further to come before the Senate, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Thursday, December 26, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate December 23 (legislative day of November 19), 1940

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSIONER

Walter M. W. Splawn to be an Interstate Commerce Commissioner.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, DECEMBER 23, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COLE of Maryland.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the Light of love, unto Thee do we offer our praise and adoration. Thou who art the Bearer of the light of the world, let it shine forevermore. Today Thy holy benediction breathes sweetly and lovingly into sight amid storm and earthquake, wind and tide. O God, in triumphant faith would we sail the turbulent waters and with Thee, O Christ, climb the hills of difficulty. We humbly pray that the glory of the manger may shine forth; that our entire country may be the knight errant of the poor and that every little window may be radiant with the Christmas Star and all low rafters exalted as the angelic hosts hover near and sing their immortal song.

Behold, O Lord, how the earth doth lie in darkness and wickedness, reeling beneath the scourge of war. O Prophet of God, we urgently pray that its guise may fall and that the haggard monster may be realized as the dire enemy of man's soul. Oh, for Thy strong arm on which we may lean and a guide to throw light upon our pathway; clear our Father's face that it may be seen behind the darkest cloud. Comfort the sick and the sorrowing and bless them with Christmas cheer that all discords may be sweeter and happier in the spirit of the advent of our Lord and Saviour. May a new day of hope and cheer bring its benedictions to all the world. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, December 19, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Baldridge, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 4415. An act to amend the act entitled "An act in relation to pandering, to define and prohibit the same and to provide for the punishment thereof," approved June 25, 1910.

SWEARING IN OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

Mr. RANKIN administered the oath of office as Speaker pro tempore to Mr. COLE of Maryland.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns on Thursday next it adjourn to meet on the following Monday.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PANDERING

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4415) to amend an act entitled "An act in relation to pandering, to define and prohibit the same, and to provide for the punishment thereof," approved June 25, 1910.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I may say that this is a measure that was requested by the Attorney General and concurred in by the district attorney for the District of Columbia. After a study, and a review of certain cases that have arisen in the courts, they believe that our present pandering law, which was approved June 25, 1910, does not adequately cope with commercialized vice as it seems to exist in the District of Columbia at the present time. The measure came before the Senate on Thursday last and was passed by that body unanimously.

The bill has been before the House Committee on the District of Columbia, and all members—the minority as well as the majority—have been polled and are in unanimous agreement that the legislation should be passed at this time. The bill has the support of the Attorney General, the district attorney for the District of Columbia, the Commissioners for the District of Columbia, and the District committees of both the Senate and the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first section of the act entitled "An act in relation to pandering, to define and prohibit the same and to provide for the punishment thereof," approved June 25, 1910, is amended to read as follows:

"That any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall place or cause, induce, procure, or compel the placing of any female in the charge or custody of any other person, or in a house of prostitution, with intent that she shall engage in prostitution, or who shall compel, induce, entice, or procure or attempt to compel, induce, entice, or procure any female to reside with any other person for immoral purposes or for the purpose of prostitution, or who shall compel, induce, entice, or procure or attempt to compel, induce, entice, or procure any such female to reside or continue to reside in a house of prostitution, or compel, induce, entice, or procure or attempt to compel, induce, entice, or procure her to engage in prostitution, or who takes or detains a female against her will, with intent to compel her by force, threats, menace, or duress to marry him or to marry any other person; or any parent, guardian, or other person having legal custody of the person of a female, who consents to her taking or detention by any person, for the purpose of prostitution or sexual intercourse, shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and by a fine of not more than $1,000."

SEC. 2. Section 2 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. Any person who, within the District of Columbia, by threats or duress, detains any female against her will, for the purpose of prostitution or sexual intercourse, or any person who shall compel any female, against her will, to reside with him or with any other person for the purposes of prostitution or sexual intercourse, shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and a fine of not more than $1,000."

SEC. 3. Section 3 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of arranging for or causing any female to have sexual intercourse with any other person or to engage in prostitution, debauchery, or any other immoral act, shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and a fine of not more than $1,000."

SEC. 4. Such act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"SEC. 6. Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall pay or receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of the procuring for, or placing in, a house of prostitution, for purposes of sexual intercourse, prostitution, debauchery, or other immoral act, any female, shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and by a fine of not more than $1,000.

"SEC. 7. Any person who, within the District of Columbia, shall receive any money or other valuable thing for or on account of procuring and placing in the charge or custody of another person for sexual intercourse, prostitution, debauchery, or other immoral purposes any female shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and by a fine of not more than $1,000.

"SEC. 8. Any person who, within the District of Columbia, knowingly, shall accept, receive, levy, or appropriate any money or other valuable thing, without consideration other than the furnishing of a place for prostitution or the servicing of a place for prostitution, from the proceeds or earnings of any female engaged in prostitution shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 5 years and by a fine of not more than $1,000."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by Georoge D. Riley, U. S. and Us.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL-DEFENSE PRODUCTION

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, actually, just what is our state of national defense? I have introduced a number of privileged resolutions to ascertain those facts, but to no avail. Today it is generally admitted by the administration, and by able Mr. Knudsen, and others in charge of national defense that there has been a woeful failure and that we are not prepared, that our defense is not going forward. It seems to me, and I believe my colleagues will agree with me, that it is not efficient or intelligent, especially when speed is of the essence, to build new plants that would take a year or longer to build and equip, and where labor would have to be trained, when we have in my own locality and in the districts of others of our colleagues vacant plants, and some plants already in operation seeking orders, with machines and highly trained labor available. Many times I have brought these facts to the attention of those in charge of national defense. I earnestly hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Members of the House will join with me when I again beg the Defense Commission to start these plants in operation in order that our defense measures may not be just on paper, but that we may actually have production immediately. America must wake up. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech delivered by Colonel Fleming, of the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech delivered by Colonel Maxwell last Thursday.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER] be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] may be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the business on today's calendar has been completed I may be permitted to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit four unanimous-consent requests: First, to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from Mr. Franklin J. Anderson, of the Brooklyn Eagle.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Second, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter from myself to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Third, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by Mr. Fred L. Thurston, executive secretary of the California Teachers' Association.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Fourth, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the other special orders for today I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a telegram from Irving Mumford, State commander of the American Legion in South Dakota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including some remarks by George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, and Winston Churchill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 6 minutes after other business has been disposed of today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and to include therein certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRADLEY of Michigan, Mr. PLUMLEY, Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan, and Mr. MICHENER asked and were given permission to revise and extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

NATIONAL-DEFENSE PRODUCTION

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to reply to the lady from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] with reference to our national-defense program.

Of course, we are going forward as rapidly as possible, but I think it would be a sad mistake to concentrate all these defense industries into New England or into any other congested section of the country. That is one of the troubles England is having today. Her war industries are concentrated into a few large cities which make the convenient targets for bombing raids. If we are going to prepare our country and keep her prepared to defend herself, these industries ought to be decentralized in order not only to make them safer from attack but in order to protect every section of the country as we go. [Applause.]

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan for a question.

Mr. MICHENER. The question is this, Does the gentleman not think that the question of national defense should be left to the National Defense Board and that the Members of Congress from all sections of the country should not be endeavoring to prevail upon the members of the Board or urging them to establish the defense units in the various sections?

Mr. RANKIN. No; I do not think Congress ought to abdicate at all. I think Members of Congress ought to keep in mind the fact that we represent all the American people and the whole of the American Republic. I think every Member of this Congress is more familiar with his section of the country than is someone from some other section who may be appointed on a board and who has never been within a thousand miles of where that Member lives. [Applause.]

Of course, at the present time a large percentage of these plants are situated in the States of Michigan and Massachusetts, where large numbers of men are employed and large pay rolls are maintained. But there is absolutely no reason on earth for further concentrating these defense industries in those States to the exclusion of the rest of the country.

These activities should be decentralized as far as possible to maintain the highest degree of efficiency and effectiveness.

As President Roosevelt pointed out some time ago, the ideal location for industries of this kind is between the Allegheny and the Rocky Mountains, where they will be protected from the sea, and where there is an abundance of raw materials, adequate transportation facilities, an ample supply of labor, and unlimited amounts of cheap electric energy.

Then, too, the South and West must be protected as well as the North Central and the New England States. Remember that it is absolutely essential to protect the Gulf States against attacks from air bases in the Caribbean, or from airplane carriers in the Caribbean, the Gulf of Mexico, or the South Atlantic Ocean, or from land bases in Central and South America.

Remember also that it is just as necessary to be ready to defend the Western States, and especially the Pacific Coast States, as it is to protect the Atlantic seaboard or any other section of the country.

These plants can be scattered throughout the South and West in such a way as to save the Government hundreds of millions of dollars in the transportation of raw materials alone.

Besides, economic conditions in the agricultural States are such as to render it necessary that they be given their pro rata share of these defense industries wherever that can be done without detriment to the Federal Government or without impairing or slowing down the defense program. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and to include therein certain tables which I have prepared.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. LELAND M. FORD] is recognized for 5 minutes.

NATIONAL DEFENSE AND THE C. I. O

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, in following the news items, I have noted that Mr. Philip Murray, of the C. I. O., has a long list of ideas and suggestions as to how the national-defense program may be carried out. In addition to this, I note he has made the statement that the C. I. O. has been and will be thoroughly cooperative with the Government in carrying forward the program of national defense.

There is no question but that this matter of cooperation on the part of the C. I. O. would be very helpful in carrying forward the national-defense program if it were sincerely put into effect, and if this country could count upon it. If this can actually, truly, and faithfully be put into effect, and if the first consideration in the policy of the C. I. O. could be adopted, namely, the welfare and safety of this Nation above all else, then it appears that Mr. Murray could use his influence to submerge the lust for power of the C. I. O. to control N. L. R. B., its lust for power to control the national-defense program, and bury whatever personal ambitions he and other leaders of the C. I. O. may have, for the sake of the Nation. If he does not submerge any such ideas and bury these ambitions, in the long run the C. I. O. and all other labor is going to be the greatest loser, because, under communism, nazi-ism, or fascism, all labor would be reduced to serfdom. The great masses of the people of the United States have been hoping that Mr. Murray and all these leaders in C. I. O. could see this. The words of Mr. Murray sound very nice, but the actions of certain of these C. I. O. leaders in the past do not check out with any such words.

It is my opinion that confidence in the C. I. O. has been lost, by the great mass of the people in this country, due to their past actions. Our people are not going to give that confidence back on account of a few words that may be spoken or written, because the result, or the outcome, is going to have too serious an effect upon the Nation. I, like many millions of our people, have come to this conclusion on account of certain things that have happened and which Mr. Murray and his leaders cannot deny, and they will have to answer this question, Do Mr. Murray and his other leaders think that they have contributed toward the advancement of the national-defense program by actually calling and threatening strikes in the forest lumber camps, in the sawmills, in the transportation divisions, in the shipping, in the shipbuilding, in automobiles, in the airplane works, in the steel industry, in the aluminum, and many other industries? If they do think so, it is time Mr. Murray realized, and he is now being told, that millions of the people in this country do not think so, but, on the contrary, they think that Mr. Murray and his leaders' statements are lip service only; that they are not sincere in their stated desire for advancement of this national-defense program. These same people feel, and it is due to past actions on the part of the C. I. O. and their leaders, that their real motive is to further entrench themselves in the power to control N. L. R. B., national defense, industry, and finally the Government itself.

Inasmuch as that is the situation, these millions of people have lost confidence in the C. I. O. and its leadership, and these same leaders of the C. I. O. should step out of this picture and not try to continue to dominate it. If they are sincere, they will recede from this dominating position and get back to work and start to produce, quit calling strikes, quit threatening strikes, and quit trying to put themselves into a dominating position in the crisis we are now in. It is time that the C. I. O. leadership began to realize that they cannot take advantage of a crisis such as this to exact from the United States Government, through its defense program, tremendous amounts of money that will run the cost up so high that the Government will not be able to get the numbers of units that are called for in their program. It is time they realize that industry has had to submit to excess-profits taxes and that industry has willingly accepted what may be termed a "limited profit" in this program.

The people of this country are not going to see the C. I. O. labor leaders dictate the policy of the country. The C. I. O. are in the minority, and no one knows better than they, that they are in the minority, and in this country it was never contemplated that the minority should rule. They should begin to realize that this country should be run for the benefit of the great majority.

If the C. I. O. leadership actually wanted to make a real contribution, the best way they could do this would be to attend to their own business, namely, to take care of the unscrupulous, racketeering labor leaders within their own ranks; to recede from their position of trying to dictate the national policy; to cease to try dictating to which concerns orders for national defense are to be given; and last, but most necessary of all, to see that their men deliver a real day's work or value received for that for which they are now being paid.

On every hand we hear of the sacrifice that every individual, whether he is in industry or labor or private life, should make. It is high time that Mr. Hillman, Mr. Murray, and all of these other leaders recognize that they have some sacrifices that they must make and that this country is not going to stand for the idea that every individual in the country will make sacrifices and that these C. I. O. labor leaders shall be allowed to continue to feather their own nests.

Mr. Murray should also realize that the real Americans in this country, not only now but long have resented the dictates of Europeans and other foreign-born coming into this country and bringing with them the ideals of Europe and substituting them for the ideals of America. If Mr. Hillman, Mr. Murray, and the other labor leaders do not realize this, they may be sure that the American people are going to finally tell them that the people who came to the United States came here in order to get away from and avoid European principles and adopted what are known as American principles, and if these European and foreign-born leaders do not like the American principles, they must realize that nobody in this country sent for them, and the best suggestion is that if they do not like our principles and like those of Europe and other foreign countries better, the best thing that they can do is to go back to Europe or other foreign countries before this Nation becomes so aroused it will forcefully send them back or put them in places where they can no longer destroy American ideals. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

DIES COMMITTEE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, in the course of the work of the Committee on un-American Activities, certain testimony was taken and some evidence presented which indicated the strong possibility that acts of sabotage might have been committed in certain plants in the country. This evidence was submitted to the Department of Justice and after they had had opportunity to study it, the Attorney General advised that, as a matter of fact, if an act of sabotage were committed in an American plant, but if it were directed against an article such as an airplane which had been ordered by some other government besides the American Government, the Department of Justice did not have jurisdiction; that it was a matter for State law-enforcing agencies to take care of.

As a result of this advice I sought the best help I could get and have today introduced a bill, the intent and purpose of which is, briefly, the following: To give to the Federal Bureau of Investigation and Department of Justice the same jurisdiction in dealing with acts of sabotage, if committed against an article intended for exportation for the use of any government of a foreign country with which the United States is at peace, as it would have if that article were intended for use by the United States Government.

This bill has been drafted with the view of not changing any of the penalties existing in present law for like offenses and with a view to making only that one change.

Some of the drafts of this proposed bill that have been worked on would, in my judgment, have broadened too much and to too great an extent, the scope of action of the Federal Department of Justice, for they might have, in fact, given it the responsibility of investigating any matter where damage had occurred to any article intended for export to any person. I do not think that the Department would want that. I am convinced they would not, and neither do I want to see us make the mistake of setting up a national police force here. I do not think they are equipped to take care of it, and it is not the point we are trying to reach.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Assuming that the President's leasing and mortgaging plans goes through, is it not true that, if that were the situation, then the present law would be ample, because the present law takes care of any article which is to be used in our national defense? Under the leasing program, the presumption is that the Government is to do all of the ordering, and after the Government has secured this material it is to allocate it as the President may see fit to the several nations throughout the world.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I will say to the gentleman, first, that he is a member of the Judiciary Committee, and that I certainly have no intention of taking any action on a matter as important and vital as this, trying to get it passed, until after the Judiciary Committee has had occasion to consider it very, very fully; that it is much too important for me to want any other course to be followed than that. I was anxious, because of what I have been trying to do in order to contribute what I can to the coordination of these efforts between the various agencies working in this general field, to follow up as rapidly as I might the suggestion of the Attorney General. That is the reason why I was at some concern about introducing the bill as quickly as I could. But I want the bill to be considered, if possible, with full hearings by the Judiciary Committee. Certainly, for example, I would want representatives of labor to be heard concerning it.

Secondly, I would say that my principal interest in this matter is the following: It appears to me that if an airplane company, for example, is manufacturing planes for both the United States and some other nation, it is to our concern to see that nothing goes wrong in that plant at all. It seems to me to be rather a hair-line distinction to say that if an act is committed against plane A we do not have jurisdiction for the Federal department and if it is committed against plane B that we do have jurisdiction.

In further and more specific answer to the gentleman I would say that no matter what happens to this proposal of the President, certain foreign governments do have very substantial orders already placed.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I wonder if in preparation of that bill the gentleman took into consideration the principles laid down in a bill which I introduced about 2 weeks ago for the same purpose. That bill meets the question by making sabotage unlawful with respect to all goods being manufactured which come within the President's proclamation under the Neutrality Act defining munitions. I think the gentleman will find that that covers it pretty well, and that provision was drafted carefully.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Would that include goods on order from a foreign government?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes; if they are defined by the President in that proclamation. If you will look at that proclamation you will find it covered pretty much everything that would be required for export purposes in connection with the war.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I will say to the gentleman that it does not matter to me how this is gotten at. I do feel that it is very important to make plain in that legislation that this has to be a willful act of sabotage. In other words, I am deeply concerned that it should not be used as a means of imposing upon labor the possibility of unfair decisions which would put an accidental occurrence in the course of a labor dispute, for example, in the category of sabotage when it does not belong there at all.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes; I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I just wanted to invite the gentleman's attention to that approach to the problem. I am in full sympathy with what the gentleman is seeking to do.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman attempt to define slowing down or a strike of any character as sabotage?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. No; because if the gentleman attempts to do that he would also have in fairness to define willful refusal on the part of a corporation to speedily take up a Government order as sabotage, and I am pretty sure the gentleman does not know how you can frame a piece of legislation to cover those things. I am inclined to think that they are problems that have to be worked out in the way the American Nation has always worked them out—by creation of a public opinion in which those things do not happen. In fact, that is the democratic approach to it.

Now, I want to proceed briefly with some matters that seem to be related.

I take it that the Members of the House, as well as other earnest Americans, are concerned that acts of sabotage do not take place. I think that the law on those matters and any other matter that is connected with disloyalty has got to be as specifically and carefully drawn as we can make it. I think that all of us are conscious of the fact that democracy in this tragic world is in a position where its very survival may well depend upon how the American people and their Government conduct themselves in the days that lie immediately ahead of us. Under those circumstances there is nothing that we should not attempt to do to encourage an orderly and vigorous program of arming for defense our Nation to the very best of our ability.

We have pursued certain policies with regard to our foreign affairs—policies of aid to certain democratic nations from which obviously we cannot turn back, and from which I take it we are not going to turn back, no matter what mean things may be said about us. But my main concern with this particular matter is to protect against any possibility of damage the American defense program itself.

Now I have introduced another bill. I did it not very long ago, and I mention it at this time only by way of illustration.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I merely want to illustrate the point of this matter, not to make an argument for this bill, because in the case of the second bill I am not sure that it is properly drawn; in fact, I introduced the bill by request.

What the bill does, very briefly, is, having granted $100,000 complete exemption, it states that deductions from gross income of corporations of over $100,000 spent for advertising shall not be allowed in computing income taxes. Now, I have received a lot of criticism because of this bill. In spite of the fact that we allow no deductions for wages paid or materials bought or anything of that sort, I seem to have committed some unpardonable crime by suggesting that there ought to be a limit to deductions for advertising expense. Oh, what a terrible idea to suggest.

I merely want to say this much about it: That inevitably the Congress is going to have to increase the tax rates. We know that the American people want the Congress to show them just exactly what the price is going to be of this program for defense and other things that they feel we have got to have. If we are going to do that, there ought not to be one single solitary loophole in our tax laws or any place where the incidence of the tax laws is going to fall with greater weight on one group of businesses than on another, or give to a great corporation able to spend huge sums on national advertising a distinct advantage over the small corporation that cannot possibly afford it. And so it seems to me that while people are expressing very great interest in legislation having to do with sabotage and matters of that kind we have also got to realize that it is equally important that people should be made to realize their responsibility of making their fair and just contribution to the national efforts.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN. The statement has been made that some corporations, when their surplus reaches a certain point, knowing that the greater part will necessarily be paid to the Government as a result of the tax laws, have gone out and increased the amount they spend for advertising with a view to using that money for advertising purposes rather than paying it to the Government. This, in my opinion, is unfair and should be looked into by the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is exactly the purpose of the bill, and that has even happened where the result of the advertising was not expected necessarily to increase their business. In its issue of November 18 Time magazine called attention to this matter. But my point is, and the only reason I introduced the bill was, to bring that matter before the attention of the people in order that it might properly be considered. I have no notion that my bill will be passed, but I do think it is important for this matter to be considered, and in the same light and with the same general patriotic viewpoint that we consider these other things. One more thought and I am through.

The President a short time ago suggested that in the case of dealing with Great Britain we should bring about a method of dealing on the basis that we would furnish aid to Great Britain and that it might be paid back in the same kind of things. Would it not be a great thing if the American farmer, for example, could, when he borrowed money equivalent to a thousand bushels of wheat or 500 boxes of oranges, be perfectly certain that he could pay back his debt in the same number of dollars equivalent exactly to a thousand bushels of wheat or 500 boxes of oranges? [Applause.] I look forward to the time, Mr. Speaker, when we may have a program in the monetary field which will give us that kind of dollar.

And I want to say this one thing further: That in my judgment the democracies of the world, and particularly the American democracy, holds within its own power the future of democracy in our country and maybe in the world. For the issue, after all, sums itself up as a struggle between two organizing principles of human life and government for the allegiance of peoples throughout the world. I believe that the future success of the democratic principle is going to depend in large measure on whether or not we give indication day by day and month by month that people who embrace the democratic system can look forward to a day and future when living will be more equal, when the burdens will be more fairly imposed, when all youth will have a greater opportunity to look forward to better days, and when as a matter of fact that essential balance between the power of a great nation to produce and its power to consume will be brought about by the application of wisdom and courage to the domestic problems of our Nation by responsible people like yourself and myself.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Yes; because I am through.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Can the gentleman tell us whether or not he is doing anything so that the farmer can get 25 cents, for example, for his products?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Will the gentleman pardon me a minute? I promised to yield to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman speaks about subjects that are partially related to the bill under consideration. He speaks about the health of this country and its individuals to Great Britain. Would he venture an opinion as to the change of heart of Henry Ford when a few weeks ago he refused to make airplane engines that would go to Great Britain, and now he says, "Give them the money; do not lend it to them"?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I think I can understand the point of view of people who feel that to give this help would be preferable to lending it. I think I can understand why they might feel that might be less dangerous from the standpoint of future difficulties for the United States. Many people are seeing things differently from what they did awhile ago.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman refers to Henry Ford. Is it not possible that Henry Ford was thinking of America first when he was talking about making materials or airplane engines for America and not for Great Britain?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I may say to the gentleman that his colleague from West Virginia was the one who introduced Mr. Ford into this picture. My remarks were on another subject.

Mr. HOFFMAN. This is the question I wanted to ask you awhile ago. What remedy does the gentleman have in mind which would give the farmer say 25 cents an hour for his work while he is forced to pay $1 or $1.10 an hour for the common labor that goes into the things he must purchase?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I understand the gentleman's question very well, if he wants me to answer it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I certainly do or I would not have asked it.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I would need a half hour.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I am willing that the gentleman have a half hour up in the office.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I may say that agriculture is a competitive industry. Most of the things that the farmer buys comes from monopoly industries where the price is determined by the seller. The farmer by and large cannot determine his prices.

Now, I have not fully answered the gentleman, although I shall be glad to answer the gentleman at some other time when I have the time to do a job. I have a lot of ideas on the subject.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous special order, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized for 6 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, along the line the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] was speaking, may I say that I have seen a copy of his bill printed in the press and I also read a copy over on the desk; but his bill is limited to interference with exportation only. He has not said anything about production. How did that happen?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is involved. I may say to the gentleman that this bill has been drawn as nearly as possible to conform with the law with regard to sabotage against our own production and certainly sabotage of production is included under the terms of the bill.

Mr. HOFFMAN. All right. But I do not think it is. I ask the Members who are present to read the bill and see whether they can find one single word in it that prevents interference with production or prevents interference with anything except exportation. To my mind it is just as important that we have the opportunity to produce for national defense as it is that we have opportunity to produce for exportation.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. The Congress has already passed an act having to do with the sabotage of American defense materials. You do not need a bill for that purpose. It is already within the purview of the Department of Justice.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If we have a bill which prevents interference with production, all production, that would cover it.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. But it does not cover all production.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I notice the gentleman's bill only goes to exportation.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I mean the present law does not cover all production. My bill would cover it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The Attorney General told us that these strikes were being instigated by Communists but that there was no law on the books to reach them. I do not think the bill offered by the gentleman even deals with production—it deals with exportation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to correct a false impression that has gone out in Michigan through some newspapers which published under a Washington date line dispatches stating that a Member from Michigan, from the Fourth Congressional District, prevented the adjournment of Congress. This seemed to me to be a strange thing, because we have 435 Members of Congress, and I could not understand how, under a representative republican form of government, one person out of 435 could prevent an adjournment. So I got out both rule books that we have here and I spent quite a little time looking through them. The best I could find was that any time a majority of Congress wanted to adjourn it might do so, and that even a minority could adjourn any time it had the votes on the floor to do so. Of course, I learned that if we wanted to adjourn finally it had to be by a concurrent resolution of both the House and Senate. That took me back to the thought that it should not be the part of any one Member to usurp the functions of the Congress and prevent it from adjourning when it wanted to, or whenever a majority of the minority wanted to do so, or, I mean, a majority of those present, even though it be less than a quorum.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Not just now, because this is very important.

So I looked in another book, and I learned that the Democrats had almost a two-thirds majority in the Senate and had almost a hundred majority in the House. I reached the conclusion, after a great deal of study, that the majority party, if they really wanted to adjourn, could do so at any time finally, or just from day to day.

Then I wondered, but not very long, because I knew that the majority party had the utmost confidence in their President—someone suggested that maybe they did not have confidence in him and did not want to go away and leave him alone here in Washington without their supervision, but I recalled that it was a "rubber stamp" Congress and had been so for 6 or 7 years, and that they did just the things he wanted to, so the conclusion came that it must be that he really wanted Congress to stay here, because if he did not, the majority would have adjourned.

Then the dispatch, I noticed, carried the statement that the Speaker suggested that just one Republican had kept this House from adjourning, and that after doing that he had, so to speak, "run out" on the House. Though the dispatch referred to me—and I have objected to adjournments—I never ran away from anything; in fact, have attended every session of the House for months and since the middle of November have spoken on the floor almost every day in favor of defense legislation.

I want always, if I can, as difficult as it may seem to some of you, to be helpful to the majority party, not that they need any assistance about any of these things—not at all—and undoubtedly it is presumptuous on my part even to suggest anything as to what they can do or might do if they so desired. Nevertheless, having that desire to be helpful, I have prepared a concurrent resolution against which I will vote if a vote be had. I send it to the Clerk's desk, so if the majority party wants to adjourn here in the House and over in the Senate they can do so in spite of what any Republican says or does. I ask the Clerk to read the resolution.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOFFMAN. A previous resolution is out, if the Speaker please.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman did not ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; I asked for its consideration. I ask that it be read, anyway. If you want to take time to think it over, it is all right with me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will read the resolution.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 95

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall adjourn on Tuesday, the 24th day of December 1940, and that when they adjourn on said day they stand adjourned sine die.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the immediate consideration of the resolution.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by the Honorable JOSHUA L. JOHNS.

The SPEAKER pre tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks I made earlier and to include in my remarks I am about to make an article from the Washington Post of yesterday entitled "Machine-Tool Bottleneck Is Acute Problem," by Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner, also an article appearing in the Boston Traveler which was sent to me recently, together with an article appearing in the Boston Traveler on January 16, 1929.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for the inclusion in my remarks of the article appearing in the Boston Traveler in 1929, which speaks of an educational-order bill which I introduced first in 1926 and another one which I introduced in 1929. The article is headed "Victory in Sight for War Measure of Mrs. ROGERS." It ought to have been headed "Victory in Sight for National-Defense Measure of Mrs. ROGERS."

Unfortunately, that measure did not pass the House and it was a good many years before educational orders were appropriated for in order that this country might have the necessary machine tools and the skilled workers to bring about complete production in case of an emergency.

Mr. Speaker, I do not need to remind the House that this is the only large country in the world today that can observe the beautiful day of Christmas, the birth of Christ, with any degree of happiness or with any demonstration of beautiful lights and fine celebrations. But in the minds and hearts of every one of us in the United States there will be a dread that this country may not be adequately prepared. I earnestly pray for speed, more speed, and still more speed in our national defense.

Mr. Speaker, I wish you and everyone here a very merry Christmas and all that it means. [Applause.]

The article from the Boston Traveler of March 19, 1929, and the article from Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner from the Washington Post of December 22, 1940, follow:

[From the Boston Traveler of January 16, 1929]

VICTORY IN SIGHT FOR WAR MEASURE OF MRS. ROGERS—FAVORABLE CONGRESSIONAL ACTION PREDICTED ON BILL KNOWN AS EDUCATIONAL ORDERS BY THE WAR DEPARTMENT

WASHINGTON, January 16, 1929.—Favorable action by Congress now seems likely on the bill which has been under intensive study by the House Military Affairs Committee, for which Congresswoman EDITH N. ROGERS of Massachusetts has been persistently fighting for the last 3 years, known as educational orders by the War Department, which is urged by the War Department as an important national-defense measure and which would be a boon to many New England industrial plants.

HAS BIG BACKING

During the hearings which have just been conducted by the House Military Affairs Committee, Mrs. ROGERS' proposal, first introduced in 1926, has been supported by representatives of the largest manufacturing associations and establishments in the country and by the National Chamber of Commerce.

So impressed has the House committee become, following the testimony of War Department experts, and the assurance that the Budget Bureau does not find the plan in conflict with the financial program of the President, that Mrs. ROGERS' original proposition has been adopted as a committee measure and is fathered by Chairman Morin, which assures its prompt passage as soon as it is brought before the House for action.

AMENDS DEFENSE ACT

This is an amendment to the National Defense Act authorizing the Secretary of War to place educational orders for equipment, munitions, and accessories needed in the military service with commercial concerns to the degree that is considered by him as being necessary to familiarize commercial factories with the manufacture of munitions and to advance the industrial war plans of the War Department. In placing these educational orders the competitive bids which, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, best secure these results may be accepted, and he is to make statement of his action under this provision in his annual report.

It has been emphasized at the hearings that in time of war the arsenals manufacture but a very small fraction of the supplies and munitions that are needed. In wartime the Government has to draw upon industry and to draw upon all the industrial establishments throughout the country. In order that these industrial plants may know how to manufacture for the Government urgent need at that time, may develop skilled operatives, and have installed requisite machinery, these "educational orders" during peacetime are recommended by the War Department.

TWO-YEAR PROGRAM

Congresswoman ROGERS has brought to the attention of the House committee that other countries are doing a great deal along this line.

In consequence the committee is now considering a 2-year program.

Mrs. ROGERS has also emphasized that this is not a draft measure. The industrial plants are not to be drafted. She has been studying the problem closely for 12 years, since in 1917 she saw the spectacle of unpreparedness, when she found out in France that we did not have a single airplane in 1917 and did not use any of our airplanes during the war.

What made her introduce this bill in the beginning was that the United States Cartridge Shop was taken away from Lowell, and in going over the facts she learned that the War Department very much needed the United States Cartridge Shop, and that over 700 splendidly trained workmen were thrown out of employment. The location of the plant in Lowell was excellent, having the very desirable advantage of being inland.

MUST HAVE AMMUNITION

Congresswoman ROGERS reminded the committee that "a fighting army expends ammunition each day of warfare. The supply must come from factories or from reserve stocks. This ammunition is not commercial and the factories are not regular peacetime producers. During the time their production is being built up, reserve stocks must be available to be drawn upon. The longer it takes to build up the necessary production the greater the initial reserve must be. The alternative of a slackened rate of fire means a greatly increased death rate and possible defeat. The British Army experienced the former in averting defeat in Flanders while waiting for high explosive shell production and barely avoided defeat even with the enormous loss of men accepted."

POINTS STRESSED

In summarizing the War Department's interest, Congresswoman ROGERS presented to the House committee a statement that showed the passage of her bill is desired to further industrial preparedness for war, with the following points stressed:

1. Modern war is a war of machines.
2. Modern war requires these machines in numbers heretofore undreamed of.
3. The capacity of Government arsenals for the manufacture of these machines is small compared with the volume required.
4. The industry of the country must make up the deficiency.
5. Modern industry is not familiar in time of peace with munitions manufacture.
6. Without this familiarity valuable time is lost when emergency arises.
7. Much of the valuable time can be saved by placing educational orders for munitions with commercial concerns.
8. The placing of these educational orders will unquestionably add to national preparedness.
9. The slight increased cost is cheap national insurance.
10. The placing of these educational orders is not possible under existing law.

SUGGESTED BY JOHN W. WEEKS

Congresswoman ROGERS has also brought to the committee's attention that the late Secretary of War John W. Weeks, of Massachusetts, back in December 1922, recommended to Congress such a procedure, saying the distribution of these educational orders should be such as to give some experience to as many different plants as conditions permit. At that time he advocated an appropriation of $3,000,000 to start this scheme.

MACHINE-TOOL BOTTLENECK IS ACUTE PROBLEM

(By Joseph Alsop and Robert Kintner)

As everyone knows, a shortage of machine tools is the primary bottleneck in the defense program. The problem is so acute that last week Defense Commissioner William S. Knudsen sent a circular letter to the Nation's machine-tool manufacturers, pleading with them to redouble their efforts to expedite deliveries and expand production. Unfortunately, few competent authorities hope the machine-tool bottleneck can be reamed out by simple patriotic enthusiasm. The real difficulty arises not from lack of enthusiasm but from lack of foresighted planning. Until that kind of planning is attempted—and it probably cannot be attempted until the present defense set-up is reorganized—improvements in machine-tool output seem likely to be superficial.

The story of the machine-tool bottleneck is fairly simple. The defense program called for a vast expansion of industrial production. The basic problem was not placing orders for finished goods but obtaining facilities to make the finished goods. Of these facilities, machine tools were both the most important and the most difficult to prepare speedily in large quantity. Yet when the defense program was initiated last spring, neither the Defense Commission nor the Army and Navy procurement divisions squarely tackled the machine-tool aspect of their basic problem.

Such, at least, is the opinion of men who know the story from sad experience. These men say there was a threefold failure. First, although the machine-tool industry's capacity was investigated, no comprehensive plan was prepared to increase machine-tool output as rapidly as possible in all plants. Second, no adequate steps were taken to insure the most efficient use of such machine-tool capacity as there was. Instead of allocating machine-tool orders to get the first tools for the most needed weapons, practically every item in the defense program was given an A–1 machine-tool priority rating. And third, no serious effort was made to mobilize all usable existing machine tools for defense purposes. A census of machine-tool resources had been attempted by the Army sometime previously, but when it was found to be highly inaccurate no new census was attempted.

In truth, the problem of obtaining facilities for making finished goods was slighted in favor of the problem of placing orders for the finished goods. Contracts were let to scores and hundreds of manufacturers for scores and hundreds of articles, ranging from Army packs to long-range bombers. The manufacturers rushed to the machine-tool makers, clamoring for the tools they required to carry out their contracts. The machine-tool makers cheerfully booked orders until they could book no more.

Unhappily, the machine-tool makers had been bitten once before, in the first World War, when their business was almost ruined by abnormal expansion. They did not imitate their English brethren, who flatly refused to increase their output in any way until after the Munich crisis. But some tried to handle the rush of business by running three shifts instead of building new plants. Many more agreed to build new plants, but did so very cautiously, trying to avoid any capital investments the new business would not amortize. And thus the total expansion of capacity in the machine-tool industry is even now estimated at not much above 50 percent, and the most optimistic prophets do not promise that capacity will double until spring.

Clearly the result would have been much better if expansion of the machine-tool industry had been directly financed by an appropriate agency—say a machine-tool board of a properly authorized defense commission. Equally clearly, the need for expansion would have been infinitely less acute if an appropriate agency had also attempted to fit all existing machine-tool resources into the defense program.

Not long ago, in this space, a story was told of a small midwestern manufacturer whose plant contained 150 excellent machine tools, yet who could not obtain aircraft subcontracts. It was stated that competent authorities in the Defense Commission believed there were enough similar small plants to avoid the machine-tool bottleneck almost completely. This belief has recently been confirmed by a remarkable survey of the machine-tool resources of the Kansas City area, made by enterprising local businessmen.

Some progress is being made, to be sure, in dealing with the machine-tool problem. An attempt is in progress to convert the motor industry's machine tools for manufacture of aircraft parts, and civilian industries are at least not being permitted to add their orders for new tools to the defense orders now in the machine tool makers' hands. Yet here again, as elsewhere in the defense program, coordination and planning are the fundamental needs.

Lord Beaverbrook doubled British aircraft output in 3 months, chiefly because he ordered the air manufacturers to subcontract all existing, unused tool capacity, such as that mentioned above. His feat can be repeated here. Meanwhile, expansion of the machine tool makers' plants can also be planned, as they themselves say it needs to be. Unfortunately, these things cannot be done if authority and responsibility are not fixed.

[Here the gavel fell.]

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the follcwing titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker pro tempore:

H. R. 8665. An act to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Lou Davis.

H. R. 10098. An act to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce', approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) under its previous order the House adjourned until Thursday, December 26, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

2079. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of contracts awarded under provisions of the act of March 5, 1940; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2080. A letter from the Acting Postmaster General, transmitting draft of a proposed bill to authorize mailing of small firearms to officers and employees of enforcement agencies of the United States; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

2081. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting laws enacted by the Municipal Councils of St. Thomas and St. John, V. I.; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

2082. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting laws enacted by the Municipal Council of St. Croix, V. I.; to the Committee on Insular Affairs.

2083. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of appropriations of the preceding fiscal year (1940) for the War Department; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. VOORHIS of California:

H. R. 10736. A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 15, 1917; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOFFMAN:

H. Con. Res. 95. Concurrent resolution to adjourn sine die; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII,

9417. Mr. RAMSPECK presented a memorial of the Industrial Insurers' Conference, Atlanta, Ga., calling attention to the serious problems facing the country, and revowing their allegiance to the United States and the principles for which it stands; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, November 19, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Duncan Fraser, assistant rector, Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who has given us Thy only begotten Son to take our nature upon Him, and makest us glad with the yearly remembrance of His birth: Grant us grace, we beseech Thee that we, being made Thy children by adoption and grace, may be filled with the Holy Spirit to guide our lives by His most excellent example; that all hatred and malice, all pride, and uncharitableness may be done away; that in Thy light our Nation and every nation may see light, until sorrow and sighing shall pass away in the joy of Thy everlasting peace. Through Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Monday, December 23, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States submitting a nomination was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 4415) to amend the act entitled "An act in relation to pandering, to define and prohibit the same, and to provide for the punishment thereof," approved June 25, 1910.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 8665. An act to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Lou Davis; and

H. R. 10098. An act to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920.

CREDENTIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the credentials of JOSEPH F. GUFFEY, duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Pennsylvania a Senator for that State for the term beginning January 3, 1941, which were read and ordered to be filed.

He also laid before the Senate the credentials of HUGH A. BUTLER, duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Nebraska a Senator for that State for the term beginning January 3, 1941, which were read and ordered to be filed.

AWARDS OF QUANTITY CONTRACTS FOR THE ARMY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate two letters from the Secretary of War, reporting, pursuant to law, relative to divisions of awards of certain quantity contracts for aircraft, aircraft parts, and accessories thereof entered into with more than one bidder under authority of law, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a resolution of Strawberry Mansion Post, Jewish-American War Veterans, of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the prompt extension of all possible aid to Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Rev. F. M. Brunton, rector of Christ Episcopal Church, Bradenton, Fla., praying for the prompt extension of all possible aid to Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the crew of the steamship Reuben Tipton, protesting against the enactment of the so-called Smith bill, proposing to outlaw strikes in national-defense industries, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

LEGISLATIVE RECOMMENDATIONS OF NATIONAL GRANGE

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the legislative recommendations made to Congress by the National Grange at the annual meeting of that organization on November 13, 1940, at Syracuse, N. Y. The Grange, which is the oldest and one of the strongest farm groups in the United States, has submitted a constructive program which, in my opinion, if enacted would be very helpful to the agricultural interests, and would bring prosperity to the country generally.

The outstanding declarations by the National Grange were built around the determination to secure a square deal for American tillers of the soil, not only in legislation but through improved marketing facilities, extended rural privileges, and freedom from burdensome restrictions; checking the tendency toward large-scale farm activities, and guaranteeing the future of the average farm on an adequate self-supporting basis; such division of highway revenue as shall pay increased attention to the widespread need of improved secondary roads, and vigorous steps to prevent the diversion to other purposes of funds belonging strictly to highway needs; raising the moral tone of American life by revival of the virtues of industry, thrift, and cooperation; with emphatic condemnation of such growing evils as intoxication, gambling, and so forth; all the time demanding immediate and vigorous punishment for every dweller in America who fails to measure up to the standards of practical loyalty and patriotism.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the recommendations will be printed in the RECORD.

The recommendations made by the National Grange are as follows:

THE GRANGE PROGRAM FOR AGRICULTURE

For the purpose of maintaining the Grange principle of "protection for all or protection for none," with respect to any crop or crops having an exportable surplus, or incapable of adequate protection by means of embargo, tariff, or excise taxes, we recommend that a plan be made available for agricultural producers which would provide an American price for the American-consumed portion of the crop.

Such a plan should be applied to a crop only upon the voluntary approval of at least two-thirds of the producers of such crop; should provide a ready market by establishing control reserves; create credit to supply an orderly marketing program; furnish a method of levying excise taxes on competitive foreign imports to protect the marketing program; and should have available for use when the producers so vote a two-price system which will make it possible to market the domestically consumed portion of the commodity at a price comparable with that enjoyed by labor and industry; and enable the organized producer to retain his surplus, sell it on the world market, or release it for domestic competitive uses if and when needed for such purposes.

The marketing machinery under this program should be democratically controlled by producers of the commodity in the interest of the producer; State quotas should be set up to best protect the national well-being and the family-sized farm.

1. Defend America and preserve American ideals; build a defense system so complete that it shall prove strong enough to meet any emergency; and do it at the earliest possible time.

2. Secure for agriculture its fair share of the national income. So long as farmers are compelled to buy at one price and sell at a lower one, it is imperative that some form of benefit payments be continued in the present emergency or until a better method is developed.

3. Establish a plan by which groups of producers may elect to make use of a quota system to maintain prices for their products on the domestic market, at levels comparable to those received by industry and labor.

4. Assure the American market to the American farmer to the limit of his ability to supply it by:

(a) Terminating at the earliest possible date all trade treaties that are proving harmful to agriculture.

(b) Removing unnecessary trade barriers between States.

(c) Encouraging research to find new uses for farm crops, thereby diminishing the harmful effect of agricultural surpluses.

(d) Extending incentive payments to encourage production of new crops which may prove useful, especially in contributing to an efficient defense program.

(e) Continuing distribution of surplus food products to the needy, especially under the food-stamp plan.

(f) Providing Federal aid for the grading and standardization of farm products.

5. Increase the usefulness of the A. A. A. program through greater responsiveness to agriculture; by providing for its administration through producer-chosen State and county committees.

6. Restore the Farm Credit Administration to an independent status by:

(a) Administration through a bipartisan board, with staggered terms of members.

(b) Complete divorcement from compliance with political domination or other program connections.

(c) Maintenance of interest rates at the lowest possible point consistent with sound business practice.

7. A sound conservation policy by:

(a) Continuance of soil-conservation and land-use programs, but never as a means to promote crop control.

(b) Aid to forest-land owners in protection against insects, disease, and fire.

(c) Speeding up acquisition of forest and submarginal farm lands unsuitable to private ownership for addition to the national-forests and purchase units, with adequate compensation to local governmental units in lieu of taxes.

(d) Continued opposition to the transfer of the Forest Service from the Department of Agriculture to any other control.

8. Insistence upon the sound principle that, however much adjustments may be necessary, national wealth can never be built by creating scarcity.

9. Curb the mounting costs of government, National, State, and local. Faced with the inevitable expenditures for national defense, it is more essential than ever before that all spending agencies emphasize economy and efficiency in the use of public funds.

10. Utilize every modern means of economical transportation, but insist upon maintaining the advantages of the competitive system.

11. Use the full power of cooperative purchasing and selling to lower living costs and to insure greater bargaining power to the farmer.

12. Promote better rural living by:

(a) Maintaining the family sized farm.

(b) Generous support for rural schools, and improved equipment and sanitary conditions.

(c) Increased opportunity for youth activities, including 4–H clubs and similar projects, all aimed at youth training for leadership, and utilizing the benefits of established agencies, farm organizations, and land-grant colleges.

(d) Extension training in vocational education, agriculture, and practical homemaking.

(e) Continued expansion of rural electrification.

(f) Broadening of the good-roads program to especially emphasize secondary roads in rural areas.

(g) Legislation or other assistance to solve the problem of migratory farm families and the dangers of tenant farming.

The National Grange favors—

Continuation of the present crop-insurance program, with the loan feature expanded to meet requirements of additional and special crops.

Increased use of the facilities of the agricultural colleges, extension service, and similar agencies designed to aid ambitious farmers.

Encouragement to farm cooperatives—with maximum financial support from Federal agencies created for that purpose.

Reimbursement of counties and other taxing units in lieu of taxes which would normally be received from areas taken by the Federal Government for parks, sanctuaries, recreational, and other purposes.

Continuation of the Farm Security Administration, with reasonable appropriations by Congress for such purpose.

Amending National Labor Relations Act to clearly define status of agriculture and give farmer exemption to which he is justly entitled.

Legislation in Congress to provide adequate fire protection in the forests of the Nation, annually suffering fire losses.

The early enactment of such seed laws as will secure uniformity within all the States.

Continued investigation of un-American activities and deportation of all proved offenders.

Action by the Department of Agriculture to permit increased acreage of sugar beets and sugarcane to meet the demands of the domestic sugar market, with added protection for American sugar-beet and cane farmers through changed tariff schedules or otherwise.

A graduated land tax to discourage excessive landholdings and promote farm ownership.

Congress exercising its constitutional function for coining money and regulating its value.

Compelling mining corporations, dredging companies, etc., to level and restore topsoil in all cases of strip mining, dredging, and similar operations.

Federal assistance to cotton growers, as far as practicable, in their present serious plight.

Legislation to provide for the marketing of cotton on a net-weight basis; also adequate appropriations for pink bollworm control.

Adding beans and barley to the staple commodities list.

Safeguarding the Nation's supply of phosphate deposits.

Continued spread of efforts and education to promote safety on the highways.

Study to determine feasibility of establishing and financing—either by the Grange alone or in cooperation with other farm organizations—a service agency equipped to conduct legislative research, its services to be available to the sponsoring organizations and to Members of Congress.

Adoption of a 1941 special postage stamp to commemorate the Grange diamond jubilee year.

The National Grange opposes—

The establishment of a Federal Department of Education at the National Capital.

Any Government system of socialized medicine; but supporting community or cooperative projects of such nature.

The attempt of the Government to transfer to Federal agencies or control the administration of life-insurance companies, inasmuch as present State and local regulations provide all necessary safeguards for the operation of such companies as private institutions.

Restrictions in benefits of the Extension Service to any farmer, based upon his affiliation, or lack of it, with any group or organization.

Further irrigation projects, unless a similar acreage of submarginal land is removed from cultivation.

Placing privately owned or farm trucks under the Interstate Commerce Commission or other control.

The sale of intoxicating liquors in or near military training camps in any part of the Nation.

Continuance of block booking and blind selling in the supply of films to motion-picture houses.

The use of agricultural products as loss leaders by chain stores and others for consumer-baiting purposes.

Further impairment of rural radio service by loss of clear-channel broadcasts, due to granting increased station privileges in the large centers.

Throughout the entire Syracuse session patriotic sentiment was strongly in evidence, and uppermost discussion was given to the Nation's defense program, to which the Grange pledged unqualified support on behalf of the food producers of the country. However, the dangers of extravagant spending, without maximum results, were frequently warned against; while the session vigorously denounced all subversive activities aimed at undermining the morale of the Nation.

STATEMENT BY VERNE MARSHALL, CHAIRMAN OF THE NO FOREIGN WAR COMMITTEE

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement by Verne Marshall, chairman of the No Foreign War Committee, which appears in the Appendix.]

STATEMENT BY WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement by William Allen White with respect to the objectives of the committee of which he is chairman, which appears in the Appendix.]

ARTICLES BY MARK SULLIVAN, DOROTHY THOMPSON, AND WALTER LIPPMANN ON WAR POLICIES

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, the most important question before the American people today grows out of the efforts by totalitarian states to destroy Great Britain and other democratic nations. The American people are deeply concerned in this conflict, believing, as many do, that if Hitler, Stalin, and Mussolini, with their associate Japan, should triumph, the welfare of this Republic would be imperiled. Speaking for himself, the Chair approves the course pursued by the President in dealing with this tragic world situation.

Three of our news commentators have from time to time submitted views which indicate the danger to any democratic nation in the event Hitler and his associates should be successful in their criminal schemes. The Chair asks unanimous consent to have inserted in the body of the RECORD a brief article by Mark Sullivan, another by Miss Dorothy Thompson, and still another by Walter Lippmann. Each of these articles appeared in the January 1941 issue of the Reader's Digest.

The Chair wishes to quote one sentence from Mr. Lippmann's statement:

It is only by taking promptly and resolutely all the measures which confine the war within the grip of British sea power, and therefore hold it off at a distance where no one can fight us, that we shall have done our whole duty in protecting the American people from war.

There being no objection, the articles referred to were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Reader's Digest of January 1941]

ENGLAND MUST WIN, OR ELSE—THREE APPROACHES TO OUR BASIC PROBLEM, AS SEEN BY FAMOUS POLITICAL COMMENTATORS

(Condensed from New York Herald Tribune)

I. THE SUREST UNITED STATES DEFENSE STEP

(By Mark Sullivan)

Our preparedness for war increases. What is the nature of this war we prepare against?

We do not fear, except in a remote sense, German invasion of our soil. Our danger, as it is seen by many thoughtful and competent persons, is the destruction of our American system without invasion. At the risk of trying to simplify too greatly, this is how it would come about:

Germany conquers Britain. Germany then controls the sea and has a position of dominance over most of the world, excepting us. Germany then imposes the totalitarian system on the world—by arms, threat of arms, or economic pressure.

She begins, in most countries, by Nazifying industry and commerce. She makes all the commerce and industry of all the world into one unit, centering in Germany, directed from Berlin. She says to one country, "You shall raise and export wheat." To another, "You shall make textiles." To a third, "You shall make automobiles."

Certain key industries she would keep for herself. She would keep the armament and the major airplane industries as a matter of course. She would keep the shipbuilding industry, or so manage it in other countries, as to enable her to have the strongest navy and mercantile fleet in the world. Quite likely, she would prevent other countries from building ships beyond a certain size or number.

All this, all the separate centers of production throughout the Nazi-dominated world, all the routes of trade, Hitler would weave into one web. It is as if all the world were one great factory, operated from Berlin.

We fear that after Hitler has done this to all the world, except us, we could not stay out. We fear that we, too, would be obliged to adopt the totalitarian system for industry and commerce, and that, if we did so, we should have to adopt it in the other respects. We should become a totalitarian country, totalitarian form of society, totalitarian form of government.

This is, in substance, the view upon which we as a Nation are acting. Against every form of danger that Germany is to us, our best defense is to help Britain. If Britain survives, Germany cannot attack us directly. If Britain survives, Germany cannot impose her system on the world.

II. CAN THERE BE A PEACE OF NEGOTIATION?

(By Dorothy Thompson)

From Berlin come suggestions that peace can be achieved; that Hitler is prepared to take Great Britain into junior partnership. These rumors, plus reports from England of serious damage from bombs and heavy shipping losses, undoubtedly awaken in this country a hope that the war can be stopped and things restored in a halfway tolerable manner.

Influential groups in the American business world are unquestionably counting on a possible defeat of Britain by spring. These, and others, show stubborn resistance to any radical increase of aid for Britain. Colonel Lindbergh is spokesman for a group who are positive of the collapse of Britain at no distant date, and a "new order in Europe" with which we, then, must cooperate. We must make no alliance now with Britain, they say; we must prepare to make one with the new order under Hitler.

Such ideas are part and parcel of a diplomatic offensive perfected by Hitler long ago and waged by him with extraordinary success from 1936 to 1939. They are part of his technique for achieving bloodless victory.

From the very beginning he held forth the repeated hope that just one more gain would satisfy the Third Reich and that war would occur only because of the lack of reason on the part of his opponents. And this is still true: The world can have one sort of peace tomorrow—if it is prepared to live on Hitler's terms.

It will not, of course, have real peace. It will have the indefinite continuation of a reign of terror, in which political groups are exterminated, racial groups are organized into a hierarchical structure with Germans on top and lesser peoples beneath, all existing forms of culture and of law are obliterated, and the so-called German revolution is substituted for the war itself.

There is not the slightest doubt that Hitler would more than welcome a negotiated peace, with Britain taken into junior partnership. Junior partnership is the status enjoyed by Italy. It means collaboration in carrying out further the world program designed in Berlin. Italy is the caboose of a streamlined train hurtling through the world, and she cannot uncouple herself if she would. Her military and economic position is so weak in contrast to that of Germany that she is a prisoner, not a partner, of her alliance. And Great Britain would be in the same position.

The negotiated peace proposed by Germany would deprive the United States of the only friend and ally we have in the world. The Churchill Government would fall—Hitler would not make peace with Churchill—and be followed by a pro-Nazi government.

This government would not make peace in the world. It would further pursue the war. And then the United States of America would be in the most hideous danger imaginable. For then Japan would enter as actively into the axis partnership as Italy entered it with the defeat of France.

If the defeatist attitude in the United States is already serious, what would it be with Britain in partnership with the axis? Then, indeed, the careful preparations made in the United States for years by the Fascist powers would bear fruit. Then we would hear from the bundists and all their allies. We had better remember that Hitler's own solution for the United States is that, at the right moment, we should tear ourselves to pieces and out of history in an internal revolution.

The only possible hope for us to avoid the worst catastrophe in our history is to abandon wishful thinking and realize that we must not alow Britain to lose the war. The only possibility of our avoiding war is to muster in Britain's aid that unity, strength, coordination of resources and production of arms of which we would be capable if we were at war.

If we are to allow neutrality to stand in the way of our taking the political, diplomatic, propagandistic, military, and industrial steps necessary to the preservation of the Nation, then it would be better to abandon it. But it would be far shrewder not to do so. For it is still possible to win the war without entering it.

And there must be no peace except one which leaves Britain and America, together, in a more powerful world position than the axis. This is the only alternative to complete capitulation to, and integration in, a world run on axis terms, and on their terms alone.

III. WAR OR MEASURES SHORT OF WAR

(By Walter Lippmann)

A sober and candid estimate of the situation must, it seems to me, lead to the conclusion that the issue in the months immediately before us is not whether as a matter of business or sentimental philanthropy or partial self-defense we shall sell or lend or give a little more or a little less assistance to Great Britain. The issue is not whether a little less assistance will keep us out of war or a little more assistance will involve us in the present war. The issue is whether before it is too late we can and will take the necessary measures to prevent the present war—a war in which we are not called upon to fight—from developing into a new and greater war in which we shall have to fight.

This is the real issue. But it is not being made plain to the people because the responsible and informed men who understand the situation are still silenced by the fairly large number of sincere but uninformed men who have never at any time in the last few years understood this war. At a time when only positive measures clearly and resolutely undertaken, and backed by the utmost unified effort, can protect this Nation against involvement in an immense war, the administration and the Congress and the Nation are paralyzed by the deadly error that if we help Great Britain a little she may win, but that if we do not help her enough and she falls, then there will be peace, an unpleasant peace no doubt but nevertheless a peace.

This is a dangerous illusion. For the certain truth is that the collapse of Britain, or even its defeat in one of the great theaters of the war, would be like the breaking of a dam which has been holding back a raging flood. The torrent of war would burst out upon all the oceans and into all the continents.

Though this is now a very serious war in northern Europe, in the eastern Mediterranean, and in China, it is still for Americans a localized war. The dam which restricts the war, and thereby enables us to arm without fighting, is a great fortified line—fortified by British warships and airplanes, British and allied land forces, the Chinese armies, the British, Dutch, and American power in the Pacific. This line runs around the world from the British Isles to Gibraltar to Suez to Singapore to Hawaii to Panama. It prevents the Germans and Italians from getting into Africa, Asia, or any part of this hemisphere, and it holds back the Japanese.

If the axis can isolate the British Isles by blockade and bombardment, the British cannot hope to hold Gibraltar, Suez, any part of northern Africa or the Middle East, or any position in the Far East. The road to South America will be wide open; and the road to the Indies and Australia. For with the forces we have, the best we could hope to do would be to hold Hawaii and Panama, and that would be a desperate task because we would face a hostile, victorious, and immensely powerful alliance in both oceans.

Even if the British Isles holds fast, a break-through in the Mediterranean will at once extend the war dangerously into Africa, the South Atlantic, South America, and all over the Pacific. For the British would then have to bring back all their forces from all over the world to resist a concentrated assault on the British Isles, and we should have to bring all our forces back for the immediate defense of Hawaii, Panama, and Canada.

If there are no forces left to oppose the Japanese in the Pacific or the Germans and Italians in Africa and the South Atlantic, is it conceivable that, with the richest empire ever opened to a conqueror before them, they will not seize the opportunity? They have been fighting desperately to conquer relatively barren and already overcrowded territories—and yet there are men who tell us that if Asia, Africa, and South America were at their mercy, they would turn their backs upon these unbelievably great prizes of empire and amuse themselves constructing a "united Europe."

During the campaigns of 1941 it will be determined whether the war can be kept localized by the resistance of the British and their allies, the Chinese and ourselves, or whether the dam is to break. The outcome will be determined not only by the power and valor of the British and Chinese but by the lucidity and courage we are able to muster in the next few weeks and months. In the very immediate future we shall make the bed that we shall have to lie in for the very long future.

Our problem is how to use all the resources we possess to make certain that the lines hold fast through 1941; only thus can we be sure of the time needed to develop the armaments which will insure an allied victory and our own security—they are the same thing—beginning in 1942. When there is no longer a firm buffer between ourselves and the three aggressors, then our defense will be by actual and total war.

It is only by taking promptly and resolutely all the measures which confine the war within the grip of British sea power, and therefore hold it off at a distance where no one can fight us, that we shall have done our whole duty in protecting the American people from war.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, as in executive session, laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States nominating Edward P. Warner, of Connecticut, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board in the Department of Commerce for the term of 6 years, expiring December 31, 1946 (reappointment), which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, so far as I know, there is no business to be transacted today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was advised that the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] desired to call up a measure today. He seems not to be present, however.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have received word that the Senator from Colorado does not desire to have that bill called up today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky has been so advised?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. I therefore move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, December 30, 1940, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate December 26 (legislative day of November 19), 1940

CIVIL AERONAUTICS BOARD

Edward P. Warner, of Connecticut, to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board in the Department of Commerce for the term of 6 years expiring December 31, 1946 (reappointment).

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAMSPECK.

The Clerk read the following communication from the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. COLE of Maryland:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOM,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 26, 1940.

I hereby designate Hon. ROBERT RAMSPECK to act as Speaker pro tempore today.

WILLIAM P. COLE, Jr.

Rev. G. Ellis Williams, D. D., superintendent of the West Washington District of the Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God, how excellent is Thy name in all the earth. Thou art the King of Glory, yet Thou art accessible to the humblest of Thy children. We come to Thee in the afterglow of Christmas. To us it has brought great blessing. But to millions across the sea who are in the midst of terror occasioned by war, suffering, and starvation it has brought no relief. We pray for these, our brethren, that Thou wilt comfort them with Thy peace and boundless love. Forgive us wherein we have sinned as individuals and as a nation. Give unto us increasingly the spirit of kindliness, brotherhood, and good will. All this we ask, with the forgiveness of our sins, in the name of our Brother of Birth Divine, Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, December 23, 1940, was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

THE LATE GLENN GRISWOLD

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARNESS. Mr. Speaker, upon my recent return to Washington, after a brief tour of inspection of our national defenses, I learned with sorrow and regret of the sudden demise of my friend Glenn Griswold, a former Member of this body. Glenn Griswold represented my congressional district in Congress from 1930 until 1938, when I succeeded him. He and I had been friends for many years, and I admired his honesty, courage, and independence. While we differed politically there was never a moment when I entertained the slightest doubt as to his sincerity and patriotism.

Others have dwelt at some length upon his years of service in Congress and the many splendid qualities which graced his private life. I must be content to pay a brief and simple tribute to a friend and neighbor who met his obligations with a fidelity and courage that must excite the admiration of all.

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, there is a question of whether President Roosevelt's much-publicized plan to seize German, Italian, and other European boats interned in American ports and turn them over to the British, which was announced with a great flourish last week, was Mr. Roosevelt's own idea or an idea sold to him by some of his advisers, or whether it was a very clever British plan. The press reports the latter to be the case.

It is also a question of whether or not the avidity with which the administration spokesmen "bloomed up" this proposal was more to cover up and to divert the public mind from the exposures of the sickening failure in the progress of the defense construction rather than for any real serious intent by the administration to perpetrate the act of war proposed.

If this proposal emanated, as some of the best-informed Washington observers understand that it did, from the British, the purposes are plain. There is no question among the authorities on international law but that such an act would be an act of war. Being an act of war, it would be almost impossible for Germany and Italy to refrain from recognizing it as such and acting accordingly. That would involve Japan, of course. That would mean, from the British angle, that the United States would be in the war with all of our men as well as all of our money.

Germany reacted exactly as she could have been expected to react. Hitler has served notice on this administration that any seizure of German ships interned in American ports and their surrender to the British would be regarded as warlike. The result is that Mr. Roosevelt now faces the necessity of going forward against the overwhelming desire of the American people and of proposing to Congress that he be given authority to take the Nation into war by the route of these ship seizures, or else the administration must soft pedal its much-heralded measures short of war.

To call such an act as this a "measure short of war" is merely to insult the public intelligence. There have been many Members of the Congress who have insisted that if this Nation is going to be taken into war that it ought to go into the conflict with its eyes open, knowing what it means, but it has now become apparent that the administration has no intention of considering or consulting Congress, an equal coordinate branch of the Government, any more than it is absolutely compelled to by public opinion. Of course, it is silly to talk about neutrality at this stage of affairs. The administration has all along been as unneutral in its words and acts as it was possible for it to be without taking a rifle and beginning to shoot.

If this much-publicized "new" plan to seize German, Italian, and other ships and turn them over to Britain is only a smoke screen laid down to try to befog and obscure the lamentable and inexcusable condition of the national defense, no more dangerous or foolhardy method could have been hit upon by anybody.

America needs to devote her attention to an adequate and impregnable national defense. She needs to create that defense as quickly as possible. She needs to have rifles and ships and airplanes and tanks at home, and the stories that are coming to us from Members of Congress who have investigated conditions at the Panama Canal are exceedingly grave and disquieting.

It will be nothing short of treason, regardless of who is responsible, if this Nation is not provided, with the greatest possible speed and efficiency, with a national defense on the land, on the sea, in the air, and under the ocean—adequate to protect it from any nation or combination of nations under any circumstances. The American people should wake up to the danger which now exists and demand in emphatic terms that the state of our national defense be investigated by the Congress and the naked truth—no matter how ugly—exposed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include a brief editorial.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter to the President of the United States, signed by 100 educators and writers, in connection with the new deportation and naturalization laws.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the United States News.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the New York Enquirer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

GIVE THE AMERICAN PEOPLE AN OPPORTUNITY TO AID IN NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, here in Washington it is conceded that the defense program has fallen down. How badly, few seem to know.

Nor do we know fully and accurately the cause for nonproduction. One group charges the lag to the industrialists. Others insist that labor is to a certain extent to blame.

Still others think a lack of coordination and centralized authority is the cause. One thing is certain, our people are demanding intelligent, aggressive efforts which will give us an adequate national defense.

Throughout the land millions of people are not only ready but they are eager to assist. Up to the present time, we know that the price of materials needed by this Government has been steadily advancing. We know that, day after day, there are demands for an increase in wages. In brief, all too many seem not only willing but very anxious to seize upon the emergency as an excuse to profit personally. It is time that such an idea not only be discouraged but be rendered impossible of achievement.

Throughout this land there are hundreds—yes, literally thousands—of communities prepared to do their part toward national defense. One such community is located in my home county of Allegan, at Saugatuck, on Lake Michigan.

Quite true, Saugatuck is a small community, but its citizens are enterprising, and they are patriotic. They are seeking an opportunty to serve, and that unselfishly.

Saugatuck is a lake port. From it seagoing vessels can reach the Atlantic Ocean.

This morning from that city came a request that its facilities be surveyed and that it be permitted, in its small way, to do its part toward national defense. A copy of that communication is as follows:

SAUGATUCK, MICH., December 18, 1940.

Mr. WILLIAM S. KNUDSEN,
National Defense Advisory Committee, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. KNUDSEN: This village and its citizens and those of the adjacent community seek and solicit semiskilled war-defense work that may be had. The request is made as our unemployment list is high, and it is our earnest desire to avoid being the recipients of governmental so-called work relief.

We pledge these:

(1) To furnish buildings, land, power, and water.

(2) To avoid labor disputes by an insured contract with the National Defense Advisory Committee in any form it sees fit.

(3) To develop truck transportation promptly to within a radius of 200 miles.

(4) To follow faithfully the instructions of keymen.

(5) To furnish 50 men and women.

(6) To work 6 or even 7 days per week if need be.

The distance from Saugatuck to Chicago, 140 miles; Detroit, 180 miles; Lansing, 100 miles; South Bend, 100 miles; Holland, Mich., 10 miles where freight may be loaded in the afternoon, be at Suspension Bridge the next morning and on the seaboard the following morning.

We are also located on United States Highway 31, reaching from Mackinac City to Mobile, Ala.

We are also located on a land-locked harbor 1½ miles from the mouth of the Kalamazoo, which connects it with Lake Michigan. The harbor and river have been dredged to a depth of 14.6 feet.

May not some of the work being allotted now or in the near future be allotted to us? It means so much to us.

Very truly yours,

W. K. EICHER, Committeeman.

We heartily approve the above request.

F. E. FORCE,
President of the Village.
R. E. MADDEN,
Secretary of the Pokagon Club.
A. G. ONEAL,
Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce.

To the foregoing, may I add the statement that the citizens of Saugatuck are patriotic; that they are unselfish. They have skilled workmen in their community; and if defense projects are entrusted to them, there will be no unreasonable demand for increase in wages, price of materials, or the use of facilities which will unduly add to the cost of the project.

I am transmitting the foregoing statement with the earnest request that those in charge of national defense take cognizance of the desire and of the ability of our people in smaller communities throughout the land to aid the Government at this time.

In these smaller communities we can be assured there will be no gouging of the Government. There will be no sabotage. There will be no sit-downs, no slow-downs. There will be loyal, patriotic, unselfish service.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a letter from the village of Saugatuck, Mich.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

MUNICIPAL ELECTRIC PLANT

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, while Governor of the State of Oregon I did all that I could to encourage the small towns to put in their own municipal electric plants. One among the number owning its system was Forest Grove, a little town in western Oregon of about 2,500 people. About 3 years ago Forest Grove put in Diesel engines, a modern outfit, and then the city authority concluded, something like a year ago, that the city could buy Bonneville power and allow their engines to stand idle and save money by so doing. In the first 10 months of this year that little town paid the Government $9,263.60 for Bonneville power. They collected $33,890.80 in the same 10 months. The electric power department paid all their charges, all their expenses, and have paid the city $10,250 in lieu of taxes and interest. They have left over, in their treasury, in 10 months' operations $2,679.04, and during this time they have given the city among the lowest rates in Oregon, exemplifying the truth of the statement that if the towns will take hold of electric distribution themselves it will be very profitable.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman insert those rate tables in his remarks?

Mr. PIERCE. I will be glad to put them in.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may revise and extend my remarks to include a brief article from the Woodburn (Oreg.) Independent.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and, of course, I shall not object, because we all know there has never been a greater friend of the power consumers in this House or in the other body than the distinguished gentleman from Oregon, but I want to ask him to put the retail rates in these remarks—that is, the rates that people have to pay in that community—in order that people throughout the country who are clamoring for decent power rates may understand just what that means.

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may add that to this article referred to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Woodburn (Oreg.) Independent of December 5, 1940]

TWO WOODBURN COUNCILMEN INSPECT RECORDS OF FOREST GROVE LIGHT PLANT

Fred Hecker and Fred Miller, two members of the Woodburn City Council, went to Forest Grove Monday to check up on that city's municipal power plant, which has been using Bonneville power since November 27, 1939.

Forest Grove's plant is the subject of more discussion than any other municipal plant in the State because the rates used there are the rates recommended by the Bonneville administration in all comparable situations.

The two Woodburn councilmen, in inspecting the city records and questioning City Manager Weber, gleaned the following information:

The Forest Grove light plant employs two men on a permanent basis. One of these receives $150 a month and the other $115. They receive annual vacations with pay, and in severe weather their activities are often curtailed. Thus, although their pay is theoretically lower than the pay of men doing similar work for the private companies, it amounts to about the same. A third man is hired when needed, and he receives 50 cents an hour.

Bills are due on or before the 10th of each month, and if not paid by then, a 5-percent penalty is added. After 30 days, if the customer has not paid his bill, the service is required to be disconnected.

A $5 deposit is required of each new customer, and this covers both light and water service, protecting the city against losses from both.

Both light and water bills are paid at the city hall in a manner similar to the way city water bills are paid in Woodburn. This eliminates a certain amount of duplication.

The city electricity plant has an appraised value of $125,000, of which $70,000 is the distribution system and the remainder represents the Diesel plant, now standing idle. The city pays itself 6-percent interest on the entire $125,000, and also taxes. In taxes and interest the city light department turns over to the city's general fund $1,025 every month.

The plant has about 1,200 customers, commercial and residential, a considerable proportion of whom are outside the city limits. Forest Grove's situation is similar to Woodburn's in that many who consider themselves part of the community live outside the city limits.

The private company competes vigorously for customers outside the city limits, but since the so-called Forest Grove rates were inaugurated a year ago the city has won practically all of these customers. Before that these customers alternated between the city and the power company as rates charged by the two systems varied. The private company at no time ran its lines inside the city limits, since it had no franchise.

When Forest Grove put in its Diesel plant in 1931 the city was $400,000 in debt and the city tax levy was 30 mills. At the close of this year the city debt will be $173,000, and for the past 3 years the city levy has been not over 15 mills. This improved condition has been brought about largely, but not entirely, because of profits from the light plant. In addition to causing these improvements in the city's financial condition, profits from the light plant were used to pay for the Diesel motors, some $100,000.

Amount of electricity sold by the city each month this year is almost three times what it was each month in 1933, and the rate reductions that have been made in that period are given as the chief reason for the increased demand.

Bonneville power costs the city 4.7 cents per kilowatt-hour, almost exactly what it costs for the Diesel oil necessary to produce a kilowatt-hour. Therefore by buying Bonneville power the city saves all the cost of operating its Diesel motors.

Since hooking up with Bonneville the city has "had to build lines like everything" to take care of the increasing demand. As a result the distribution system has increased considerably in value in the past year. Nevertheless, $3,088.10 has been set aside from January 1 to October 31 for depreciation. Figures for the month of November were not available; the city's auditor was working on these at the time the two Woodburn councilmen were there.

Summary for the 10 months January 1 to October 31 is as follows:

Total amount collected: $33,890.80.

Cost of power: $9,263.60.

Gross income: $24,627.20.

Salaries and wages, repair and maintenance, workmen's compensation, depreciation, etc.: $9,216.56.

Office expense: $2,069.10.

Net operating profit (gross income less $9,216.56 less $2,069.10): $11,285.66.

Less $412.50 interest on bonds: $12,929.04.

Less $10,250 turned over to the city general fund in taxes and interest: $2,679.04.

The $412.50 listed as paid on bonds has to do with some bonds floated a few years ago to obtain money for purposes having nothing to do with the power system; the power system in effect was put up as security for the obligation and is still paying the interest.

These figures mean, in plain English, that Forest Grove in the first 10 months of 1940 paid out of the power plant's revenues all possible bills that could be levied against it, including new construction, depreciation, 6-percent interest, taxes, and interest on nonpower bonds—and had $2,679.04 left over. This despite the fact Forest Grove rates are so low that there were predictions from several sources that the city could not break even on them.

While in Forest Grove, Councilmen Hecker and Miller were guests at the chamber of commerce luncheon.

Mr. PIERCE. I shall at a later date insert in the RECORD a table showing rates now charged in several cities in Oregon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including therein two brief articles, one from the New York Times and one from the New York Herald Tribune.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including a radio address delivered by myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an address delivered by the President on Christmas Eve in the city of Washington.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on Monday, December 23, 1940, present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 5336. An act for the relief of Peter Bavisotto.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with its previous order, adjourned until Monday, December 30, 1940, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 3 of rule XXII, Mr. BLOOM introduced a resolution (H. J. Res. 623) to extend the date for filing a report by the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Thomas Jefferson, which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

2084. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report, pursuant to Public, No. 426, Seventy-sixth Congress, relating to the division of awards for aircraft, aircraft parts, and accessories therefor; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

2085. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report, pursuant to Public, No. 426, Seventy-sixth Congress, relating to divisions of awards for aircraft, aircraft parts, and accessories therefor; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE

MONDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1940

(Legislative day of Tuesday, November 19, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, Thou timeless One, made known to us not by our discovery but by Thine own revealing, who art evermore in the dream and thought of the creatures Thou hast willed to be: Preserve us in faith as the shadows of the old year fade away and the new year dawns and we waken to the light, saying, "This is our God, of whom our vision in the past was but a glimmering ray."

As we pause in reverent awe on the threshold of the future with hearts bowed down because of the violence, hatred, and enmity that are in the world, even so we can but bless Thee for the stirring ministry of the past, for the story of noble deeds, the memory of holy men; but most of all we bless Thee for the ministry of the Son of Man, for the cradle, the cross, and the crown of Him who taught us the eternal beauty of earthly things, who by His life hath set us free from fear, and by His death hath won us from our trespasses to Thee. May the spirit of the Lamb of God dwell within each one of us; may it conquer all the selfishness of man and take away the sin and sorrow of the world. In our Saviour's name we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Thursday, December 26, 1940, was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

REPORT OF NATIONAL FOREST RESERVATION COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. 317)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, president of the National Forest Reservation Commission, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of that Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1940, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed, with an illustration.

REPORT OF WAR MINERALS RELIEF COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. —)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, reporting, pursuant to law, on all operations and disbursements in the adjustment of claims under the War Minerals Relief Act covering the period December 1, 1939, to November 30, 1940, inclusive, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON THE HELIUM-PRODUCTION FUND

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, reporting, pursuant to law, concerning the disbursements, obligations, and balances on hand in connection with the special helium-production fund for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1940, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORT OF NATIONAL PARK TRUST FUND BOARD

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, reporting, pursuant to law, for the National Park Trust Fund Board relative to the operations of that Board for the fiscal year 1940, and showing the status of the national park trust fund as of June 30, 1940, which, with the accompanying paper was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands and Surveys.

PETITIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate letters in the nature of petitions from Alfred M. Kunze, of New Rochelle, N. Y., praying for the enforcement of the neutrality laws and a negotiated peace in Europe, also for the feeding and clothing of peoples made destitute by war, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HOLT presented a resolution of James Wood Chapter, National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution, commending the activities of the so-called Dies committee of the House of Representatives and favoring an appropriation for the continuance of that committee, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. KING, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was recommitted the bill (H. R. 10418) to provide for the issuance of a license to practice the healing art in the District of Columbia to Dr. Peter Florey, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 2226) thereon.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES ON DECEMBER 29, 1940

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by the President of the United States on December 29, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY LYNN R. EDMINSTER BEFORE EASTERN OREGON WHEAT LEAGUE

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Lynn R. Edminster, special assistant to the Secretary of State, before the Eastern Oregon Wheat League at Pendleton, Oreg., on December 6, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY ALFRED M. COHEN BEFORE ELECTORAL COLLEGE

[Mr. BARKLEY (for Mr. DONAHEY) asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the Presidential electors of the State of Ohio, and an address delivered before the electoral college by Alfred M. Cohen, which appear in the Appendix.]

SURVEYS ON WAR TOPICS BY SENATOR HOLT

[Mr. HOLT asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD two surveys by him, entitled "Thumbnail Sketches of the War Crowd" and "Answers to the Warmongers," together with certain editorials and communications about his war stand, which appear in the Appendix.]

EDITORIAL BY VERNE MARSHALL AND STATEMENT BY SENATOR WHEELER

[Mr. HOLT (for Mr. WHEELER) asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an editorial by Verne Marshall entitled "There Shall Be Peace!" and a statement by Senator WHEELER accompanying the editorial, which appear in the Appendix.]

GIVING AWAY DEFENSES OF THE UNITED STATES

[Mr. CLARK of Missouri asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a telegram from Verne Marshall, chairman of the No Foreign War Committee, and others, regarding the giving away of defenses of the United States, which, with the signatures, appears in the Appendix.]

ADDRESS BY DEAN ALFANGE, PAST SUPREME PRESIDENT OF THE ORDER OF AHEPA

[Mr. KING asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by Dean Alfange, past supreme president of the Order of Ahepa, at the Hotel Roosevelt, New Orleans, La., on December 5, 1940, at the formal opening of the Greek war-relief drive, which appears in the Appendix.]

LETTER FROM JUNIOR CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF SEDAN, KANS.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Junior Chamber of Commerce of Sedan, Kans., signed by its president, Shannon B. Kinkade, and all the officers and directors of the organization.

These young men set forth their views on the foreign policy of the United States simply, directly, and, in my judgment, very sanely. I invite the Senate's attention to the position these young businessmen take and suggest that their sentiments are expressive of the deep-seated convictions of many million American citizens. I know this is true so far as the people of Kansas are concerned. They are greatly alarmed over the unmistakable drift toward participation in this war. They are overwhelmingly in favor of keeping out of it. I am glad to say they are also strong for preparedness.

I ask that the letter and the names of the signers be printed in the RECORD as part of my remarks at this time.

There being no objection, the letter, with the names of the signers, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SEDAN JUNIOR CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Sedan, Kans., December 14, 1940.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Sedan Junior Chamber of Commerce is writing you as a group and asking that both the Johnson Act and the Neutrality Act be retained without further amendments.

We feel that the future welfare of the United States depends upon our keeping out of foreign wars. To repeal or amend these acts will mean our active participation in the war.

We are 100 percent in favor of aid to England to the extent that our own defenses are not weakened or drastic action taken which might result in our active involvement in the war.

We feel free to make our wishes known in this matter, as we are the men who would be called upon to give our lives should this Nation join the European war.

Respectfully,

S. B. KINKADE,
President, Junior Chamber of Commerce, Sedan, Kans.

Officers and directors:
Carlin Bain, W. A. Dobson, D. M. Campbell, H. O. Dungan, John M. Wall, Chas. L. Sturges, George Meacham, Jr., August Simoncic.

PARTICIPATION OF AMERICA IN EUROPEAN WAR

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, no doubt many of the Senators have read in the newspapers, if they read the columns of Sir

Walter Lippmann, or heard over the radio, if they have listened to Lady Dorothy Thompson, that we might just as well finance England in this war, we might just as well convoy ships for her, we might just as well give England our Navy, we might just as well do this or do that, because, as this group say, "we are already in the war."

By whom were we taken into the war? Were we not told by these same individuals, by these same newspapers, and by these same organizations, that only Congress could declare war? Were we not told that the "steps short of war" advocated by these individuals and these organizations were supposed to keep us out of war? Remember how they professed that these acts were a protection against our going into the conflict; how the amending of the Neutrality Act was a step to keep American boys off the field of battle. They told the American people, "Oh, just go along with us. We are interested in peace just as much as are those individuals who are calling us warmongers. We do not want war." But they did not tell the people the truth. They wanted war from the start. They knew that the steps they advocated were part of a definite plan to get us into the war, and to take the sons and the husbands of America and throw them into another expeditionary force to be wounded, gassed, and killed on the blood-saturated soil of Europe.

Some of us said, "Don't take those steps. They are too dangerous. They are down the path of war, and you will find it difficult to turn back." I hope some of the Senators will remember the experience of 1914–18. But through their well-financed campaign—inspired and, in my opinion, through English finance—to involve us in war, they went on down that road until now they set up the cry, "Oh, well, we might just as well go the rest of the way. We have already committed acts of war and we cannot go back."

I want America to think. Some of us said that that would be the strategy. "Oh," they said, "just take this one drink. It won't make you drunk." Then, a short time afterward, "That drink did not make you drunk. Take another drink"; and, of course, again we were not drunk. Not yet. Now they say, "Take another, and another," until they think we have lost the power of reasoning, and that we cannot refuse; that we just have to take another one, and finally the one that puts us actively into the war.

We have gone too far, much too far. We are in a dangerous place as far as involvement is concerned. But we can keep the boys out of Europe, we can keep the sons and husbands of America out of the bloody trenches if we stop now. But we cannot continue to accept the advice of those who have taken us so far. They lied before and they are lying now. They want war and they wanted it from the start.

We must meet the challenge now if we want to stay out of war. As we stand at the precipice these warmongers think it will be easy to push us in now. Look at the fight in the William Allen White committee today. Why are they after Mr. White, whom I have personally attacked on the floor of the Senate? Because Mr. White said, "The Yanks are not coming." Why did "Little Flower" LaGuardia say he wanted deeds? What does he mean by deeds? He means men. He knows the plans for war. That is why they are after William Allen White, because he said, "The Yanks are not coming." Do they want the Yanks to come? There is a group in the William Allen White committee that wanted war from the start, but did not have the courage to say so. They were in a cowardly manner hiding behind "steps short of war." I say that the warmongers will not fight in the war, but the sons of America will. Look at the list and see who these men are. They are not eligible for military service. Some are dollar-a-year men. Remember them?

I take my stand to fight those traitors, and I use the word "traitors" in all that it implies. They are traitors to America, who will have the blood of American youth smeared on them if we accept their advice and go the rest of the way. So long as I have breath in my body, whether I am a Member of the Senate or not, I intend to continue to name these people, to expose them, and to fight them.

Let me add that I am placing in the Appendix of the RECORD today the story of the William Allen White committee, showing that more than 25 members of the William Allen White committee hold awards and medals from belligerent nations now at war. We hear talk about Colonel Lindbergh's medals. Why do not these critics tell about these awards and medals of the 25 members of the William Allen White committee? Why do they not tell that Bishop Manning, Dr. Kingdon, and many more whose names I put into the RECORD, are English-born subjects? Why do they not tell that John McIvor was in this country 17 years before he became an American citizen, now telling America through the White committee what she should do? He loved America so that he remained here 17 years before he became an American citizen. Yet he now attempts to tell us what to do.

I have had printed the records of these individuals, and Senators can see the real background of them, the Oxford group, and like relationships.

I understand why certain papers and certain individuals and certain radio commentators are for war. I have published the records of some of these individuals who are on the William Allen White committee, showing that they are directors of companies selling war supplies to the United States and to England, and are participants in blood-drenched prosperity. I have many more which I intend to add in the next few weeks, so that the American people can discover the truth about this drive for war. They will find that it is inspired, but not by the idea of democracy.

Mr. J. Pierpont Morgan gave a party for the little English refugees at Christmas time; and I am glad he did. I think he should be commended for that. But when did J. Pierpont Morgan ever give a Christmas party for the little refugees of America, for the little Okies? When did J. Pierpont Morgan open up his heart at Christmas time for those individuals who are citizens of this Nation who are even without food? Are not American children deserving? He can do it for the English refugees; and why? Just look at the record of the Morgans from the beginning, going back to the Civil War, when J. Pierpont Morgan's parent sold old obsolete muskets to the United States Army in order to make a profit out of them; then going through the Spanish-American War, then their financing the Boer War. Oh, they loved democracy. They loved it so much they floated bond issues here to destroy a helpless Boer republic. On through the World War, in which they made millions, and on into the present war, in which they are making millions their record is known. Yet we hear talk about Morgan's interest in democracy and his interest in the people. His interest is in the almighty dollar and he is willing to make American boys sacrifice their lives to protect the investments.

Who represents Mr. Morgan on the William Allen White committee? It is Thomas W. Lamont, a partner of J. Pierpont Morgan, and a member of the policy committee of the William Allen White committee.

The history of this thing will be shown, and it will be found that these men are not sincere in this battle. I admire the men who are sincere in their fight for democracy, but they have a motley crowd of profiteers and so-called "paytriots" associated with them. I do not say that all connected with the White committee are not sincere, but I do say that many of the members of that committee are not sincere, and the record will so show.

So far as I am concerned, I intend to continue to name these men. I say that wherever America can express itself, it does not want war. They dare not tell the American people we are going into a foreign war. What is the strategy today? Let them be honest about it. The strategy is to provoke the "axis" powers to declare war on us, and then say we are attacked. Such hypocrisy! It is the first time I know of in American history when we have been asked to sacrifice honor in order to get into war, and not to protect our country.

America is going to pay the penalty of a long, well-financed plan of the internationalists to tie America to European power politics. I again call the attention of the Senate to the figures and the data I have put in the Appendix of the RECORD of this "pure," pious group on the William Allen White committee.

RELIEF OF UTE INDIANS OF UTAH

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, a few days ago I received unanimous consent to call up an Indian bill, House bill 9705, which has to do with the proposed transfer of lands of the Ute Indians of Utah. Objection was made at that time because the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] had some objection, but I understand he has withdrawn his objection, or at least agreed to make no objection; so I renew my request that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 9705, Calendar No. 2238.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, does the able Senator from North Dakota refer to the bill dwelt upon by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] just a few days ago?

Mr. FRAZIER. That is the bill.

Mr. McCARRAN. At that time I joined in the objection made, and my reason was that I desired to have more information about the bill. Later I thought I might offer an amendment to the bill. But the explanation of the bill given me, and what I deemed to be the importance of the bill, have been sufficient to cause me to withdraw any objection I might have, and also to withdraw any idea of offering an amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, did the Senator from North Dakota say that the senior Senator from Colorado had signified that he was withdrawing any objection he formerly had to the bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. That is what I have been told.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Did the Senator from Colorado tell the Senator that himself?

Mr. FRAZIER. I did not talk with the senior Senator from Colorado himself, but conferred with several others, who said that the senior Senator from Colorado was not making any further objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have not talked with my colleague, but I do not think it is a fair statement to say he has withdrawn his objection. The senior Senator from Colorado is unavoidably detained today and cannot be present, having injured his foot, and I do not think it is fair for the Senator from North Dakota or anyone else to quote my colleague unless he has authority to do so. I think the Senator from North Dakota should withdraw the statement that the senior Senator from Colorado has withdrawn all objection to the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not wish to have the position of the senior Senator from Colorado misunderstood, or anything of the kind, but the present occupant of the chair, the President pro tempore of the Senate, told me that he had talked with the senior Senator from Colorado, and that he would not be present at the session today, and, although he did not like the bill, that he would make no objection to its consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that I had this bill held up at the request of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], I think that in justice to him I should make a statement. I have not talked to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] about it, but I have had him called since I entered the Chamber, and I understand his attitude to be that he does not withdraw his opinion of the bill. He still thinks it is a bad bill, and would not vote for its passage, but inasmuch as he is unable to be present today, he has not indicated that he desires the bill to go over again on his account. I do not want the RECORD to show that he approves the bill, or that he has mentally withdrawn his objection to it. I, myself, do not intend to object to consideration of the bill because under the circumstances I do not feel that I am required to do so.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if I am correctly advised from what I have heard today, the bill was approved by the Committee on the Public Lands in the House, and, having been sent to the Senate, went to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] is chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate. That committee had no opportunity to consider the bill. From my own personal conversations with the senior Senator from Colorado, I know that he had serious objections to the bill. What those objections were, I do not now know, but it seems to me that the bill should not pass in the absence of the Senator from Colorado, and I feel obliged to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

USE OF LANDS ALONG NATCHEZ TRACE PARKWAY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, on behalf of the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], chairman of the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys, I report favorably House bill 10712 and submit a report (No. 2225) thereon.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who is unavoidably absent, is very much interested in securing the passage of the bill at this time, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The purpose of the bill, which passed the House of Representatives on November 19, is to permit the relinquishment or modification of certain restrictions upon the use of lands along the Natchez Trace Parkway in the village of French Camp, Miss.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire if the nature of the waiver which the Government would make if the bill should become law is simply the waiver of the restriction against private use of public property for commercial purposes, so as to permit the erection of a building to be used as a store, for example?

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand, that is all the bill does.

Mr. AUSTIN. Of how much value or importance is the waiver?

Mr. BARKLEY. Not being familiar with the details of the bill, I am unable to fix a monetary value, if that is what the Senator has in mind. There is rather an intangible value attached to it, by reason of the relinquishment of the restriction, which works inconvenience to those who may want to go through the property for legitimate purposes. I am told that no harm can come to the Government's rights by reason of the relinquishment of the restriction.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is it conceived that the waiver might really be for the benefit of the United States?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. As I understand, the benefit would be mutual.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have talked with Republican members of the committee which considered the bill. In view of the responses to my inquiries, and what I am told by members of the committee with whom I have consulted, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CONNALLY in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 10712) to permit the relinquishment or modification of certain restrictions upon the use of lands along the Natchez Trace Parkway in the village of French Camp, Miss., was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MR. AND MRS. T. G. RAMSEY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 2342, House bill 7965, for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Ramsey. It is a private claim bill which has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims without amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, may I ask how much money is involved?

Mr. BARKLEY. Two thousand dollars.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 7965) for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Ramsey was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOSEPH WARREN MADDEN

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is on the Executive Calendar the nomination of Mr. Joseph Warren Madden to be a member of the Court of Claims. This nomination has been passed over from day to day because of the absence of a quorum of Members of the Senate. I wish to advise Senators that if a quorum is developed on Thursday next I hope to bring that nomination to a vote. It seems to me it ought to be passed on without having to lapse and be sent to the Senate again at the beginning of the next session.

Objection has been made on behalf of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has very generously offered to notify the Senator from Ohio that we shall attempt to take the matter up on Thursday if a quorum is present, which I hope will be the situation. Therefore I shall not ask for an executive session today.

PROPOSED LEASING OF DEFENSE BASES IN THE ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on September 30 last I introduced Senate bill 4391, to authorize negotiations for the acquisition of certain British possessions, to provide for reducing the indebtedness of Great Britain to the United States, and for other purposes. The purpose of the bill was to facilitate the acquisition, by lease or otherwise, of possessions of Great Britain in or bordering on the Pacific Ocean which might be deemed necessary in connection with national defense. The bill provided that the President was authorized to make such loans and extensions of credit as he deemed advisable to Great Britain and its political subdivisions, and also to provide for reducing the amount of the indebtedness of the British Government to the United States. It also provided for modification of certain provisions of the Neutrality Act of 1939 and the act of 1934, which restricted financial transactions with foreign governments in default on obligations to the United States.

In my opinion, it was highly advantageous to the United States to acquire bases, not only in the Pacific but also in the Atlantic, particularly in the Caribbean Sea area; and, in my view, the national-defense program would be advanced and strengthened if the provisions of the bill were enacted into law.

On November 8 last I introduced Senate bill 4419, authorizing loans to foreign debtor nations for the purchase of agricultural products within the United States. The bill provided that the terms of the act of 1934, which sought to prohibit financial transactions with foreign governments in default on their obligations to the United States, and also the Neutrality Act of 1939, "shall not apply to the making of loans to or the extension of any credit by any person within the United States to any government, state, political subdivision thereof, or to any person acting for or on behalf of the government of any such state or political subdivision, for the purpose of enabling any such government, political subdivision, or person to purchase agricultural products within the United States."

I am frank to confess that I believed, and still believe, that Great Britain was defending not only the British Empire but all democratic nations, and that the interests of the United States would be served by extending credit to Great Britain. In my opinion, the overwhelming majority of the American people are opposed to the policies of the so-called Axis Powers; and I believe the interests of the United States will be served if aid is given to Great Britain.

Upon a former occasion I have discussed the question of extending credit to Great Britain. I believe the address delivered last evening by the President of the United States presents in a powerful way the issues that are at stake in the contest between Great Britain and the totalitarian powers.

I desire briefly to call the attention of the Senate to the attitude taken by the press of the United States with respect to the two bills which I introduced. I have before me a compilation of news clippings from newspapers published in the United States the circulation of which is more than 28,000,000. The compilation shows favorable editorials representing a circulation of 5,577,580, and unfavorable editorials representing a circulation of 456,832. Of course, I would not ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD the numerous editorials, statements, and comments, but I have them here in book form, so that any Senator who desires to examine them may have the opportunity to do so.

RECESS TO THURSDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. If there is nothing further, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Thursday, January 2, 1941, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, DECEMBER 30, 1940

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. RAMSPECK.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication, which was read by the Clerk:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOMS,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., December 30, 1940.

I hereby designate Hon. ROBERT RAMSPECK to act as Speaker pro tempore today.

WILLIAM P. COLE,
Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, in the afterglow of the Christmas life and pledge, we thank Thee that it has touched childhood and made it beautiful; that it has touched our homes and made them joyous. We pray for its blessing to fall upon all paths of industry, making them sacraments; Oh, lead all feet in the ways of law, justice, and brotherhood. Heavenly Father, soon will pass another year beyond the horizon; it seems like the flight of a bird; how brief and shrunken the time. So teach us to number our days that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom. Impress us that time is short and the building of character is more than the achievement of a great city. Blessed Lord, here between the old and the new year, let us dedicate ourselves to the highest aspirations, becoming a free and a Christian people. Frozen by the wintry nature that encompasses them, expel from our memories all hatreds, all jealousies, all passions, and all ingratitude that they may drop in the gulf of oblivion. Let the evil and the chaff of life pass with them with the realization that a good character is the ripe fruit that earth holds up to God. We earnestly pray that we may carry into the new year the choicest thoughts and the wisest purposes. O Father of mercy, we gratefully say: Farewell to the past, all hail to the future, because our trust is in Thee. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, December 26, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Thursday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is there going to be an opportunity to talk today?

Mr. COCHRAN. This only has to do with adjournment this afternoon—simply means when we do adjourn we adjourn until Thursday. If the gentleman wants to talk today, I am sure he will have that privilege.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Of course, if you adjourn within 5 seconds, we would not have that privilege.

Mr. COCHRAN. Nobody will move to adjourn if any Member desires to make a speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. SCRUGHAM] have permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a memorial address on the life, character, and public service of the late Senator Key Pittman, delivered by Albert Hilliard at Reno, Nev., on December 9, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include a brief editorial appearing in the Indianapolis News of December 23, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include an editorial from the Indianapolis Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON FISCAL PLANNING

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, on next Friday, the opening day of the Seventy-seventh Congress, I shall introduce a resolution to create a special committee on fiscal planning to bring together the heads of the Appropriations and Ways and Means Committees with a view to coordinating spending and revenue-raising activities, the main purpose being to effect economies in the nondefense expenditures of the Government and a new working relationship between the two committees, which have heretofore operated entirely independent of each other.

The text of the resolution which I intend to introduce is as follows:

There is hereby created a special House Committee on Fiscal Planning, to be composed of the chairman, ranking majority member, acting chairman of the deficiencies subcommittee, and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations and the chairman, ranking majority member, chairman of the subcommittee on taxation and ranking minority member of the Ways and Means Committee.

SEC. 2. The Committee on Fiscal Planning is directed to make a study of United States Government finances with a view to coordinating revenue and spending activities and introducing economies wherever it is possible and feasible to do so, in order to reduce the gap between Federal revenues and Federal expenditures and to bring about an approach to a balanced Budget in the ordinary financial operations of the Government.

SEC. 3. The Committee on Fiscal Planning is directed to report its findings and recommendations to the Speaker of the House and such findings and recommendations shall be made public records and shall be printed as House documents.

A distinguished statesman of the past said in regard to resumption of specie payments: "The way to resume is to resume." The way to tackle the problem of putting the finances of the Government on a better basis is to make a start, and I do not know of any better way to make a start than by getting the heads of the Appropriations and Ways and Means Committees together in a cooperative working arrangement whereby a comprehensive study may be made of the expenditures of the Government and the taxes necessary to meet those expenditures.

Under the plan I propose that study would be made by eight of the ablest Members of the House who are especially qualified for the task—the gentlemen of the Appropriations Committee [EDWARD T. TAYLOR, CLARENCE CANNON, CLIFTON A. WOODRUM, and JOHN TABER] and the gentlemen of the Ways and Means Committee [ROBERT L. DOUGHTON, THOMAS H. CULLEN, JERE COOPER, and ALLEN T. TREADWAY]. These members would have the privilege at all times of consulting the Director of the Budget.

Some persons may say that these Members may now confer at any time and that a new committee is not necessary to effectuate the purpose intended, but I believe that their recommendations would have much greater prestige and effect if they come as the considered opinions and conclusions of a specially created House committee.

I believe that such a committee as is here proposed would be capable of accomplishing a great deal of good in getting our financial house in order. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include the text of the resolution which I shall introduce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PETER BAVISOTTO—VETO MESSAGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read by the Clerk:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, a bill (H. R. 5336) to provide for the payment to Peter Bavisotto of the sum of $495.80, representing the amount of premiums paid by him on an invalidated policy of war-risk insurance.

It appears that Mr. Bavisotto is a veteran and had obtained during the World War the usual war-risk insurance, which, however, he permitted to lapse in 1919 because of nonpayment of premiums. In 1927 he applied for reinstatement of the insurance. The application for such reinstatement contained an assertion that the veteran was in good health. In 1931, however, he filed a claim for disability compensation, alleging that he had been under medical treatment for pulmonary tuberculosis since 1920. In view of this circumstance, the Veterans' Administration canceled his insurance policy on the ground of misrepresentation.

Subsequently the veteran brought suit against the Government in the United States District Court for the Western District of New York to recover benefits claimed because of permanent and total disability. The district court determined the issues in favor of the Government and further held that the plaintiff was not entitled to secure a refund of the premiums paid by him, in view of the fact that he had been guilty of a misrepresentation in procuring reinstatement of the policy. No appeal from this decision was taken.

It thus appears that the plaintiff has had his day in court. If the decision of the district court were erroneous, he had an opportunity to secure a review by the circuit court of appeals. No reason appears, however, for questioning the validity of the judicial determination.

Sufficient reason does not appear for granting to the plaintiff by legislative action a refund of the premiums to which he is not entitled as a matter of law.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 30, 1940.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objections of the President will be spread at large upon the Journal, and, without objection, the bill and the message will be referred to the Committee on War Claims and ordered printed.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wonder how this bill ever got to the War Claims Committee. It seems to me that legislation of this kind should be referred to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it was a private bill and was referred to that committee by the author.

Mr. RANKIN. Then it should not have gone to the War Claims Committee but to the Committee on Claims. If the War Claims Committee is going to attempt to get around the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation in this way and establish a precedent that would be binding on the Government with reference to all veterans' claims of this kind, it seems to me it would establish a very bad policy.

I am not going to object, but I certainly do want to call attention to the fact that this legislation ought not to have gone to the War Claims Committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the bill and the message will be referred to the Committee on War Claims and ordered printed.

There was no objection.

TWO HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 623, to extend the date for the filing of the report of the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the necessity, the emergency that requires this resolution to be considered today?

Mr. BLOOM. The reason for asking for the immediate consideration of this resolution is that the committee appointed pursuant to the original resolution was supposed to file their report by January 1. The committee not being organized we are asking permission for them to file their report prior to February 15.

Mr. MICHENER. When was the committee created?

Mr. BLOOM. September 24, 1940.

Mr. MICHENER. Does not the gentleman think, this committee on this important matter created last September but not yet organized, that he ought to withdraw this resolution, that a new committee should be appointed that can organize and function within the limits of its enabling act?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I perhaps can answer the question. The delay has been due to the fact that the Presidential appointments were not made until within the last 2 or 3 weeks.

Mr. MICHENER. That is no excuse.

Speaking further to the same subject, I was a member of a joint commission several years ago considering certain matters relating to railroad retirement legislation—a joint commission of three members from the House and three from the Senate, with three members from the outside appointed by the President. The law only passed the Congress because this Commission was to make recommendations as to changes in the new law. The President refused and failed to appoint his three members, including the chairman, until about 2 weeks before the end of the session, and like the Commission in this resolution that Commission died at the end of the session. When the matter came up, as this matter has, objection was made. The Commission therefore died a natural death because the President did not want the Commission to function. Does not the President want this Commission to function?

Mr. BLOOM. We tried to get the committee together, but at this season of the year it just proved impossible.

Mr. MICHENER. You could not get them together if the President had not appointed his members, could you?

Mr. BLOOM. Since the President appointed his members of the Commission we tried to get them together. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] and I conferred several times, but we were unable to get the committee together to have the first organization meeting. So we thought we would ask for the passage of this resolution permitting the committee to file their report by February 15 instead of January 1.

Mr. MICHENER. Who were the members of the Commission appointed by the President?

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Stuart G. Gibboney, Mr. Breckinridge Long, Mr. Randolph H. Perry, Dr. John L. Newcomb, Dr. Fiske Kimball, Mr. William Gibbs McAdoo, Mr. Lamar Hardy, and Mr. F. Harold Dubord. These eight were appointed by the President. Senators GLASS and BYRD, of Virginia; Senator BARKLEY, of Kentucky; and Senator VAN NUYS, of Indiana, were appointed from the Senate; Representative SMITH of Virginia; Representative COX, of Georgia; Representative CULKIN, of New York, and myself were appointed from the House. There are 16 members on the Commission in all.

Mr. MICHENER. This resolution does not give any additional authority and requires no funds?

Mr. BLOOM. No. It merely extends the time within which they may file their preliminary report.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—as I understand it, we have been 8 years now celebrating the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of George Washington. I sincerely trust that in this celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the author of the Declaration of Independence and founder of the Democratic Party we will not only make it brief, but make it carry that simplicity and economy that Jefferson would advocate if he had anything to say in the matter. In other words, let us make it really and truly Jeffersonian.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Regardless of whatever action may be taken on the request of the gentleman from New York, will not the authority of the Commission expire with the end of this session?

Mr. BLOOM. No; it merely extends the time within which the committee may file its report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to answer that, not having the enabling legislation before the Chair. The gentleman from New York may be able to answer the gentleman.

Mr. BLOOM. No, I do not believe it will, but the idea is that it would be rather difficult to get a report before the committee is fully organized. Most of the Members appointed have been busy. This is not my resolution, I may say, it is a resolution introduced originally by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH]. What we are trying to do is get the full committee together before filing our report. All we are asking is that we be permitted to have until February 15 to file a report. Nothing at all is involved in this resolution as far as money is concerned.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is the committee going to be alive after January 3?

Mr. BLOOM. Very much alive.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Very much?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That will be the first time it has shown any signs of life.

Mr. BLOOM. It has shown signs of life, but we want to get the full committee together before filing the report and get them to approve it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the time is long enough, and I object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short article from the Christian Science Monitor of December 26, on the Wide Horizon; the Grange Shows the Way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a special order heretofore entered, the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 7½ minutes.

DO NOT FOLLOW THE COMMUNIST PROGRAM TO PRESERVE DEMOCRACY

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and also to insert in the Appendix of the RECORD an article, including a newspaper advertisement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, it will be recalled that at one time Earl Browder, former Presidential candidate of the Communist Party, more recently convicted and sentenced to prison, made the following statement:

We industrial unionists are going to take over the factories some day, for three very good reasons:
1. Because we need them.
2. Because we want them.
3. Because we have the power to get them.

More recently, others have announced in a somewhat different way a like purpose. More than a hundred thousand men are regularly employed by the Ford Motor Co., which operates on an open-shop basis. Not long ago, Philip Murray, president of the C. I. O., announced that the C. I. O. had the essentials—meaning the men and the money—to compel Ford workers to join the C. I. O. in order to hold their jobs.

There is little, if any, difference in principle between taking over factories by force, as the C. I. O. and its communistic allies did in the sit-down strikes, and by picket lines, show of force, and intimidation compelling employees to divide their pay checks with a labor union in order that they may continue at their jobs.

In the one instance, there is an unlawful taking and holding of the property of the employer by force. In the other, employees are deprived of their property, that is, a job, and the opportunity to work until they have agreed to give a part of their earnings to a union. Neither course has back of it either moral or legal justification.

Within the week another move in this same direction has been made by Walter Reuther, who claims that the motor industry has productive facilities which are not being used. He has requested the President to take over that portion of the motor industrial plant which, in his opinion, is not being used to full capacity.

Such suggestion, if carried out, would accomplish the demand earlier made by Browder, the Communist. Reuther does not promise that if these industrial plants are taken over American citizens will have opportunity to work therein. Undoubtedly he will insist, as he is now insisting, that every man employed in those plants first join and pay a fee to the U. A. W. A., which Reuther represents, so that he and those like him may wax fat on the earnings of the men who toil with their hands.

It should not be forgotten that Walter Reuther and his brother, Victor, at one time made a trip to Russia, where they studied subversive activities and revolutionary tactics. Nor should it be forgotten that their purpose seemed to be, when addressing their so-called comrades here in America, to inculcate in them a desire to "fight for a Soviet America."

Walter Reuther claims to speak for the U. A. W. A., affiliated with the C. I. O. Yesterday's press carried the information that at Milwaukee the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co., which has an order for some $18,000,000 worth of turbine and shafting for the United States Navy, has been told by the C. I. O. automobile workers' union local that the plant will be shut down if two members of an A. F. of L. union are restored to their jobs.

Do not forget that in the summer of 1939, for more than 40 days, a U. A. W. A. local at Detroit, Reuther's home city, and where he and Thomas claim to be in charge, defied the United States Navy and held up the delivery of material necessary for national defense.

Just as long as the President listens to these men, gives serious consideration to their plans, patriotic Americans will doubt his sincerity. What is to be gained by a Presidential appeal to American citizens to get behind the national-defense program, to make sacrifices for its completion, when at the same time organizations with political influence are permitted to enormously increase the cost of that program and at times bring it to a standstill?

How can the President expect patriotic Americans to join wholeheartedly with him while he harbors and listens to those who would render all our efforts futile?

The greater danger to American democracy, notwithstanding all the propaganda of the warmongers, to those who want to see it lies right here in America.

The President made no effort to combat the sit-down strikes, which were nothing less than rebellion against the enforcement of our laws. He has done nothing to protect American workingmen from being deprived of their jobs. He, so far as we know, is doing nothing to prevent interference with our national-defense program, and it is the height of hypocrisy for him to tell the American people that danger threatens us from abroad; that to save ourselves we must prepare our national defense, and then to let an organization within this country prevent men who are able and who are willing, men who are anxious and seeking to be put at work on the national-defense program, be denied the opportunity because they either have not the money to meet the demands of a racketeering organization or because they have too much independence of spirit to submit to those demands.

Until the President restores freedom to the American workman, until he throws the force of his office back of the demand of the American people that they be permitted to enjoy the liberties guaranteed to them by the Constitution, many of those who hear his appeal for the democracies abroad will detect in his utterances a note of insincerity.

Let the President make good his words with his acts. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement on present business conditions by M. L. Benedum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a resolution passed by the Committee on the District of Columbia in connection with the departure from this body of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. KENNEDY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOSER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a short magazine article on democracy.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

TWO HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE BIRTH OF THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 623.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

House Joint Resolution 623

Resolved, etc., That section 7 of the joint resolution approved September 24, 1940 (Public Resolution No. 100, 76th Cong.), is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. The Commission shall, on or before the 15th day of February 1941, make a report to the Congress in order that enabling legislation may be enacted."

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, is that the resolution that was before the House a moment ago?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. The one to which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] objected?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. Has the gentleman changed his mind?

Mr. BLOOM. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. If the gentleman from Michigan has changed his mind——

Mr. HOFFMAN. No; I have not changed my mind. Contrary to custom, I have listened to words of wisdom and have come to the conclusion that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] is right about it.

Mr. MICHENER. That is fine.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM]?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article by Mark Sullivan on the duty of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanious consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a poem written by a constituent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATRICK asked and was given permission to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on Thursday, December 26, 1940, present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 8665. An act to provide for the issuance of a license to practice chiropractic in the District of Columbia to Lou Davis.

H. R. 10098. An act to amend section 204 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the termination of Federal control of railroads and systems of transportation; to provide for the settlement of disputes between carriers and their employees; to further amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, as amended, and for other purposes," approved February 28, 1920.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with its previous order, adjourned to meet on Thursday, January 2, 1941, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

2086. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report on all operations and disbursements in the adjustment of claims under the act known as the War Minerals Relief Act, was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII,

Mr. SMITH of Virginia: Special Committee to Investigate the National Labor Relations Board. Report pursuant to House Resolution 258. Resolution creating a select committee to investigate the National Labor Relations Board (Rept. No. 3109). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

9418. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the Kosciusko Rotary Club, Kosciusko, Miss., urging consideration of their resolution with reference to sabotage, un-American and subversive activities in this country; to the Committee on Rules.

9419. Also, petition of the Houston Lions Club, Houston, Tex., urging consideration of their resolution with reference to the Un-American Activities Committee; to the Committee on Rules.

9420. Also, petition of the city of Dallas, Tex., urging consideration of their resolution with reference to Federal income tax; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

9421. Also, petition of the Washington Committee for Democratic Action, Washington, D. C., urging consideration of their resolution with reference to House bills 10703 and 10709; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

9422. Also, petition of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, Washington, D. C., urging consideration of their resolution with reference to the national emergency; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

9423. Also, petition of the American Legion, Henry H. Houston 2d, Post No. 3, Germantown, Philadelphia, urging consideration of their resolution with reference to un-American activities; to the Committee on Rules.

9424. Also, petition of the Galveston Chamber of Commerce, Galveston, Tex., urging consideration of their resolution with reference to the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway and power project; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 2, 1941

(Legislative day of Tuesday, November 19, 1940)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O God most high and wonderful, before whose mind the past and future meet in our eternal now, while we are but creatures of shifting time, to whom the past is soon forgotten, from whom the future is completely veiled: Forgive our frenzied, ineffectual strivings, the crushing cares brought on by lack of vision as we attempt to hurry on the dawn or thrust unhallowed hands across the pattern Thou art weaving.

And now, like men of old, direct our search to the simple things of life, to the open books of nature and the human heart, that we may find freedom and the truth at the feet of Him who kept His heart unaged through all His years of earthly life, and who liveth now forevermore, Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Monday, December 30, 1940, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

CREDENTIALS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the credentials of DENNIS CHAVEZ, duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of New Mexico a Senator from that State for the term beginning January 3, 1941, which were read and ordered to be filed.

He also laid before the Senate the credentials of DAVID I. WALSH, duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Massachusetts a Senator from that State for the term beginning January 3, 1941, which were read and ordered to be filed.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I present the credentials of Hon. HARLEY M. KILGORE, United States Senator-elect from West Virginia, and ask that they be filed and noted in the RECORD.

The credentials of HARLEY M. KILGORE, duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of West Virginia a Senator from that State for the term beginning January 3, 1941, were read and ordered to be filed.

AWARDS OF QUANTITY CONTRACTS FOR THE ARMY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate two letters from the Secretary of War, reporting, pursuant to law, relative to divisions of awards of certain quantity contracts for aircraft, aircraft parts, and accessories thereof entered into with more than one bidder under authority of law, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SPECIAL REPORT OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the chairmen of the Board of Governors and the Conference of Presidents of the Federal Reserve System and the president of the Federal Advisory Council, submitting a special joint report by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the presidents of the Federal Reserve banks, and the Federal Advisory Council relative to the monetary organization of the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIAL

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a petition of sundry citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to guarantee full salaries, less the service pay, to Government employees while serving in the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate letters in the nature of petitions from Alfred M. Kunze, of New Rochelle, N. Y., praying that the Congress fully exercise its constitutional prerogatives, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GREEN. I present a resolution of the City Council of Cranston, R. I., relative to the Federal taxation of municipal bonds, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, That Federal taxation of municipal bonds would cause an increase in interest rates on future municipal borrowings and any increase in interest rates would be an additional burden upon property owners in each city or town and also breaks down the whole constitutional theory of State and municipal sovereignty; and be it further

Resolved, That this city council go on record as opposing any legislation that may be presented to the Congress of the United States subjecting municipal bonds to Federal taxation; and be it further

Resolved, That the mayor be authorized to send a copy of this resolution to the Senators and Representatives from Rhode Island.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that today, January 2, 1941, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 4085. An act for the relief of Max von der Porten and his wife, Charlotte von der Porten;

S. 4227. An act for the relief of Herbert Zucker, Emma Zucker, Hanni Zucker, Dorrit Claire Zucker, and Martha Hirsch; and

TEAMWORK IN NATIONAL DEFENSE—ADDRESS BY SENATOR BARKLEY BEFORE LOUISVILLE BOARD OF TRADE CONFERENCE

[Mr. BARKLEY asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by him at the Louisville Board of Trade Conference, Louisville, Ky., on January 1, 1941, which appears in the Appendix.]

CHRISTMAS EVE ADDRESS BY SENATOR LEE

[Mr. LEE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by him on December 23, 1940, which appears in the Appendix.]

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 623) to extend the date for filing a report by the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Thomas Jefferson, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 4085. An act for the relief of Max von der Porten and his wife Charlotte von der Porten;

S. 4227. An act for the relief of Herbert Zucker, Emma Zucker, Hanni Zucker, Dorrit Claire Zucker, and Martha Hirsch;

S. 4415. An act to amend the act entitled "An act in relation to pandering, to define and prohibit the same and to provide for the punishment thereof," approved June 25, 1910;

H. R. 7965. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Ramsey; and

H. R. 10712. An act to permit the relinquishment or modification of certain restrictions upon the use of lands along the Natchez Trace Parkway in the village of French Camp, Miss.

REPORT OF COMMISSION FOR CELEBRATION OF THE BIRTH OF THOMAS JEFFERSON

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House joint resolution just announced regarding the celebration of the birth of Thomas Jefferson.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 623) to extend the date for filing a report by the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Thomas Jefferson was read twice by its title.

The joint resolution was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is on the calendar no legislative business which we will take up at this time. As I announced at the last session, I desire to have considered the nomination of Mr. Madden to be a judge of the United States Court of Claims. The matter was held up, as we all know, because of the absence of a quorum. I am advised that a quorum of the Senate is in the city, if any Senator desires to insist that a quorum be present when that nomination is under consideration.

I wish, while I am on my feet, to say that when we conclude our business today it is my purpose to move that the Senate recess until 11 o'clock a. m. tomorrow in the regular Chamber of the Senate, which will be ready for us. There may be some unfinished matter that ought to be considered in the last minutes of this expiring Congress. For that purpose, I shall move a recess until 11 o'clock and merge right into the regular session, which will meet at 12 o'clock.

INVOLVEMENT OF AMERICA IN EUROPEAN WAR

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I inquire if the Senator from Kentucky intends to move an executive session? I desire to make a few remarks.

Mr. BARKLEY. I stated that I would move an executive session.

Mr. HOLT. Will the Senator permit me to speak first?

Mr. BARKLEY. It does not matter to me. Perhaps the sooner the Senator makes his remarks the better it will be.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, the President of the United States on last Sunday delivered a fireside chat. He discussed dictatorships, but I cannot find any reference to Soviet Russia. The foreign policy of the President of the United States is war. He knows it; the people do not. It is a process of getting us into war gradually. But now let us look at the difference he drew between Russia and Germany. Why does he draw a distinction between these countries? I shall tell you.

It is said, look at Germany, she invaded Poland. She did, but so did Soviet Russia. The difference was that Russia waited until Poland was on her knees.

It is said, Germany went into Belgium, Holland, and Norway. She did. But so did Russia go into Finland.

It is said, look at Germany; she occupied Austria and Czechoslovakia. She did, but so did Russia occupy Latvia, Lithuania, and Estonia.

It is said, look at the dictatorship control of the subjects of Germany. Certainly that is not a pleasant thing for those of us who believe in democracy and freedom, but can we say that Russia is any better so far as dictatorship is concerned?

But, it is said, Germany has a dictator in Adolf Hitler. So she has, but Russia has a dictator in Joseph Stalin.

Then it is said we are in danger over here because Hitler has written a book called Mein Kampf in which he says he wants to rule the world. I do not agree with that interpretation, but admit it for the sake of discussion; has not Lenin, has not Stalin, and have not all other Russian officials proclaimed their desire for a world revolution, the day of control of communism?

What is the choice between the doctrine of world revolution of Lenin and the doctrine of Hitlerism in Mein Kampf? But the President does not discuss Russia. Hypocritically, he dodges Russian dictatorship, and then becomes very pious when he discusses the dictatorship of Germany.

He says, "But Germany forces labor." So she may, but would you call the forced labor of Russia any better than the forced labor of Germany?

They say, "If Germany wins, she is an enemy of capitalism," and then they refer to what Hitler was supposed to have said at the arms-factory speech. I did not like Hitler's speech at the arms factory; neither did I like Molotoff's speech, or Stalin's speech, or many of the speeches of Lenin in the past. They are all opposed to our system. Why did the President endeavor to distinguish between them? They say Germany is the enemy of Christianity. There are churches in Germany today, although I do not like the pressure put upon any person's religion, because I believe every man has the right to worship God as his conscience dictates; but where are there any churches in Russia today?

The President becomes very indignant at Germany's attack on Christianity, but he can sit by and praise Russia, the known opponent of Christianity.

Oh, such hypocrisy! That is the only name that can be applied to it. What is the difference between the dictatorship of Germany and the dictatorship of Russia in world conditions today? Just two things: First, Germany is fighting England. Russia is not. What else is happening? Germany is a factor against England in world trade. Russia is not. Those are the two answers to why a difference and distinction is drawn by the administration between Russia and Germany—first, because Germany is fighting England; second, because Germany is becoming a factor in competition for world trade.

Show me a charge made by the President against Germany, and I will duplicate it many times in Russia. But, oh, no. Russia is in bed; and England, through Winston Churchill and through Franklin D. Roosevelt, is pulling at the sheets, trying to get into bed with Russia, because the English think it will help them. If we are to destroy dictatorship in the world, as the President indicated in his fireside chat he hopes to do, is he going to stop when Germany is defeated, if she be defeated? Or shall we continue to accept the theory that dictatorship is an enemy of our Government, and continue to fight it in Russia? You know what will happen? You know that this war will stop the day England's fight against competition in world trade is done away with. We have no cause for war with either. The policy of this Government from the beginning until this change has been that the people of a country shall have the right to determine their own government. We have no authority to pass upon all governments of the world.

American boys are to be sent once again, in the next session of Congress—to Europe. Thank God, it was not done in the session which is about to close. They are to be sent over there. You know it, and many people of this country know it. The boys are to be sent over there to engage in another needless, senseless war, not to destroy dictatorship, but to preserve the balance of power and protect world trade.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. HOLT. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. LEE. I believe the President, in his last address, made reference to talk about sending expeditionary troops abroad, and I believe that language he used was that such talk was an untruth.

Mr. HOLT. I want to say to the Senator from Oklahoma that the President has made many statements, such as the statement that he was going to balance the Budget; that he was going to cut expenses 25 percent; that he was going to do this and he was going to do that. I can name a hundred of them. What did he do? Just the opposite. Oh, no; I would rather determine what the President is going to do by his actions rather than his words.

The President said what was stated by the Senator from Oklahoma but you just wait and see what the President will do.

Let me read to you today from a column in the Times-Herald this morning about that very matter. This is what it says in talking about the reaction to the President's speech at the British Embassy:

> In fact, they feel sure there that the President didn't say more because the moment wasn't ripe yet.

Not now; it is not ripe yet. Then here is what the newspaper says, quoting a diplomat:

> It may be different in 2 weeks. Then wait to see Mr. Roosevelt give the punch line.

What is the punch line? American boys. Oh, yes; and the article quotes certain members of our own diplomatic corps. What does it say?

> They thought it was a prelude to war.

Yes; it was a prelude to war, and I am not afraid to stand here and say that the President of the United States wants war; take it or leave it. The policy of the President of the United States has been toward war from the day this war began. I hope the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate or the House, if they deem it wise, will look into the background of American diplomats in Europe preceding this war, and they will find a startling story, a story that may be finally written in the blood of American boys and the destruction of our democracy.

Every time we start talking about that type of an investigation the administration get the jitters, because they know that behind the scenes, with the discussion of William C. Bullitt with Mr. Mandel, to be exact, with Mr. Reynaud, to be exact, was what the United States would do if France got into the war to back up England on the Polish issue; and that is why Reynaud, in desperation when the French troops were on their knees, called out for fulfillment of the promise that had been made; and history will write it, whether you want to admit it now or not. Whether you want to admit it now or not, history will write it. This much of the start of this war has its blame on the present administration of the United States of America. Much of the continuation of this war is due to the administration.

The President says that those who want peace are tools of the dictators. Everybody knows that that statement is maliciously false. I want peace, and I do not like dictators anywhere, be they foreign or domestic. No; what we want is to save America; we want to save it from European power politics.

Why are we going into this war, if we go in? Let me tell you three or four reasons:

First, the President failed to solve the domestic issues. He failed to bring about the prosperity he guaranteed. Therefore he accepts war economy, which he called "fool's gold" in his speech at Chautauqua in 1936. Remember? I wish, when he delivered his fireside chat last Sunday, he had made the same speech he made at Chautauqua, N. Y.

The second main reason why we are going in is because of the international bankers; the international investors want to protect their profits. As ex-Secretary of War Woodring said:

> There is a small clique of international financiers who want the United States to declare war and get into the European mess with everything we have, including our manpower.

The stake is their investment, and they have enough pressure to force this terrible decision.

Many of these were the individuals the President called "economic royalists" a short time ago, but who are now welcomed into the President's conferences when they support his policy of intervention. A short time ago they were dangerous enemies to good government, according to the President, but now he proclaims their devotion to democracy, liberty, and justice.

Did you know that the pious New York Herald Tribune has directors who are interlocked with companies making ammunition with which to kill? You may not have known that. Did you know that was true of the Boston papers also? Did you know that the Chicago Daily News has on its directorate men who are making profits out of the death of boys somewhere? I could continue to cite more of the press who try to say their interest is democracy, but I do not wish to take the time of the Senate.

The English propaganda machine, never asleep, has been spending millions of dollars and has been successful in its contribution to war. Remember the boast of Northcliffe of spending millions for the last one? The President spoke of an unholy alliance, and I do not bow to the President or to anyone else in my love of democracy and my hatred of dictatorship; but I wish to say that if America does go into the war—and God forbid—it will be an unholy alliance of politics with profit. That will be the unholy alliance. But the President says nothing of that.

I wish to make this statement clear: I charge the present administration with partial blame for the beginning of the war. I charge this administration with much blame for the continuation of the war, and I charge this administration with blame for involving America in a needless war.

The President said that the Axis Powers are not going to win. Perhaps not. I should like to see a negotiated peace, because I know that, no matter which side wins in an all-out war, we are not going to have a fair peace treaty written either by Hitler or Churchill. Neither one will write a benevolent peace treaty. We will have a treaty worse than the Versailles Treaty. It will mean another war soon thereafter.

But the President said the Axis Powers are not going to win. Following that to a logical conclusion, what does it mean? Does it mean that if England is being whipped, or is about to be whipped, the United States is going to throw its manpower in to save her? Following the statement to its logical conclusion, we can get nothing else out of it. If material will not win the war, once we accept such a course of action, will not men be sent? If the Axis Powers must be defeated, as the President said, and England cannot defeat them, where will our country enter, and when? The President's speech commits us to a policy of war, and war is not waged without soldiers.

They say it is "our war." "Our war" can lead to but one conclusion. If it is our war, our money will finance it and our soldiers will fight it.

I want Senators to think back on these steps. What were the steps? The British said, "Just give us the right to buy goods. That is all we want." That right was given. Then they came back and said, "Just give us some of your obsolete equipment. That is all we want." That was done. Then they said, "Give us some of your equipment," leaving out the word "obsolete," and that was done. Then they said, "Give us 50 destroyers. That is all that is necessary to tip the scales. That is all we want." And that was done. Then they said, "Just give us some of your flying fortresses, and that is all we will ask." That was done. Now they say, "Just give us credit." Tomorrow they will say, "Just give us the boys," and the day after they will say, "Give us a declaration of war."

We will furnish the money with which to buy the munitions; we will furnish the men to use them, and we will get just what we got in the last war. We will not help democracy in their war. We will perhaps destroy the last democracy on earth. Democracy was the battle cry in the last war. But democracy was not saved. Do you believe Europe was fighting for democracy then?

I wish to say to the Members of the Senate who will serve in the next session of Congress, when Congress will be confronted with this situation, to listen to the words of Johnny in Johnny Got His Gun. Senators remember Johnny, do they not? They remember him—a mere shell of a man—a man with a helpless torso. You remember him. You remember that his arms and his legs and his eyesight were gone, and part of his face was gone. He is one of the boys who was sent forth to save the world for democracy 23 years ago. I quote from the book:

> Let me out of here, let me out. I won't give you any trouble. * * * Take off my nightshirt and build a glass case for me and take me down to the places where people are having fun, where they are on the lookout for freakish things. * * *
> I am the dead-man-who-is-alive. I am the living-man-who-is-dead. * * * I'm the man who made the world safe for democracy. * * *
>
> Believe it or not, this thing thinks and it is alive and it goes against every rule of Nature, although Nature didn't make it so. You know what made it so. Look at its medals, real medals, probably of solid gold. * * * It stinks of glory. * * *
> Take me wherever there are parliaments and diets and congresses and chambers of statesmen. I want to be there when they talk about honor and justice and making the world safe for democracy, and 14 points, and the self-determination of peoples. I want to be there to remind them I haven't got a tongue to stick into the cheek I haven't got, either.
> Put my glass case on the Speaker's desk. * * * Then let them speak of trade policies and embargoes and new colonies and old grudges. Let them debate the menace of the yellow race and the white man's burden and the course of empire. * * *
> But before they vote * * * before they give the order for all the little guys to start killing each other, let the main guy rap his gavel on my case and point down at me and say, Here, gentlemen, is the only issue before this house, and that is, are you for this thing or are you against it?

I hope the Members of the Senate at the next session of the Congress, before they vote for war, will go out to the hospitals and see the shell-shocked veterans passing through a living death, before they send boys once again to save the world for democracy. I say to America, this is not a war for democracy; this is another battle for the balance of power in Europe. This is another war for the control of trade.

I should like to see dictatorships wiped from the earth, but I am not willing to establish dictatorship in my country, a country where my ancestors have lived for almost 300 years, in hope of destroying a dictatorship somewhere else. Our entrance in this war will not eliminate dictatorships. They have their roots in the destroyed economic and social orders of countries. War breeds, not destroys, dictators. The last war, a war called one to save the world for democracy, utterly failed in its stated aim and, to the contrary, created systems of government absolutely contrary to the rule of the people. It is not because certain officials fear dictatorship from the world that they have taken their course of action. It is the best excuse to excuse their actions.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HOLT. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. Just a few moments ago the Senator from Oklahoma called the attention of the Senator from West Virginia to a reputed remark of the President of the United States, and if I understood correctly it was said the President had stated that any reference or statement to the effect that there was any intention to send an American expeditionary force abroad was a deliberate untruth. I understood the Senator from West Virginia to agree that that was said.

Mr. President, I think that in a matter of this moment the President should be quoted correctly.

Mr. HOLT. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. GILLETTE. If the Senator will permit me, I will read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD what the President of the United States said:

> You can therefore nail any talk about sending armies to Europe as deliberate untruth.

Mr. HOLT. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator from Iowa has drawn attention to the distinction between armies and men. There is many an American mother who has a son who is a sailor. But it is said, "Mr. Stephen Early said he did not mean it." If the President did not mean it, why does not the President say so instead of Mr. Stephen Early saying it? "Mr. Stephen Early said so." It was spoken from the citadel, and therefore was accepted as true. There is many an American mother who has a son who is a pilot in the air force.

Armies? Yes; but Mr. Stephen Early said he did not mean that. I say to the President of the United States, "What did you mean? I ask you publicly."

I know the battle that is on, and my colleagues know, too. It is a battle to keep out of war, and there is but one answer. Are you for it or are you against it? If you are for war, you should have the decency to vote for a declaration of war instead of trying to have our country fight an undeclared war, an act of dishonor.

What is the policy of this administration? What did Governor Lehman and Harry Hopkins do at the national convention in Chicago? They tried to have adopted a weasel-worded platform pledge against going to war, which meant nothing to the American boys, and were defeated by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and others.

Let us meet the issue squarely. What is the policy of the administration? When I say this I am not applauding the wrongs committed by the belligerent which the President discusses. Not at all. What is the policy? It is to continue to direct acts against that belligerent until it makes an overt incident against us, and then to say that American property was destroyed, American boys were killed, and the American flag was despoiled, and into the war we will go to protect our honor. The policy is to put a chip on our shoulder and furthermore to go right into the battle and say, "Come on, knock it off."

If we are going into the war, let us be honest. Let us be honorable. Let us not slide in or slip in. For myself, be I a Senator or not, I am against sacrificing American boys on the blood-drenched soil of Europe. That is what the policy of this administration will lead to.

I know some Senators think I should not say this because it may hurt me politically; but, thank God, my conscience is clear today. I have wanted to say these things because I believe them. This is no time to use nice words. This is no time to dodge. This is no time to think of what is wise politically. This is the time to save American boys from a needless grave. This is the time to speak for America. I have said things before that some Senators did not like, but I have told the truth. My conscience and my judgment tell me today that America is on the road to war, and that there is only one way to stop it. That is for the American people to stop it. But the American people are not consulted in plunging this Nation into the holocaust. They will pay the penalty in treasure, in blood, and in death, and democracy will not be saved in the world by our entrance into the war. I want the next session of Congress to save America from Americans who would destroy it in a war in Europe.

REFUGEES FROM EUROPE AND ASIA

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, in these days when the horrors of war are forcing great hosts of innocent men, women, and children to seek refuge from the disasters that have overwhelmed Europe and Asia, our attention goes increasingly to those who have come to our own shores. Many of these have unusual contributions to offer because of their brilliant intellect and genius. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer of December 30, 1940, which mentions the names of a number of eminent persons who have sought our country as a refuge in recent years.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer of December 30, 1940]

BRILLIANT REFUGEES OUR GAIN

Better than all the gold that has poured from harried and fearful Europe into the dark vaults under Fort Knox, America has received immeasurably valuable gifts from Adolf Hitler, Benito Mussolini, and even grim Joe Stalin.

They are the brilliant refugees—the men of science; the musicians, the artists, the dreamers; the writers; the great thinkers of Europe, flower of her hard-won civilization in this age; a long roll of splendid minds and earnest hearts.

This comes to mind as the United States prepares to open its doors to 1,000 or more new refugees who, for religious or political beliefs, have been forced to flee repeatedly from Hitler and his kind.

From Einstein, retreating early before the brutal, oppressive, and, later on, murderous racial theories of the Nazis, to Maeterlinck and Jules Romains, fleeing Belgium and France before Hitler's hordes, the United States has already received a large number of the most notable men and women in the world.

It is only necessary to mention a few of those in the recent wave who came from France, Belgium, and other countries swept by Nazi forces, and others who have shifted to the United States since 1933, to understand why.

A recent group includes Romains, French author; Maeterlinck, aged Belgian poetic dramatist, famous for The Blue Bird; Henri Bernstein, dramatist also, author of an anti-Nazi play that made his escape a fortunate thing for himself; Andre Giraud (Pertinax), Mme. Genevieve Tabouis, journalists; Pierre Lazareff, former editor of Paris Soir; and Andre Maurois, distinguished biographer. An older list includes Thomas Mann, German writer and Nobel prize winner. A mailing list of Nobel prize holders of recent years would find many marked, "Gone to the land of the free."

The list of musicians of importance, among many others with prospective or unfolding claims to greatness, takes in Bruno Walter, conductor; Lotte Lehman, Paul Hindemith, and Arnold Schonberg, composers; and the Russian-born French citizen, Igor Stravinsky.

Heinrich Breuning, former German Chancelor, is a professor at Harvard, whose faculty likewise includes Walter Gropius and Marcel Breuer, architects; Martin Wagner, noted Old World city planner; Werner Jaeger, equally noted scholar of the classics.

James Franck, physicist, who gained the Nobel prize, is at the University of Chicago. With him are Eduard Benes, Bruno Rossi, also a famed physicist; Guiseppe Borgese, novelist; Ulrich Middeldorf, art teacher. Some others in American colleges include Otto Marburg, former Viennese neurologist, and Fritz Lehmann, economist.

These names of world-wide significance by no means tell the whole story, for here in the University of Pennsylvania and at other colleges nearby and throughout the country there are men and women who are intently pursuing study and research in university laboratories and classrooms; in hospital clinics. Safe in a free country, they are going on with the great tasks of their lives, whatever they may be.

No doubt we have gained some unpleasant and dangerous cargoes of immigrants, some of whom came or were sent to this country because it is free and they were given a mandate to undermine that freedom.

But these others—these leaders of thought and knowledge and achievement—also have come to the United States because it is free and because here their great gifts will not be repressed.

They and those seeking to follow them repeat in a striking sense old phases of our history as a haven to exiles from oppression and darkness in the Old World. The waves of their predecessors, Carl Schurz and the rest, made America greater.

These coming now seem to point to the promise of a saner age that will yet save the best in civilization and with it human freedom.

IDEAL LABOR LEADER

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to a notable editorial from the pen of Dr. Charles Stelzle in the Trades Union News, for December 27, 1940, entitled "Ideal Labor Leader." This is a most interesting interpretation of Moses, who led the children of Israel from bondage. It makes clear how necessary experience and character are at all times and among all people if human life is to be uplifted. We need more men like Moses—men whose souls have been disciplined through long years in the difficult tasks of life, and yet who have not lost the high vision which beckons them to lead to freedom and victory the people from whom they come. I ask unanimous consent to have this editorial printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IDEAL LABOR LEADER

(By Dr. Charles Stelzle)

Moses was the great labor leader who delivered from cruel bondage millions of Israelites who were slaves in Egypt. He might well serve as an example for the modern labor leader. The development of such a leader is always a slow process. For in the labor movement there is so much at stake, and there are so many interests involved, that the raw enthusiast cannot be entrusted with the power.

Enthusiasm there should be, but it must be enthusiasm founded upon intelligence, knowledge, and self-control. It required long years of solitude in the land of Midian to transform the hot-blooded Moses, the adopted son of Pharaoh's daughter, into the modest Moses whose name has become a synonym for meekness. "Learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians," nevertheless he needed the solitary, deep-thinking life of the shepherd on the hillside to prepare him for the great task of leading out into liberty the slaves of the Egyptian ruler.

He came, too, with the consciousness of sure victory because he knew that his cause was just. But, more than that, he was confident because he came in the spirit of a strong moral faith. This emancipation in which he was about to lead was more than an economic deliverance dependent upon brute strength and the ability of a mere man to exercise unusual power. He had back of him the Omnipotent God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, the forefathers of the afflicted Israelites.

The qualities that were so conspicuous in Moses must be found in the modern leader. He must be of the people, for he must understand their needs. He must have had an experience which sobered him, so that he is familiar with the deeper, truer things of life. He must depend not so much upon his speech as upon his character. He must have the power which can come alone through the consciousness that his cause is just, and that back of him, too, as He was back of Moses, stands the God of the common people, who is saying through him, "Let my people go."

I have become convinced that the most valuable element in public life is that which holds to what is worth holding to in the legacy of the past, but is always prepared to seek out the good in the new. Again and again I have come to see the truth of this point of view. We require the balance of the old and the new, the tried and the untried, the accepted, and the ideas not yet become a part of tradition, if we are to find the fullness and the highest glories of life. Particularly we need men of experience as well as of experiment in our public life in this country today.

THE UNITED STATES AND THE WAR IN EUROPE

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I believe no man my age has championed the cause of peace more vigorously, ardently, and sincerely than I. Of course, it never befits any of us to doubt the sincerity of any of the rest of us. We differ only in judgment, not in sincerity.

As I see it, America has only one chance to escape total war. Our only chance of escaping a baptism of blood is England. Today England is the only barrier which is holding back the greatest raging flood of war that has ever been organized and centralized on the face of the earth; and if that dam breaks, America will have war, but we shall have it with the odds heavily against us. It is because I do not want to see any more "Johnnies" in a glass case, as described by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], that I believe we should exert every means within the scope of our announced policy to keep England afloat in order to prevent a baptism of blood for America.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. When the Senator says "every means," does he mean to the extent of going to war if that seems to be advisable?

Mr. LEE. I do not believe that it is necessary to explain my statement. It was rather clear. I was speaking in support of the administration's policy of material aid to England, and that policy has never included going to war. On the contrary, it offers the only practical chance of escaping war.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator said "every means," and I wanted to be certain that every means included going to war.

Mr. LEE. The Senator understands English. I do not advocate going to war. I advocate enough material aid to England to keep her from falling. We have not advocated sending men, but materials. England's critical need has never been for men, but materials. The Senator may be ready to put a wrong interpretation upon what I say, or to find some single phrase at which to jump. But I have never and do not now advocate going to war. I am trying to prevent war from coming to us. The Senator understands English. I never implied a declaration of war. I was speaking of aid to England within the meaning of our present foreign policy, which does not include going to war.

Mr. TAFT. I understand English. When the Senator says he is in favor of adopting "every means" to prevent the defeat of England, as I understood him to say, I take it that would necessarily include going to war if that seemed to be a necessary or desirable means to prevent the defeat of England. I think that is a reasonable conclusion. I do not think I am putting any words in the Senator's mouth. I merely wanted to be sure that that was the proper conclusion to be drawn from his statement.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, we have seen other countries listen to the same kind of talk and reasoning that we have heard here today. Those countries are even now in blackened ruins, with charred buildings, and many new graves, or else they are in slavery with their manpower working at the point of Gestapo pistols. The heavy 70-ton tanks that did much to break the Maginot line last May were manufactured in the plants of Czechoslovakia by once free Czechs who were willing to die for liberty; but they were working at the point of Gestapo pistols. If England falls, then, shipbuilding capacity six times greater than that of the United States will be in the hands of Hitler. He will have a combined navy many times larger than our own. He will have the French, British, Italian, Norwegian, and German Navies, and not a battleship between him and 42,000 miles of American coast line. What would stop him? When his own people are eating black bread mixed with many substitutes for bread, when they are on rations for food, and the richest treasure of all America, with surplus grain and surplus meat and surplus gold is within reach, do you think, Mr. President, that the master mind who planned and executed the most diabolical military scheme in all history would hesitate for a moment to head for South America and Central America where he would be received with open arms? No, we had just as well face the facts.

Other nations listened to the decoy ducks. I like to hunt ducks, but I never hunted with live decoys. Hunters used to tie their live decoys on a pond, and then let them, with their quacking, decoy their fellows to a death trap, just as the quackings of the appeasers today would decoy America to a death trap.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Oklahoma gave expression to a sentence a moment ago which I feel probably he would not want to remain unmodified. I refer to the statement or the implication that if Hitler came across to the Western Hemisphere he would be received by open arms in South and Central America. I think that a statement of that sort ought to be qualified, because I am sure the Senator does not mean that there would be such a reception by the governments of those countries.

Mr. LEE. I did not mean by the governments.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am sure the Senator means by certain elements in South America who may be friendly to the Hitler theories.

Mr. LEE. Exactly, and I thank the Senator, because I did not have that in mind any more than I had in mind to say that I favored going to war when the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] tried to put that implication upon my statement.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Further clearing the statement referred to by the Senator from Kentucky, neither the governments nor the peoples south of the border of the United States are inclined to fall for any program that may be of any benefit to the Axis Powers. However, in those countries, just as in this country, and in England, there might be some forces that would like to see that thing happen.

What I want to make clear is this: Of course, we are apt to blame any country in South America because some foreigner makes trouble within the country, but I venture to say that there are probably more "fifth columnists" in the United States than there are in any Latin American country south of the border.

Mr. LEE. That may be; there are plenty of them in South America and too many in North America. The Nazis and Communist networks are ready, upon the signal of the defeat of England, to spring to the front and with a little aid from Germany start a revolution; and German aid would be ready just as it was in Spain.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LEE. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. According to a more authentic source, the information furnished by the Dies committee, there are plenty of them here within the United States.

Mr. LEE. I do not know about that; I take their statement at face value that there are some; it would be unusual if there were not.

Now, here is one "fifth columnist" who is not in the United States but is sending his stuff to the United States to be printed here. Mr. Carl H. von Wiegand was pro-German in the World War. He has written an article for the Times-Herald of December 29, 1940, which gives the most clever argument I have heard for supporting the peace offensive that has been launched lately. If Dr. Goebbels himself had written it, it could not have been more cleverly done, nor could it have been more helpful to the Nazi cause. His arguments are very clever. He uses statements such as this:

> High American naval officers I've talked with on this tour expressed themselves cautiously as puzzled and even disturbed that Washington, while pursuing a course which may easily lead to war in the Pacific in the coming year, is nevertheless giving Britain priority on planes, ships, and matériels needed by our own Army and Navy if war came suddenly.

That, of course, is the stock argument of the appeasers, that we should keep our aid at home; and he implies, although he does not give any high American naval officer's name, that he has been advised by them that they do not approve our policy of aid to England. Every step the United States has taken with respect to aid to England has been upon the advice of naval and military authorities of this Government. He is hazy about the source of his advice, but he reiterates the argument that it is highly dangerous to our own position that materials of war should be shipped from this country. He carries out the Nazi propaganda to the *n*th degree.

Then after the President's speech he came back with this headline, "Talk dooms early peace, Orient holds," and he gives just as cleverly a worded "fifth columnist" argument as can be found anywhere.

I say that many sincere people in America believe that we should follow a certain route of maintaining peace. I do not question their sincerity any more than I question the sincerity of the decoy ducks out there whose quackings lead the other ducks, their fellows, to a death trap; but I say to you, Mr. President, the same road led countries of Europe to their death. Norway listened to it; Denmark listened to it; Belgium, Luxembourg, and Holland listened to it. If they had united their forces against Hitler they could be having peace and security in Europe today. But they lost their liberty because they listened to the same doctrine from the appeasers which we are asked to follow today. The appeasement offensive was launched in those countries just as it is being launched in this country today, when the appeasers told the Government and people of Norway, "Do nothing, because if you do something, that will get you into war." They did nothing. They got not only war but subjugation. In Belgium they said, "Do nothing or you will get into war." They did nothing, and Belgium got into war. They are making the same argument in this country, "Do nothing, or you will get into war."

To do nothing today means as certain war for the United States as it meant for Belgium and Holland and Norway and Poland and Czechoslovakia and Austria, and as it is meaning war for Rumania today; and they would have us stand back and see England fall, the last barrier between Hitler's troops and American youth. The only barrier that is holding back Hitler's hell divers today is a few youths handling Spitfires, handling Hurricanes; and every time one of those eagles of England falls with a broken wing there is one less champion of liberty in the world. Every time there is another Coventry there is one less citadel of liberty in the world, and the surge of war is just that much closer to America.

So far as I am concerned, England has paid her debt. She has paid it in blood, in the blood of her own youth, and she is giving us time to arm. Why, if England falls today, how well prepared are we? Hitler has more soldiers in a sideshow marching through Rumania today than we have in arms in the United States; and yet there are those who would say to us that we should stand back and let England fall, the only barrier between America and war. They hold themselves up as champions of peace, and would brand those of us who support that one dam which is holding back the flood of war as warmongers.

Yes, England is fighting. We need not be afraid the English are going to surrender the materials which we send them. They have given us the best hostages any nation can give. They have sent their own flesh and blood to America as hostages that they will fight. There has been no indication that England will not use the materials we send to her to hold back this flood tide of war.

Why, when the Germans scuttled the Graf Spee the British Lord of the Admiralty said:

> If that had been a British man-of-war she would have gone down with her colors flying and her guns blazing.

Another British lord said the English people would rather die on their feet than live on their knees. That is what they are fighting for; and now we have a peace offensive, telling us to ask England what she is fighting for, and to ask Germany what she is fighting for.

Go to the blackened ruins of Poland and ask those people what they fought for. Go to France, prostrate in slavery, and then ask England what she is fighting for. Go to Belgium, where their countryside was left strewn with helpless victims of Hitler's "blitzkrieg" and then ask England what she is fighting for. Go to every place that has been blighted by the touch of Nazi force and ask England what she is fighting for. They would have us weaken England by saying, "You give up and quit."

Hitler is virtually at war with America today. He is making war on us economically now. He is making war on us politically now. He is against everything we stand for. He is making war on us in every sense except in a military sense.

Only one step remains for him to be making war on us in a military sense, and that step is to defeat England. He would like to have us fall for the old chloroform he used on the other nations of Europe when he said, "You stay off. I am a friend of yours. Divide and conquer"; and he wants us to fall for that, as the little democracies in Europe fell for it.

I do not challenge the sincerity or patriotism of any of my colleagues who disagree with me, but I do challenge their judgment. You have been on the wrong side all the time.

First, there was the clarion statement that rang through the land when you said, "There is not going to be any war." There was war, and you were wrong.

Then came the next one: "The war in Europe is a phony war." It is not a phony war, and you were wrong.

Then you said that Norway and Denmark had not been in war for over 100 years and neutrality would keep them out of this war, and you were wrong again.

You have been wrong every step of the way. Hitler has broken every promise he has made, and, so far, he has kept every threat he has made. He said he would dominate this country. He said he would have storm troopers in America that degenerate Yankeedom could not challenge. He said as to South America, "We shall build another Germany there." Are we, by the policy of inaction and delay, going to lose the one and only chance we have to protect the blood of American youths from the "blitzkriegs" of Germany?

Suppose it takes wealth; it is cheaper than the blood of American boys. Everybody knows that if England stands America will not be in war, and everybody, whether he admits it or not, I believe down in his heart knows that if England falls there will be war for America. I believe the man who advocates all possible aid to England is the real, true champion of peace, and I believe the man who opposes aid to England and asks to place our faith in neutrality is a decoy who would lead America to the same fate which befell the democracies of Europe. They placed their faith in neutrality and refused to join forces against Hitler, and where are they now? Mr. President, that road leads to war, and those who advocate that America follow it, sincere and innocent though they be, are decoying their fellows to a death trap.

We cannot have peace by simply denouncing war. It takes two to make peace, but only one to make war. We can follow a good-neighbor policy only so long as other nations follow a similar good-neighbor policy. But when war ceases to be a placid lake which you can plunge into or stay out of at will and becomes a raging flood which threatens to engulf the world, then the choice is not merely peace or war: it is one of danger or less danger—and the one of less danger is to maintain the only barrier that stands between us and that raging torrent. Therefore aid to England offers less danger of war than to let England fall and us face the axis alone.

I thank the Senate.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the President was misquoted, and the President was partially quoted. I am sure the RECORD ought to state what the President said in its true significance.

The A. E. F. was not made up merely of armies, of soldiers, as we understand that term. The A. E. F. was made up of armies, of soldiers, of sailors, of the naval forces, and the air forces. All those forces constituted the expeditionary forces. I think, for the sake of the RECORD, we ought to have in it, in order that there may be no quibble about it, what the President said, and what I think cannot be misunderstood by anybody who wants to be fair about the matter—and I am sure most of us do.

This is what the President said, in its entirety, in that paragraph:

> There is no demand for sending an American expeditionary force outside our own borders. There is no intention by any member of your Government to send such a force. You can, therefore, nail any talk about sending armies to Europe as deliberate untruth.

I think the statement, when read in its entirety, would be understood by any fair-minded person to mean an expeditionary force which would include the armed forces of America.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 623) to extend the date for filing a report by the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Thomas Jefferson, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

AUTHORITY TO SIGN ENROLLED BILLS, ETC.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 341) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

> Resolved, That notwithstanding the final adjournment on expiration of the Seventy-sixth Congress, the President of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to sign any enrolled bill or joint resolution duly passed by the two Houses and which has been examined and found truly enrolled by the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the Senate; and the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to receive any message from the House of Representatives, subsequent to said adjournment, relating to business of the Seventy-sixth Congress.

SERVICE OF SENATOR KING AS PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, when we conclude our business for the day I assume we will recess until some hour tomorrow, before 12 o'clock. It is my understanding that at the session tomorrow the Vice President will be present and presiding, and this is the last day on which we will meet in this historic Chamber. I do not wish to indulge in any fulsome remarks about the pleasure it has afforded us to meet here for a number of weeks in the historical setting which constitutes this Chamber.

I wish to express a personal word of appreciation to the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], who has presided with such dignity and fairness and ability during the recent weeks during which he has been the President pro tempore of the Senate. Inasmuch as he will not preside after today, I assume, I wish to send forward a resolution and ask for its present consideration and adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 342), as follows:

> Resolved, That the Senate expresses its appreciation of the courtesy, fairness, and impartiality shown by the President pro tempore, Hon. WILLIAM H. KING, Senator from Utah, in the performance of his duties as Presiding Officer, and tenders him its sincere thanks.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I assume the privilege of putting the question, and I ask all Senators who favor the resolution to rise.

[The Senators present rose.]

Mr. BARKLEY. The resolution is unanimously adopted, and I congratulate the President pro tempore, and I am sure I speak for all the Members of this body when I say that we wish him long life, happiness, and prosperity in whatever field he may enter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. KING). To my dear colleagues, it is needless to say that I greatly appreciate the manifestations of confidence and good will of Senators as expressed in the resolution presented by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. I am grateful to him for his gracious words of commendation and esteem. I avail myself of this opportunity to extend to my colleagues my sincere thanks for the high honor bestowed upon me in selecting me for this position of trust and responsibility—a position which has been held by many eminent men from John Langdon in the First Congress to Key Pittman, our lamented friend and colleague whose passing we deeply mourn.

I will soon surrender my commission as your Presiding Officer and likewise the commission given to me by my beloved State of Utah. For a quarter of a century I have had the honor of representing my State in this great legislative body, and have appreciated the opportunities afforded me of associating with distinguished and able statesmen representing the States of our Nation. Many of those with whom I have associated in this legislative body, after years of service and fidelity to their country have gone to their great reward; others still remain, giving important and valuable service to their country; but a very few—only six—of those who were in the Senate when I entered it in 1917 remain. It would have afforded me satisfaction if opportunity had been presented to place in the RECORD my high regard, and, indeed, affection, for those who have been Members of this body during the quarter of a century that I have been a Member of it.

Our country in every period of its existence has been fortunate in having patriots and statesmen who have served their country in the Senate of the United States. Their memories will be cherished and the contributions which they have made in behalf of their country will ever be remembered by a grateful people.

In leaving this body I extend to my colleagues my sincere thanks for the many courtesies which I have received at their hands; for their uniform kindness and consideration; and for the many evidences of their friendship. In leaving the Senate I am assured of a continuation of their regard and esteem, and I shall now and in the future cherish the many evidences of our associations. And to those who will soon enter upon service in this body I extend felicitations and congratulations. They will have important duties to perform and will be called upon to meet heavy responsibilities.

I am particularly appreciative of the unfailing kindness of the Democratic leader, Mr. BARKLEY. He has been considerate and in many ways has evinced his friendship for me.

I regret that the minority leader, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], is temporarily detained from the Senate. For nearly a quarter of a century we have been colleagues and friends. For him I entertain a very high regard.

In my service in the Senate I have discovered that political differences do not affect friendships. Lasting friendships are here formed between persons of different political and economic views, and Senators, in departing from the Senate, carry with them the good will and esteem, not only of those of the political party to which they belong, but also those who are members of different political parties.

The Senate of the United States from the organization of this Republic has played a highly important part in our Government.

It is more than a legislative body, and it performs duties highly important for our country in every sphere of governmental activity.

It is not necessary for me—and the occasion would not warrant—to enlarge upon the vital part which the Senate plays in our constitutional system. It is sufficient to say that it has met the responsibilities which have devolved upon it, and vindicated its claim as an indispensable and vital part of our organic system. In my opinion those who believe in liberty—in constitutional government—in the essence and spirit of democracy, will acclaim the Senate of the United States as one of the greatest—if not the greatest—single legislative body that is to be found in any government. In using the words "legislative body," I include those functions of the Senate which some may claim are not purely legislative. But the Senate has justified the esteem and statesmanship of the founders of this Republic, who provided in the Senate a body essential for the safeguard of American institutions and for the political welfare of the people. While its purely legislative duties are vast, it has important responsibilities in dealing with treaties and appointments to public service. The Senate has been and must be, in the discharge of its responsibilities, courageous and independent, jealous of its prerogatives and of the just powers with which it is endowed.

In this period of world disorder this Republic is called upon to occupy a place of influence and power. The conflicts in other parts of the world will produce repercussions in this Republic—which is dedicated to peace and liberty—and waves of war which are beating against the foundations of most governments may not regard the Western Hemisphere, including this Republic, as immune from their attacks. But we know that whatever storms may arise, this Republic, favored by a divine Providence, will be protected and preserved from all assaults from evil forces, and, standing upon the glittering heights of the New World, it will prove a beacon light to the downtrodden and oppressed of other lands and will inspire them to meet all the forces of wrong and oppression with courage and undying faith.

The principles of democracy which are recognized in this Republic are not subtle or mysterious. They are fundamental and eternal and adapted to all conditions and climes and to the various changes in human institutions. They are concerned in human freedom, in the liberation of the mind and the soul and the body of man from every form of tyranny and oppression. They seek the emancipation of the mind of man from moral or spiritual servitude and demand his freedom from every form of slavery or despotism.

The founders of this Republic recognized the divinity of man and sought to provide conditions, political and economic, wherein freedom would be enjoyed and justice and equal opportunities be afforded to all persons.

The most precious possession of democracy is that of personal and individual liberty; indeed, the essence of democracy is liberty. Mazzini stated that—

> Democracy is the progress of all, through all, under the leadership of the best and the wisest.

The founders of this Republic believed that moral and spiritual forces obtain in human conduct, and should govern human relations, and that out of the disorder and confused conditions of society, ultimately a reign of order, peace, justice, and liberty would be the inheritance of man. They believe that the future belonged to the people, and through education and religion and intellectual and moral development, good government would be enjoyed by all and civil, political, and religious liberty be the inheritance of mankind. They believed in the existence of the fundamental principles of justice, founded not only in reason, but in divine law; and, so believing, they believed in the competency of the people to govern themselves. President Wilson stated that he believed in these things; he believed in the democracy not only of America but of all other people that wish and intend to govern and control their own affairs.

But there are dark clouds in the world today that shake the faith of many in the future of democracy. Despots and dictators abound; war, cruel and relentless, exists in the world, and some nations and peoples give themselves to the destruction of the fine things of life; of the precious treasures—material, moral, and spiritual—which have come down from the past. Democracy proclaims not only spiritual salvation but the temporal salvation of man, and emphasizes the view that man's salvation comes from himself. Governments can aid but the Kingdom of Heaven, as well as the making of liberty, lies within the human soul. The success of democracy rests upon the breadth of its base. Henry George stated that:

> Society is not safe if the social and political pyramid rests upon its apex.

Democracy, to be successful, presupposes not alone political and civil equality but a high state of intellectualism. Democracy lives not in dungeons but in the full glare of the sunlight. It is hammered out upon the anvil of experience through the intellectual processes, and where there is freedom of thought and speech each one must be a factor.

These generalizations are offered because of the conflicting forces in our own land. The challenges which are being made to economic and political policies to world conditions cast their shadows over this Republic. In this hour of what I have called confusion, it is in my opinion important that the American people should feel that they are part of this world, and that world conflicts affect and indeed menace our institutions. In my opinion there are problems of greater magnitude which our country will be called upon to meet than those which confronted our Nation during the period of the World War. There are, of course, differences of opinion as to the danger to democratic governments, including this Republic, but I entertain the view that there are threatening conditions in many parts of the world which do and will affect our economic condition, our peace, if not our security. The world is on fire as I have indicated, and we may not escape the conflagration. This is a period when unity is required among the American people. I am sure that those who love our country, experience concern as to the future, and desire to pursue a course which will make for peace and for the preservation of this Republic. We may not see eye to eye in all matters, but I believe that deep down in the hearts of the American people there is a feeling that we are not immune from all dangers, and that whatever steps are necessary to be taken shall be taken to preserve constitutional government and democratic institutions.

This is a time for unity, a united purpose to defend democracy.

I desire to pay tribute to the President of the United States who in this period of confusion and danger is discharging the responsibilities resting upon him with honor, and a sense of fidelity to the Constitution, and to the best interests of the American people. He is, as I have indicated, a man of honor, a sincere Christian, and is devoted to the maintenance of democratic institutions and the preservation of this Republic. He desires peace as much as any other person in our country, and will exercise the authority of his high office for the promotion of peace and for the welfare and happiness of the American people; and in so doing he will make contribution as far as possible to world peace, and for the welfare of the peoples of the world.

I hope I may be pardoned for making these observations. They are, in part, due to the fact that criticism has been leveled against the Chief Executive. I repeat that the responsibility resting upon him, as well as the Senate and the House of Representatives, is and will continue to be very heavy—greater, as I have indicated, than that which rested upon the executive and legislative branches of the Government at any period in the past.

I sincerely hope that a divine Providence which inspired the founders of this Republic and guided it in its younger days will look upon the people not only of this Republic but of the world, in mercy and compassion and will mitigate their sorrows and pour out the spirit of peace and fraternity so that the dangers and evils that beset the world may be banished and the dawn of a new day come when the blessings of peace and love may be visited upon all peoples.

I entertain the belief that peace and justice and liberty were designed by the Eternal Father to be enjoyed by all of His children, and that He looks with compassion upon their sufferings, and is ready and willing to pour out blessings of peace and happiness to peoples everywhere who seek Him.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, we of the minority have been happy spectators of all that has occurred in the glorification of the great service of the President pro tempore of the Senate, the distinguished senior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. I think it is proper for me to say, assuming that I act for the minority in doing so, that we will miss all those colleagues of ours, on both sides of the aisle, who are terminating their service for the country at this time. On our side of the aisle we are losing distinguished statesmen whose absence will be greatly regretted.

There is a special appropriateness in recognizing the termination of so great a service and so long a career as that of the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], and for the minority I wish him a happy future, and the continuation of his great service to his fellow men.

PROPOSAL OF FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM AGAINST INFLATION

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, the Federal Reserve System is to be highly commended for its splendid unanimous special report to the Congress on the subject of anti-inflation precautions. To adopt and implement the suggested course will be to take a long step in the direction in which we ought to move without further delay. The prompt adoption of the plan by Congress should go a long way to allaying public fears of currency and credit inflation.

Without in any way detracting from the praise which the present plan deserves, I wish to point out that in my opinion it should go at least one important step further. The report makes it crystal clear that the source of any present concern about possible inflation is the huge pile of excess reserves in the Federal Reserve System, which excess reserves the plan aims to reduce. Yet the conspicuous fact implied throughout, yet not specifically mentioned in the System's special report, is that the existence of these excess reserves is due to our national policy of buying all gold and silver offered from whatever sources, foreign or domestic, and converting it into reserve money.

In other words, the System's report to Congress seeks to deal with the effects, yet leaves in operation the ultimate cause of our monetary headache. By adopting the System's plan the monetary effects will be ameliorated, but the economic cost of our bullion policies is left to burden us.

One most obvious step to take is to stop buying gold and silver, at least from countries against which we are in other ways spending millions and millions to bring economic pressure. It ought to be thoroughly understood by the public that any device for sterilizing the inflow of gold and silver from such countries not only involves a continuing cost to us but—and this is far more important—it puts millions of dollars into the hands of such countries to use in waging aggressive war against other countries or to spend here in "fifth column" activities.

The special report of the Federal Reserve System would remove nearly all the emergency monetary powers bestowed by Congress on the administration in 1933 and 1934, or by subsequent extensions. Doubtless through oversight the System's plan makes no mention of the President's power to revalue our silver by reducing the legal content of the standard silver dollar. The present monetary stock of silver in this country is valued at more than $4,000,000,000. By making a 59-cent silver dollar, as he now has the power to do, the President could issue more than $2,760,000,000, unless that power, too, is removed. And the $2,760,000,000 would also be reserve material.

There is also the power of the administration to arrange for the sale to the Federal Reserve banks of $3,000,000,000 of Government securities. This power, too, is unnecessary and should now be repealed.

Finally, no mention is made in the special report of the domestic-silver program. If there is no monetary need to monetize foreign silver, there can be no monetary need to monetize domestic newly mined silver. To omit treatment of that subject is an inconsistency in an otherwise splendid report. A country that needs to bend every ounce of energy toward national defense cannot afford to spend annually even a few millions of dollars wastefully.

In general, it must be remembered that the value of any measure such as the heads of the Federal Reserve System now propose depends on its manner of execution. The problems caused by excess reserves cannot, like an oil burner, be handled simply by thermostat adjustment. Nor is there, unfortunately, any complete assurance that mass psychology with reference to inflation can be permanently guided from Washington.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the splendid report be made a part of the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPECIAL REPORT TO THE CONGRESS BY THE BOARD OF GOVERNORS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM, THE PRESIDENTS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS, AND THE FEDERAL ADVISORY COUNCIL

For the first time since the creation of the Federal Reserve System, the Board of Governors, the presidents of the 12 Federal Reserve banks, and the members of the Federal Advisory Council representing the 12 Federal Reserve districts present a joint report to the Congress.

This step is taken in order to draw attention to the need of proper preparedness in our monetary organization at a time when the country is engaged in a great defense program that requires the coordinated effort of the entire Nation. Defense is not exclusively a military undertaking, but involves economic and financial effectiveness as well. The volume of physical production is now greater than ever before and under the stimulus of the defense program is certain to rise to still higher levels. Vast expenditures of the military program and their financing create additional problems in the monetary field which make it necessary to review our existing monetary machinery and to place ourselves in a position to take measures, when necessary, to forestall the development of inflationary tendencies attributable to defects in the machinery of credit control. These tendencies, if unchecked, would produce a rise of prices, would retard the national effort for defense and greatly increase its cost, and would aggravate the situation which may result when the needs of defense, now a stimulus, later absorb less of our economic productivity. While inflation cannot be controlled by monetary measures alone, the present extraordinary situation demands that adequate means be provided to combat the dangers of overexpansion of bank credit due to monetary causes.

The volume of demand deposits and currency is 50 percent greater than in any other period in our history. Excess reserves are huge and are increasing. They provide a base for more than doubling the existing supply of bank credit. Since the early part of 1934, $14,000,000,000 of gold, the principal cause of excess reserves, has flowed into the country, and the stream of incoming gold is continuing. The necessarily large defense program of the Government will have still further expansive effects. Government securities have become the chief asset of the banking system, and purchases by banks have created additional deposits. Because of the excess reserves, interest rates have fallen to unprecedentedly low levels. Some of them are well below the reasonable requirements of an easy-money policy and are raising serious long-term problems for the future well-being of our charitable and educational institutions, for the holders of insurance policies and savings-bank accounts, and for the national economy as a whole.

The Federal Reserve System finds itself in the position of being unable effectively to discharge all of its responsibilities. While the Congress has not deprived the System of responsibilities or of powers, but in fact has granted it new powers, nevertheless, due to extraordinary world conditions, its authority is now inadequate to cope with the present and potential excess-reserve problem. The Federal Reserve System therefore submits for the consideration of the Congress the following five-point program:

1. Congress should provide means for absorbing a large part of existing excess reserves, which amount to $7,000,000,000, as well as such additions to these reserves as may occur. Specifically, it is recommended that Congress—

a. Increase the statutory Reserve requirements for demand deposits in banks in central Reserve cities to 26 percent, for demand deposits in banks in Reserve cities to 20 percent, for demand deposits in country banks to 14 percent, and for time deposits in all banks to 6 percent.

b. Empower the Federal Open Market Committee to make further increases of Reserve requirements sufficient to absorb excess reserves, subject to the limitation that Reserve requirements shall not be increased to more than double the respective percentages specified in paragraph a.

(The power to change Reserve requirements, now vested in the Board of Governors, and the control of open-market operations, now vested in the Federal Open Market Committee, should be placed in the same body.)

c. Authorize the Federal Open Market Committee to change reserve requirements for central reserve city banks, or for reserve city banks, or for country banks, or for any combination of these three classes.

d. Make reserve requirements applicable to all banks receiving demand deposits regardless of whether or not they are members of the Federal Reserve System.

e. Exempt reserves required under paragraphs a, b, and d from the assessments of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

2. Various sources of potential increases in excess reserves should be removed. These include the power to issue three billions of greenbacks, further monetization of foreign silver, the power to issue silver certificates against the seigniorage, now amounting to one and a half billion dollars on previous purchases of silver. In view of the completely changed international situation during the past year, the power further to devalue the dollar in terms of gold is no longer necessary or desirable and should be permitted to lapse. If it should be necessary to use the stabilization fund in any manner which would affect excess reserves of banks of this country, it would be advisable if it were done only after consultation with the Federal Open Market Committee, whose responsibility it would be to fix reserve requirements.

3. Without interfering with any assistance that this Government may wish to extend to friendly nations, means should be found to prevent further growth in excess reserves and in deposits arising from future gold acquisitions. Such acquisitions should be insulated from the credit system and, once insulated, it would be advisable if they were not restored to the credit system except after consultation with the Federal Open Market Committee.

4. The financing of both the ordinary requirements of Government and the extraordinary needs of the defense program should be accomplished by drawing upon the existing large volume of deposits rather than by creating additional deposits through bank purchases of Government securities. We are in accord with the view that the general debt limit should be raised; that the special limitations on defense financing should be removed; and that the Treasury should be authorized to issue any type of securities (including fully taxable securities) which would be especially suitable for investors other than commercial banks. This is clearly desirable for monetary as well as fiscal reasons.

5. As the national income increases a larger and larger portion of the defense expenses should be met by tax revenues rather than by borrowing. Whatever the point may be at which the Budget should be balanced, there cannot be any question that whenever the country approaches a condition of full utilization of its economic capacity, with appropriate consideration of both employment and production, the Budget should be balanced. This will be essential if monetary responsibility is to be discharged effectively.

In making these five recommendations, the Federal Reserve System has addressed itself primarily to the monetary aspects of the situation. These monetary measures are necessary, but there are protective steps, equally or more important, that should be taken in other fields, such as prevention of industrial and labor bottlenecks, and pursuance of a tax policy appropriate to the defense program and to our monetary and fiscal needs.

It is vital to the success of these measures that there be unity of policy and full coordination of action by the various Governmental bodies. A monetary system divided against itself cannot stand securely. In the period that lies ahead a secure monetary system is essential to the success of the defense program and constitutes an indispensable bulwark of the Nation.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORT OF A COMMITTEE—ROBERT WATT

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. From the Committee on Education and Labor I report favorably the nomination of Robert Watt, of Massachusetts, to be a member of the Federal Board for Vocational Education. This nomination will only hold until the middle of July next, and I hope to have it acted upon today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received, and the nomination will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

CIVIL AERONAUTICS BOARD—EDWARD P. WARNER

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have a telegram from the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], chairman of the Committee on Commerce, in which he asks me to report on his behalf from the Committee on Commerce the nomination of Mr. Edward P. Warner to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board. Acting in behalf of the Senator from North Carolina, I ask unanimous consent that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the nomination, and that it be taken up and acted upon at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I inquire, for the purpose of identification, whether this is the same Mr. Warner who served on the President's special committee to investigate all types of aeronautical activities and the relation of the Government to them, which committee made a report to the Congress?

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand he is the same person.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is he now occupying a position in the Government?

Mr. BARKLEY. If I correctly understand, the nomination is a reappointment to the position of member of the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Mr. AUSTIN. Is that the Air Safety Board?

Mr. BARKLEY. It is the Civil Aeronautics Board in the Department of Commerce, which took the place of the old Civil Aeronautics Authority, which was transferred from an independent agency to the Department of Commerce.

Mr. AUSTIN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed, and the President will be notified.

UNITED STATES COURT OF CLAIMS—JOSEPH WARREN MADDEN

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I believe the only nomination on the calendar is that of Mr. Joseph Warren Madden to be a member of the Court of Claims. I ask that we now proceed to consider it.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to make the point of order that this nomination, while it is said to be reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, is not reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. The Committee on the Judiciary has never met since the appointment of Mr. Madden; and I suggest that the proposed action is in violation of rule XXV, paragraph 3, which contains provisions as to what shall constitute a quorum of a committee.

I quite realize that the practice of signing reports is quite customary, and when there is no objection to a nomination, there can be no reasonable objection to that procedure; but in the case of confirmation of a judge, particularly when there is objection, when objections would have been presented to the committee if the committee had held a hearing, it seems to me that this practice is a violation of the rules of the Senate, and I therefore object to the consideration of the nomination at this time.

I may say that I have objected before. The able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] objected in my behalf when there was no quorum present. I think today there is probably a quorum present, but it seems to me that even now the matter is of sufficient importance to require considerable time of the Senate to consider the nomination. It involves the whole question as to whether or not Mr. Madden, as Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, has been fair and imparial, or has shown any judicial qualifications whatever in the handling of the affairs of the Board. It involves the report of the House Committee on Labor, which was made 2 days ago, which covers many pages and discusses many features of the action of the Board and of Mr. Madden himself.

It seems to me it is a matter which should be presented first to the committee. That was the real reason for my objection. If Mr. Madden's nomination is not confirmed at this session, it can be submitted at the next session, and presumably at that time the Committee on the Judiciary will meet, and an opportunity to present objections will be given. At the present time I wish to make the point of order that the nomination is not properly before the Senate, because it has not been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, what I shall say may not be exactly appropriate on the point of order, but in order that the record may be clear I should like to make a statement.

Sometime in the latter part of November I was appointed chairman of a subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary, along with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and one other Senator. A hearing was held by that subcommittee on the 27th day of November, after at least 2 days' notice. No Senator spoke to me, as chairman of the subcommittee, about desiring to appear before the subcommittee, although the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] stated that certain Senators had spoken to him, without designating who they were. The record shows that he notified those Senators who had spoken to him of the date of the hearing on November 27.

The hearing was held. No one appeared in opposition to the nomination. Certain testimony was taken. There were statements from Judge Madden and Mr. Fahy, and letters from various persons were received and introduced and are now in the record.

I understand the record has not been printed. Following that, the committee was not meeting. A majority of the committee was contacted; I think all the committee was contacted; at least a majority of the committee approved the nomination, and I reported it on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary on the 29th day of November. On that date I asked that the nomination be confirmed, but objection was made and it went over. That is the status of the matter, and that is what occurred.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator state how many members of the subcommittee were present?

Mr. MILLER. The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] and I were present, and I had the proxy of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. TAFT. Only two Senators were actually present at the committee meeting?

Mr. MILLER. Only two Senators were actually present. They all had notice. Some of them were not in the city. Senator NORRIS was not in the city, and I believe another member of the committee was not here. I understood the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] submitted a letter, which is not in the record, in which he said that no objections to the nomination had been filed in his office.

Those are the facts about the matter. The question appears to me to be whether or not the Senate wants to set aside that practice, let the point of order be sustained and let the nomination lapse, as it would, of course, lapse with the adjournment of the present session of Congress.

That is the question before the Chair. Frankly, I do not feel that I can be of much assistance to the Chair in determining the point of order, but I do want the RECORD to show that the usual practice was followed.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Does the Senator know whether ever before a committee was polled by telegraph?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; as a member of committees, I have received telegrams from clerks of committees. Not long ago I received one.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question and observation?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. I think in his statement of facts the Senator ought to include the method of contacting members of the committee; that is, to show that the committee was contacted by telegraph.

Mr. MILLER. They were contacted by telegraph, in person, and probably some by telephone.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will the Senator permit an observation about that particular situation?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I have always felt that the business of a standing committee of the Senate ought to be considered by the committee as such and that polling the committee deprives Members of some of the advantages afforded by meeting. Certainly when I received a telegram asking me to vote by telegram on this particular nomination I felt that it was going beyond the limit of good practice. I always want the benefit of the advice of my colleagues on the committee no matter what my opinion may be. Though I might favor Mr. Madden, though I have really nothing against his character or qualifications, yet I certainly would denounce that method if I could. So I refused to vote in that way.

I wonder now, as a matter of fact for the RECORD, how many others either failed or declined to vote by telegram.

Mr. MILLER. I was going to suggest and ask permission to place in the RECORD as a part of my remarks a statement I had in my possession at the time the nomination was reported which shows the number of Senators indicating their approval and the number who did not approve. The Senator from Vermont, as I remember, sent a telegram in response to one sent to him that he preferred not to take action at this time or words to that effect. I do not remember the exact wording.

Mr. AUSTIN. I do not recall how the telegram was couched.

Mr. MILLER. But the Senator's telegram was in my hand at the time I reported the nomination to the Senate.

Those are the facts about the case. I merely want to have the record straight on the facts, because an effort was made to contact every member of the committee, and I think every member was contacted. It is true the committee was not in session, but it is likewise true that a hearing had been scheduled for 2 days, but no one appeared in opposition to the nomination.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may I make an inquiry of the Senator?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I should like to ask for the purpose of verifying the record whether or not the subcommittee ever reported the nomination back to the full committee.

Mr. MILLER. No formal report was made back to the committee, because the committee was not in session, and, apparently, could not be convened.

In addition to the statement which I have asked be printed, I request that certain telegrams from members of the committee be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement and telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

YEAS AND NAYS—COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY, UNITED STATES SENATE, NOVEMBER 27, 1940, VOTE ON J. WARREN MADDEN TO BE JUDGE COURT OF CLAIMS

Yeas: Mr. Neely (wire), Mr. Van Nuys, Mr. Hatch, Mr. O'Mahoney, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Miller, Mr. Norris (wire), Mr. Danaher, Mr. Chairman.

RENO, NEV., November 27, 1940.

DON MORGAN,
Clerk:

Madden nomination not sufficiently advised to participate in vote at present. Appreciate your wiring, but feel in view of circumstances prefer not to be recorded in vote now. Kind regards.

PAT MCCARRAN.

MCCOOK, NEBR., November 27, 1940.

DONALD J. MORGAN,
Clerk, Senate Judiciary Committee:

I vote in favor of the confirmation of Mr. Madden.

G. W. NORRIS,
United States Senator.

FAIRMONT, W. VA., November 27, 1940.

HON. HENRY ASHURST,
Senate Office Building:

Please vote me for confirmation Hon. J. Warren Madden.

M. M. NEELY.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish merely to observe that the point of order does not lie since there is a report of this nomination on the calendar. The Senate does not go behind the record of a report from a committee made in the usual way to determine the method by which there was secured the consent of a majority of the committee to a nomination. We all know that to be so. From time to time frequently that has been done; indeed, it has been done a score of times in the last 6 weeks. Because of the absence of a majority of committees, they have been polled informally. Numerous nominations have been reported here and acted upon. The Senate has not gone behind the record to determine whether there was a formal session of the committee, or whether there was an informal meeting of the committee behind a post in the Capitol somewhere or whether it was called in the Judiciary Committee room. This report came in the regular way, made by the chairman of the subcommittee to which the nomination was referred, and it is my understanding, though I am not a member of the Judiciary Committee, that the chairmen of subcommittees of that committee have more or less latitude in reporting nominations upon which they act.

I do not want to get into a discussion of the propriety of that sort of action by committees. It is done by all committees; it is done every day. Nominations have been reported and confirmed over and over again since we have been meeting in this Chamber that have been reported in the same way, and no Senator made any question about it. I do not think the point of order lies against this nomination.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, with regard to the point that there is no record, it now appears of record on the statement of the chairman of the subcommittee, who made this report to the Senate, that the Judiciary Committee did not meet. So that question is not one of going behind the record. The statement is made by the chairman of the committee himself making the report and it is perfectly clear on the records of the Senate today that there was no meeting of the Judiciary Committee. It seems to me that that question, therefore, is squarely presented.

I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a statement in Jefferson's Manual, section XXVI, page 274, of the rules we use:

A committee may meet when and where they please, if the House has not ordered time and place for them, but they can only act when together, and not by separate consultation and consent—nothing being the report of the committee but what has been agreed to in committee actually assembled.

As to the question of a hearing raised by the chairman of the subcommittee, it was the majority leader himself who stated that no important business would be taken up when we adjourned after the election, who invited all Members to go home, and stated that there would be nothing of importance considered by the Senate without due notice.

Under those circumstances, the attempt to hold a hearing at a late date when apparently no action was to be taken hardly seems to me to be a serious hearing on the subject of the confirmation of Mr. Madden.

I may say that the confirmation of a judge seems to me particularly one in which we ought to adhere to the rules, in which there ought to be a full opportunity to be heard, in which the Judiciary Committee itself ought to have an opportunity to consider all the facts. Apart from consulting with one's colleagues, Members who were home at the invitation of the majority leader had no opportunity to hear what might be said against Mr. Madden, or what considerations might be urged.

Under all the circumstances of the case, therefore, both the rules and the equity of the position, it seems to me this point of order should be sustained.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I wish to correct a slight error in the statement of the majority leader that this custom has prevailed in all committees. I desire to say to him that I happen to be chairman of the Public Lands Committee, and that committee has uniformly and consistently taken the position that no action should be taken by the committee except at a meeting of the committee at which a quorum was present; and the committee has never been polled.

Personally, as some members of the committee know, I, as an individual Senator, have always refused to be polled. I have taken the position that committees did not essentially differ from the Senate; that they were subdivisions of the Senate, and that they could no more meet by their members merely signing their names on the back of a bill than the Senate itself could pass a measure by a similar method.

That is simply my individual position. I felt, as was stated by the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN], that a contrary ruling denies the members of the committee the benefit of conference, the benefit of information which other Senators would bring to them. I think it is an unsound practice.

As one Senator, I propose to vote for the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Madden; but if the question of sustaining a point of order arises, I want it known that I personally do not think a committee of the Senate can validly act except when assembled as a committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not want to go on with this matter; but I wish to make an observation following the statement of the Senator from Ohio.

I did state some weeks ago, for the benefit of Senators, that no important business would be taken up in the absence of a quorum without due notice. Whether I contemplated every possible nomination that might come in here when I made that statement is not very material. Many nominations have come in since that statement was made, and most Senators went home, and many nominations have been confirmed.

I did give notice last Monday that if a quorum developed here today I should seek to have this matter acted upon. If any point of order would lie against this report it ought to have been made at the time the committee made the report. No point of order was made. No objection was made. The report was made here in the regular way and the nomination was placed on the calendar. It has been on the calendar for weeks. It has gone over out of courtesy to Senators who were not present, and out of courtesy especially to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], who wanted a quorum here, which is now present.

I did not mean, a moment ago, that every committee of the Senate operates as most committees do. We all realize that any committee presided over by the able Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] would act in an individual and particular way, and not particularly in consonance with the conduct of all other committees; and I am willing to accept his amendment to my remarks so far as that committee is concerned. I happen, however, to be a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency; and I happen to know that that committee has frequently been polled on nominations, and no objection has ever been made to that course. I would not say that the Senator from Colorado has been polled.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator to say that that is inaccurate. I have always objected to the polling of that committee, as the chairman of the committee knows, and have always declined to be polled.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree to that statement. The Senator from Colorado has objected to the polling of the committee; but the committee has been polled, nevertheless.

Mr. ADAMS. That is nothing unusual. The Senator from Colorado frequently is under the steam roller, and good-naturedly. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. I am glad to correct my remark, insofar as it applies to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys. They have not been polled.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, on the point of order I merely wish to call attention to rule XXV, relating to quorums of committees.

It is true that the rule does not in so many words authorize a committee to act except as a committee, but by inference the practice which has grown up here is certainly justified, and, in my opinion, if the practice is to be changed, the rule ought to be changed for purposes of clarity, if for no other purpose.

Clause 3 of that rule says:

> That the several standing committees of the Senate having a membership of more than three Senators are hereby respectively authorized to fix, each for itself, the number of its members who shall constitute a quorum thereof for the transaction of such business as may be considered by said committee; but in no case shall a committee, acting under authority of this resolution, fix as a quorum thereof any number less than one-third of its entire membership; nor shall any report be made to the Senate that is not authorized by the concurrence of more than one-half of a majority of such entire membership.

The point I am trying to make is that more than one-half of the membership authorized this report to be made, and, under the rule, the action is not confined to the action of the committee itself.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I really have no very deep concern about this nomination itself; but I do feel that the general rule and the point made by the Senator from Ohio are sound.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I declined to vote on this matter. I was down in Texas, and I did not really care to be disturbed by the Senate at that time; and I did not vote one way or another because I did not care to exercise my prerogatives in that way.

On the point of order, however, I do not know Mr. Madden. I have nothing against him. I suppose I shall vote to confirm him if the Senate overrules this point of order; but it seems to me there is a very sound reason why Senate committees should act only as committees.

For instance, we always have a minority. Sometimes the minority may be right; but if the majority may go ahead and confirm a candidate without ever meeting, the minority are deprived of any opportunity of doing more than just saying "No." They have no chance to present matters for consideration.

Of course, we have repeatedly violated that rule by polling committees, and I am just as guilty as other Senators are; but usually those are cases of pure routine, when nobody is objecting to the nominee or nobody knows anything about the nominee, and they are willing to let the nomination go along. It does seem to me, however, that when the question of jurisdiction is invoked it is not a light matter, but is one which the Senate should very carefully consider.

No one would think that the Senate itself could pass a bill by sending us all home and telegraphing us, "The bill is up, and you may vote on it in the Senate." Of course, nobody would ever consider doing a thing like that. The committee is but an agency of the Senate. It has no greater powers than the Senate itself has. It is our servant; and when the action of a committee is questioned, I do not think it can do privately what it is unable to do officially.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. MINTON. Does not the Senator from Texas think the Senate may waive its own rules?

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, the Senate probably will waive its own rules today if the matter goes to a vote.

Mr. MINTON. By a course of conduct it may waive its own rules.

Mr. CONNALLY. We may do that. We may confirm a nominee without ever sending his nomination to a committee under the rules, if we want to, because the Senate, under the Constitution, has the power to make its own rules, and nobody can question that action; but we do have rules, and one of those rules is that we have committees. Another rule is that there shall be referred to those committees appropriate matters relating to their jurisdiction. As long as we have those rules we ought to observe them.

As I have said, I have no interest in this nomination. I really very much dislike to have to agree with the Senator from Ohio, but it looks as though I shall have to do so. [Laughter.]

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I doubt the propriety of my speaking at this time, but I shall run the risk of erring on the side of impropriety.

I am not a little embarrassed in that I speak now as a politician who, as the lawyers say, is in extremis—indeed, a politician upon whom rigor mortis will soon descend. [Laughter.] But I am in a situation where silence might be misconstrued.

The nomination of Mr. Madden was sent to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary and, as was done with all other judicial nominations, it was referred to a subcommittee for consideration. If my memory serves me correctly, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] was named as the chairman of the subcommittee.

It is not necessary for me to deliver any extended eulogy on the merits, the talents, the sagacity, and the industriousness of the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER]. Soon after he was inducted into the Senate he earned for himself, by his learning and his ability, a place upon its Committee on the Judiciary.

The Senator from Arkansas made a canvass of all the members of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary in the city of Washington. The Senate was in legal session. Those members who saw fit to go home and not attend the Senate's sessions have no right to interfere with the proceedings of the Senate. A man should not, by remote control, attempt to direct the Senate. While I have no criticism of any Member who was not here and had good reason for not being here, surely no point should be made of the fact that Senators who were not here should delay the Senate in its labors.

The majority of the committee reported favorably upon the nomination, if I am correctly advised by the Senator from Arkansas. Another reason which impels me to speak now is that Members of the Senate individually, but not as the Senate, did something which I shall forever hold in grateful remembrance. Eighty-four Members of the Senate signed a petition urging that I be appointed to this place on the Court of Claims. The President, for good reasons—for reasons which I approve—did not see fit to make my nomination as requested and petitioned by the 84 Senators. I was the individual whom they were so partial and so kind as to request the President to appoint. What little disappointment I might have felt in not securing the office was so transient that I do not recall that there was any disappointment at all.

In this period of the world's history and in this tragic posture of human events, those persons and only those persons who are accustomed to, or can accustom themselves to, disappointments will survive. I repeat that—the only persons who may expect to survive in the world now are those who are either already accustomed to disappointment or who can gracefully accustom themselves to disappointment. So, as I have said, while I should have been very proud and glad to have had this judicial office, the disappointment in not receiving it was so slight and so transient that there was no disappointment at all.

Whatever may have been the criticisms which fell upon Mr. Madden by reason of the office he formerly held should not, in my judgment, reach him in connection with a judicial place. No man in America, no man alive, could have served upon the National Labor Relations Board to the complete satisfaction of all. That could not have been done. The Greeks had a word for it, namely, "dilemma." We usually think we can take one or the other of the horns of a dilemma and thus escape. It is not a dilemma if there be any way of escape. One may be in a dangerous situation, one may be in a difficult position, but if he can escape and find refuge he is not in a dilemma, because a true dilemma is fatal, whatever horn one may take. The Greeks named it correctly—"dilemma"; two horns. Whoever serves upon the National Labor Relations Board will be impaled upon one of the two horns of a dilemma, and possibly on both, as has been well said by a colleague sitting near me.

The position to which Mr. Madden has been named is a judicial office. He will in that place have no policy. A judge has no policy; he has no constituents; he follows the law.

I addressed the present occupant of the chair [Mr. KING] as "Your Honor" when I first saw him. He was at that time a judge, an able judicial officer, who reflected credit upon himself and upon his constituency, but in a true sense he had no constituency. A judge can have no constituents. A judge is sworn to follow the law, and I am convinced that in the judicial office to which the President has named Mr. Madden he will have no constituency, but will follow the law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. Very gladly.

Mr. BARKLEY. In this particular position, membership on the Court of Claims, the judge does not act in the trial of cases nisi prius. He passes chiefly on the merits of claims against the Government of the United States, if I am correctly informed.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. So that whatever views Mr. Madden may have held, and whatever actions he may have taken as a member of the National Labor Relations Board, they would have no relationship to his decisions in passing upon claims which are filed against the Government of the United States, which is the duty of all members of the Court of Claims.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I always yield to the able Senator from Ohio. I gladly yield.

Mr. TAFT. Let me say that I was one of those who recommended the able Senator from Arizona for this particular position on the Court of Claims. I did so because I think no one could have a more judicial temperament. I would say that the actions of Mr. Madden on the National Labor Relations Board show an utter and complete lack of any judicial temperament. That is the reason why I am opposing confirmation.

But what I wanted to ask the Senator was whether he did not think that a member of the National Labor Relations Board does not also occupy a judicial position in which he is required to follow the law, so there is no distinction between a member of a judicial board with judicial powers and the judge of a court. Does not the Senator think that really the nature of the jobs is the same?

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator from Ohio is correct in that membership on the National Labor Relations Board, of course—and frankness compels me to say this—does carry with it some duties which at times partake of the nature of a judicial office. It is not, however, in any sense a judicial office. I am bound to admit that at times a member of the National Labor Relations Board must use judicial discretion, but I am sure, able and erudite lawyer as the Senator from Ohio is, he would not for a moment be so disingenuous, because that is contrary to his nature, as to assert here or elsewhere that membership on the National Labor Relations Board is a judicial office. The Senator will not assert that.

Mr. TAFT. Not a judicial office, but one which requires the exercise of certain judicial functions.

I should like to read the Senator a quotation from the Supreme Court of the United States in the Morgan case:

> The vast expansion of this field of administrative regulation in response to the pressure of social needs is made possible under our system by adherence to the basic principles that * * * in administrative proceedings of a quasi-judicial character the liberty and property of the citizen shall be protected by the rudimentary requirements of fair play. These demand a fair and open hearing.

Does not that indicate that the Supreme Court of the United States considered the function of a member of a board with judicial powers or quasi-judicial powers, as in substance the same as that of a judge?

Mr. ASHURST. As I have said, to be frank, I would say that at times it is the duty not only of the National Labor Relations Board, but the duty of the various boards we have created, to exercise judicial discretion, and to look at the law and construe the law. I admit that, but I again say it is not possible to find any person who would claim that membership on the National Labor Relations Board was in any sense a judicial position.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question, having to do with another matter?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Did the Senator, as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, ever call a meeting of the Judiciary Committee to consider this appointment at which a quorum did not appear?

Mr. ASHURST. No.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the able Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, in view of the very broad, and I think, entirely unfair statement made by the Senator from Ohio with reference to Mr. Madden——

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a moment, I intend to speak at great length on the particular specifications of that charge.

Mr. WAGNER. I assume there will be another opportunity; but I think perhaps in view of the characterization of the conduct of Mr. Madden I should say that the United States Supreme Court has had 25 N. L. R. B. cases before it for review. Of course, the Senator being a learned scholar of the law, knows that the Court reviews all the evidence and the testimony taken, which includes the conduct of those conducting the judicial hearings, and the conclusions reached. The Labor Board, presided over by Mr. Madden, has a better record by far than any other quasi-judicial body created by Congress. Out of 25 cases which went to the United States Supreme Court, 20 were absolutely affirmed. Three cases were affirmed with a modification, and in only two cases were the order and findings wholly set aside.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may reply now?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. That argument has frequently been made; but the basis of the Supreme Court's decisions upholding the National Labor Relations Board is that Congress in the act gave the board such completely wide discretion that it could do practically anything it pleased. A decision of the United States Supreme Court upholding the Labor Board does not prove that the Labor Board was right. It merely proves that the Court thinks that the powers granted in the act are so broad that the Board can do almost anything. I agree that that is the effect of the act. Consequently, a decision affirming the act does not say that the National Labor Relations Board did what was right. It merely says that the National Labor Relations Board did what there was some authority in the act to do.

It is not true that all the facts of the cases are before the Supreme Court. Far from it. The Supreme Court has said that it is not the judge of the facts, and that the National Labor Relations Board's decision on the facts is for all practical purposes final, unless it is so outrageous that no person could possibly reach such a conclusion without being biased and prejudiced. That is the reason for the Supreme Court's decision. I venture to say that with respect to most of such cases, if they were submitted to the majority of the Senate, the majority of the Senate would say that the National Labor Relations Board was wrong in the large majority of the cases which went to the Supreme Court. That does not apply to all the decisions of the Board. Many of its decisions are entirely correct.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the able Senator from Ohio, in his reply to the able Senator from New York, made the point that wide discretion was conferred upon the Board. If that be true, the fault is with Congress and not with the Board. The able Senator from Ohio would not send out an agent, giving the agent absolute, broad, and wide powers, and then lament—he would not obtain a hearing if he did—because the agent to whom he had granted the vast powers had transcended them or had exercised the discretionary powers in a different manner from that which the principal intended.

Mr. President, the fault lies at our door, and not at the door of the National Labor Relations Board, because we gave them this discretion. It might not have been wise; but it is not sportsmanlike, wise, or fair, after granting this wide-open discretion—I myself think it is too wide—to complain because, forsooth, it was exercised.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I shall be glad to yield in a moment.

The able Senator from Ohio has many times demonstrated that he is an able lawyer. Today he has given further proof. He stated that the Supreme Court would not examine the facts, because the discretion was left with the Board to examine the facts. The able Senator knows that to be true as to circuit courts and as to district courts. If there be any evidence in a case, the Supreme Court of the United States will not review it. Unless there be no evidence in a case, the Supreme Court will not review it. There must be an absolute violation of the law before the Supreme Court will review a case. So the Supreme Court, in the National Labor Relations Board cases, employed the same rule it would employ in connection with an appeal from a district court.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not wish to annoy the Senator, but in view of the statement which has been made by the Senator from Ohio, I invite attention to the fact that the law and the facts are reviewed by the Supreme Court. Mr. Chief Justice Hughes, in one of the cases, stated that the procedure provided for in the act protects every person who has any rights or any interest in the litigation. That is a statement not by the Senator from Ohio, but by the Chief Justice of the United States.

Secondly, the Senator also knows that the courts have decided that before they will enforce an order, it must be supported by substantial evidence. Time and time again the Court has used the words "substantial evidence." In order to ascertain whether or not a particular order is sustained by substantial evidence, the Court must review and study the entire evidence. The courts have said so time and time again.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask the Senator, who is an able lawyer, if the courts are likely to review a matter of discretion unless the discretion was obviously ill-employed.

Mr. WAGNER. No; but time and time again the court has made the statement that the order must be supported by substantial evidence. Those are the words the court has used. Of course, in order to ascertain whether or not the evidence is substantial, the court must examine all the facts.

Mr. ASHURST. In the cases to which the Senator from New York has referred the court must have found that there was substantial evidence in each case and sustained it.

Mr. WAGNER. In the decision in National Labor Relations Board against Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation, Mr. Chief Justice Hughes discusses the question of review by the courts in the following language:

> The act establishes standards to which the Board must conform. There must be complaint, notice, and hearing. The Board must receive evidence and make findings. The findings as to the facts are to be conclusive, but only if supported by evidence. The order of the Board is subject to review by the designated court, and only when sustained by the court may the order be enforced. Upon that review all questions of the jurisdiction of the Board and the regularity of its proceedings—all questions of constitutional right or statutory authority—are open to examination by the court. We construe the procedural provisions as affording adequate opportunity to secure judicial protection against arbitrary action in accordance with the well-settled rules applicable to administrative agencies set up by Congress to aid in the enforcement of valid legislation.

Let me add that, if we complain about the procedure, the procedure provided for in this law is exactly the same as the procedure which has been adopted time after time by Congress with reference to every other quasi-judicial board. As a matter of history, I took the procedure provided for in the Federal Trade Commission Act bodily out of that act and placed it in the National Labor Relations Act.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator from New York is correct—and I have usually found him to be correct—it would seem from his statement that the lamentation of the able Senator from Ohio should be addressed to the Congress and the Supreme Court of the United States rather than to the National Labor Relations Board.

Mr. TAFT. Of course, that appeal was addressed to the Congress of the United States. We passed the Logan-Walter bill largely to correct the abuses resulting from the National Labor Relations Act, and the President vetoed that bill. So that appeal has been made to Congress, and it seems to me it is perfectly proper now to raise the same question in connection with the confirmation of Mr. Madden.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am glad finally, on the closing days of the Congress, to find out why the Logan-Walter bill was passed. The Senator from Ohio has very clearly indicated the objective.

Mr. TAFT. I think so. I think I so stated at the hearing. It was passed because the powers given to administrative boards are so broad, and they have abused those powers repeatedly. The Logan-Walter bill was designed to check those abuses.

Mr. BARKLEY. Particularly with reference to the National Labor Relations Board.

Mr. TAFT. That is one of the five or six which have been most subject to criticism.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The amendments which were made to the so-called Walter-Logan bill by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary did not in any material way change the procedure now provided by law and by court decisions with reference to the National Labor Relations Act. For instance, it was provided in the proposed act that, in order to be enforced, the orders of the Board must be sustained by substantial evidence. That is the law today, and that has been the ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States. That was not changed by the Walter-Logan bill with reference to the National Labor Relations Board at all, but it did have an effect on other quasi-judicial boards.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I have said all I care to say. The situation was such that I thought I should speak, for to fail to speak might indicate that I felt some resentment or disappointment because I did not receive the nomination to the judicial office to which Mr. Madden has been appointed. I am sure that if I were less thick-skinned or if I were not so pachydermatous I would not be embarrassed.

I have discharged my duty. I believe Mr. Madden to be a good man. I believe him to be an honest man; I believe him to be an able man. He is not a great man, for no man Mr.

President, is ever great until he has had much sorrow, humiliation, and disappointment. When I go home and my constituents ask, Is so and so a great man? in many, if not most, instances I am obliged to say when I am asked about a Senator or other public official, " 'Yes,' he is a good Senator, he is a useful man, he is patriotic, but as to being a great man, I must say 'No,' because he has never had tremendous suffering, sorrow, humiliation and disappointment." That is what makes greatness. So I say that, while Mr. Madden is a good man, an honest man, and an able man, he may not be great. Only a few men are great. The Senate may make him great before they get through with him. I thank the Senate.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Chair to the statement made by the able chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, that on the question of the nomination of this judge no meeting of the Judiciary Committee was ever called, so that no member ever had an opportunity to attend the meeting of the Judiciary Committee to consider the question whether the nomination should be confirmed or should not be confirmed.

I think, getting back to the point of order, that, after all, this matter can be taken up at the next session. I do not see the necessity for hurry or rush. It may involve some few dollars of salary; I do not know the exact figures; but I submit to the Chair that until a correct procedure is taken in the Senate we certainly have not much right to criticize the procedure of the National Labor Relations Board.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. KING). The President pro tempore is ready to rule upon the point of order raised by the Senator from Ohio.

After considering the arguments made in support of and against the point of order, the Chair overrules the point of order. The Chair thinks a proper interpretation of paragraph 3 of Rule 25, to which attention was called by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MILLER] supports the position taken by the Chair. The rule contains the following words:

> Nor shall any report be made to the Senate that is not authorized by the concurrence of more than one-half of a majority of such membership.

It appears from the record and the statements made that more than one-half of a majority of the entire membership of the Committee on the Judiciary authorized a favorable report upon the nomination under consideration. Generally speaking, a report imports verity and the Senate record of the report made by the committee a short time ago is in regular form and shows that the Committee on the Judiciary affirmatively acted upon the nomination. In the opinion of the Chair there is not sufficient warrant for impeaching the record of the Senate showing the favorable report of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The Chair believes that his position is fortified by reason of the almost uniform procedure under which Senate committees are not infrequently polled without a formal meeting of the entire committee. The practice, in the opinion of the Chair, might with propriety, be discouraged. While the Chair is not authorized to indicate what course should be pursued, he ventures to suggest that with respect to nominations for important positions, formal action be taken by committees.

The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Byrnes	Guffey	McCarran
Ashurst	Capper	Gurney	Miller
Austin	Caraway	Hale	Minton
Ball	Chavez	Hayden	Neely
Bankhead	Clark, Mo.	Herring	Nye
Barbour	Connally	Holman	O'Mahoney
Barkley	Danaher	Holt	Reynolds
Bilbo	Davis	Johnson, Calif.	Russell
Bone	Frazier	Johnson, Colo.	Schwartz
Bulow	George	King	Sheppard
Bunker	Gillette	Lee	Taft
Burke	Green	Lucas	Thomas, Idaho
Thomas, Utah	Vandenberg	Wallgren	Wiley
Townsend	Van Nuys	Wheeler
Truman	Wagner	White

Mr. AUSTIN. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] is absent on account of illness.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the appointment of Mr. Madden to the Court of Claims is the result of a long history connected with the National Labor Relations Board.

Originally there were three members of that Board—Mr. Madden, Mr. Edwin Smith, and Mr. Donald Smith. For the greater part of the history of the Board its action was determined by the joint action of those three men.

About a year ago the term of Mr. Donald Smith expired; and to fill the vacancy the President appointed Mr. Leiserson, who had long had a record of labor service, who had been on the National Mediation Board for the railroad brotherhoods, and who, since his coming to the Board, has very largely changed the character of the Board. Mr. Leiserson found, however, that in spite of his criticism of the personnel of the Board and the general character of its decisions, he was in the minority. Mr. Madden and Mr. Smith still dominated the Board; so when last year in August Mr. Madden's term expired, there was a fundamental difference of opinion on the Board to be resolved by the appointment of the third man.

Mr. Madden's term expired in August and no appointment was made. Mr. Madden himself was not reappointed. Apparently he was not reappointed because various people, including particularly the American Federation of Labor, urged that he was so unfair, so incapable of performing judicially the functions of his office, that he should not be reappointed. His appointment was held up until after the election in November 1940.

It is well known that Mr. Madden's reappointment was urged upon the President by the C. I. O. They regarded him as their friend, and they insisted on his nomination.

The President waited until after the election. Of course, I cannot say what motives resulted finally in the refusal to reappoint Mr. Madden and the appointment of Mr. Milles as chairman in his place, but it is true that during the election Mr. John Lewis, the president of the C. I. O., came out in favor of Mr. Willkie instead of Mr. Roosevelt. Apparently the pressure of the C. I. O. was of less importance after the election than before, and after the election Mr. Madden's name was not sent in, but the appointment of Mr. Milles was made.

There is not the slightest question that the appointment of Mr. Milles has entirely changed the character of the National Labor Relations Board; and where before that we had a majority intensely prejudiced in various ways which I shall describe, we now have a Board which represents the kind of a Board which should originally have been appointed to administer the National Labor Relations Act.

Apparently in order to soothe Mr. Madden's friends, as well as all the radicals and the other people who thought that he should have been reappointed Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, he was appointed a judge of the Court of Claims. In other words, a man who was considered so prejudiced that he could not be reappointed Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board is appointed instead to a life job as a judge, where impartiality is peculiarly necessary, is appointed to a life job at $12,000 a year, an advance in salary over what he was receiving as a member of the National Labor Relations Board. In order to soothe the feelings of the persons favoring Mr. Madden, he is kicked upstairs, and we are now considering whether or not we shall confirm his appointment as a judge of the Court of Claims—a life job at $12,000 a year—as a reward for his actions on the National Labor Relations Board and as Chairman and as a member of that Board, for which he was not considered competent enough to be reappointed.

I submit that it shows a complete disregard of the feelings which should inspire the appointment of a judge to appoint a man as judge simply because a place must be found for him after he is removed from another position.

Mr. President, my objection to Mr. Madden is not to his character or to his legal qualifications. It is true that Mr. Madden has never practiced law; and that, I think, is one basis of objection to the appointment of a judge. But from the time he graduated from the Chicago Law School he has been a teacher of law. He served first as a school teacher, then as a teacher at Michigan University Law School, then as a teacher at Ohio State University Law School, then as dean of the West Virginia Law School, and, finally, as professor at Pittsburgh University Law School, just before he was appointed to the National Labor Relations Board. He has never practiced law. That in itself is not a complete argument against the appointment of a man as judge, but it does perhaps give some hint why he has departed so far from legal principles as he has as Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, and so far from the fairness necessarily required from a judge.

I oppose Mr. Madden because I think he completely lacks the qualifications of a judge, because I maintain that his actions as Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, which I wish to describe, show him to be inherently biased and prejudiced and incapable of passing on a question in the judicial manner in which a judge should pass on any legal question presented to him. I hope to show that prejudice as it appeared in the decisions of the Board in many cases by citing evidence of tremendous prejudice and lack of judicial qualifications among the personnel of the Board, which must have been known in many cases, was, in fact, proved to have been known by Mr. Madden himself; and, of course, it can be shown in a complete lack of judicial sense in the procedure of the Board.

The real purpose of the National Labor Relations Act was to make it possible for any employees to organize who wished to do so, to remove any possible coercion or pressure from their employers to prevent such organization. I think everyone approved that purpose. We have always approved it in principle. The National Labor Relations Act embodied it in law.

The act itself sets forth a perfectly correct principle, and I not only thoroughly approve the act and the basic ideas of the act but I believe they could be worked out more satisfactorily than they are in the present law. But the Board which was appointed, instead of looking upon its function as merely to prevent any interference with the organization of employees, apparently, from many of its expressions, thought it was given a kind of crusading license by Congress to go out and organize every employee in the United States, whether the employee wanted to be organized or did not want to be organized—a license, or direction, to go out and organize every employee into some nationally affiliated union because the Board showed an intense prejudice against anything in the nature of an independent union, or one that was not affiliated with some national organization. A crusading spirit to go out and organize men whether they wanted to be organized or not naturally found its greatest affiliation with the C. I. O., which happened to be a more active organizing force than the A. F. of L. at the time the Board began functioning. Perhaps that explains the intense prejudice of the Board against the American Federation of Labor.

There are many members of the personnel who, if they are not Communists, are very close to being Communists. There were many who were members of the League Against War and Fascism, which turned out to be rather a league against peace and for communism, which was exposed by the Dies committee, and I think has since dissolved itself. But many of the members of the personnel of the National Labor Relations Board were members of that organization. Their spirit against the whole system of private enterprise and private employment was made clear in many speeches and writings of those members, and much of it was known to Mr. Madden. While I do not know whether or not he has the slightest sympathy with that point of view, I do know that he knew that many of the personnel of the Board were inspired by it, and that he did not take the slightest action to remove any of those people. In fact, after Mr. Leiserson's appointment he and Mr. Smith insisted that the whole personnel be retained, and opposed any change whatever in the character of the personnel; and for that purpose Mr. Madden's vote was essential.

I have said that one of the things which was perfectly apparent was the prejudice against the American Federation of Labor, or, rather, I would say a prejudice in favor of the C. I. O. Several members of the Board expressed themselves strongly in favor of the industrial type of organization as against the craft unions. The decisions, carefully considered, while some were in favor of the American Federation of Labor and others in favor of the C. I. O., show that wherever they could they promoted a C. I. O. union against the American Federation of Labor, as well as against any independent union.

In order to show that, I should like to refer to the testimony given by Mr. William Green, the head of the American Federation of Labor, before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, of which I am a member.

I do not like to take so much of the time of the Senate, on the last day of the longest session we have ever had, but it is certainly true that those who favor an amendment to the National Labor Relations Act, and those who are opposed to the kind of administration the Board has given, have been denied any opportunity of presenting the facts to the Senate, because the Senate Committee on Education and Labor has failed to report the amendments to the National Labor Relations Act.

Mr. Green spoke of the fact that the American Federation of Labor considered the passage of the act a major legislative victory for organized labor, and that it had supported the act. He said that his experience under the previous Labor Board—Dean Garrison, Francis Biddle, and others—led him to believe that the American Federation of Labor would receive fair and just treatment. Mr. Green continued:

> But, gentlemen of the committee, we are sadly disillusioned. The act, once hailed as labor's Magna Carta, has been distorted into an instrument of oppression by the partial and biased administration of the present Board.

Mr. Madden was a member of the Board which, according to Mr. Green, distorted the act into an instrument of oppression instead of a measure to uphold the rights of labor.

> When the split in the labor movement occurred in 1935 the Board was put to a test. Would it administer the act in an impartial manner, as its sponsors had promised, or would it pervert the great power granted it in order to assist one of two rival movements? That was the question. The answer was not long in coming. Almost contemporaneous with the division in the labor movement a definite partiality was manifested by Board Member Edwin Smith for the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and he has been able to influence the official work of the Board and of the personnel so as to support the cause of the Congress of Industrial Organizations. * * * We assumed that this governmental agency would be a judicial board, holding the scales of justice equitably, so that a great institution such as ours that has developed over a period of almost three-quarters of a century would be accorded a square deal.
> There soon grew a large volume of protests against the biased administration of the act. This protest was voiced most vigorously at the 1937 convention of the American Federation of Labor in Denver, Colo.

This is what that convention of the American Federation of Labor said about the Board:

> The National Labor Relations Board has, together with and through a number of its regional boards, repeatedly denied employees the right of designating the bargaining unit, and have thereby denied employees the right of selecting representatives of their own choosing with full freedom.

In other words, denied the exact purpose of the act.

> The National Labor Relations Board, through its regional representatives, has attempted to destroy the validity of contracts entered into between legitimate labor organizations and their employers, contracts which were in full conformity with public laws, including the National Labor Relations Act—in some instances with full knowledge of the facts involved, and in others without any apparent effort to ascertain the facts.

Mr. Green also stated before the Senate committee:

The Board continued on its course of usurping and abusing powers and of favoring rival organizations. Decisions and activities by the Board that threatened to undermine the very existence of the American Federation of Labor continued. At the 1938 Houston convention the executive council submitted a report, from which I quote the following excerpts in order to indicate how intolerable the attitude and conduct of the Board had become to the American Federation of Labor.

The 1938 convention of the American Federation of Labor, in a resolution adopted at that convention, said:

It is with deep regret that frankness compels us to report to you that the National Labor Relations Board has administered the act contrary to its letter, spirit, and intent, with manifest bias and prejudice against the American Federation of Labor and in favor of dual and rival organizations. Our resentment has been aroused and your officers have publicly and officially in most vigorous terms condemned this unholy alliance between a Government agency exercising quasi-judicial jurisdiction and the C. I. O.

* * * The Board has exceeded its public purpose and has vitiated the procedure delineated in the act in three respects.

These are specifications which I think are amply proved by the cases which I shall cite.

First. In a large number of instances its agents have shown gross favoritism and bias in the handling of cases, furthering the objectives of one union against another and favoring one form of labor organization.

Second. By administrative fiat the Board has set aside legally valid and binding contracts entered into in good faith by bona fide unions and employers.

Third. Through the arbitrary determination of appropriate units in cases dealing with the question concerning representation, the Board has sought to impose upon workers, regardless of their wishes, the type of organization it favored.

* * * Our suggestions for caution have gone unheeded. The administration of the act has not been in competent and impartial hands. On the contrary, flagrant bias and prejudice exists on the part of the members of the Board, as is evidenced by decisions which attempt to undermine and destroy American Federation of Labor unions.

Referring to this report of the executive council, the committee on resolutions stated as follows:

Your committee is of the opinion that the manner and method of administering the act by the National Labor Relations Board has brought administrative justice into disrepute.

They complained particularly that the Board passed on many cases from secret evidence which they did not have the opportunity to examine. Mr. Green complained against the secrecy, and said:

The secrecy of the files must be lifted to the extent that all persons may have an opportunity to examine a record which contains material on which decisions are made. The idea of keeping information and material in a secret file and then utilizing it in connection with other evidence as a basis for the decisions smacks of star-chamber proceedings.

Finally, summing up, Mr. Green said:

The American Federation of Labor—

Which represents millions of workers who are supposed to be protected by the act—

asserts that the Board has taken sides as between us and our rivals. Now, that is an assertion. We contend that its decisions are not fair; that the Board's approach was unjudicial, and that its administration was biased. We say that when the division in the labor movement came about the Board devised its rules and decrees to give support to unions of our rivals, to our great injury. We contend that even where a case did not present an issue between claimed varying philosophies—that is, even in cases where the American Federation of Labor was organizing on the same industrial, plant, or group basis as was its rival—that the Board so devised its procedure and decrees as to further the interests of our rivals. We do not think that any impartial person can look into the record of this Board's decisions and not be convinced that they are vigorous proponents of the cause of a dual movement.

I thoroughly agree that no impartial person can study the record of the Board and come to any conclusion except that the Board is biased and prejudiced. I am willing to go so far as to assert that there never has been such a gross perversion of justice in the United States in its history as has occurred in the administration of the National Labor Relations Act.

It may be asked, "What has that to do with Mr. Madden?" Mr. Madden was a member of the Board. There were very few cases in which he dissented from the decision of the two Smiths. After Mr. Leiserson was appointed, Mr. Madden lined up with Edwin Smith. Certainly he was partly responsible for decisions of the Board. As to the other matters to which I shall call attention, I believe he was also responsible.

Mr. Green further said:

In view of what I have said so far today, the purposes of this amendment—

The amendment referred to was to wipe out the Board and create a new Board—which abolishes the Board and creates a new Board—is evident. The present Board has alienated the confidence of the American Federation of Labor and its millions of members, as well as of a large portion of the public. To put it bluntly, all classes of the public as well as the American Federation of Labor no longer respect the administration of the act by this Board.

I do not suppose there is a single businessman in the United States who has not demanded an amendment of the National Labor Relations Act to overcome the acts of prejudice of the present National Labor Relations Board.

That is a pretty broad statement, but I think it would be justifiable if you would make an analysis of public opinion.

This is Mr. Green speaking.

I say it is imperative that the present personnel be displaced if only to restore confidence and respect in the minds of millions of American workers.

That is the condition which Mr. Madden brought about by his administration of the National Labor Relations Act. Whether he knew he was partial I do not know; I only say that a man who gives a complete impression of bias and prejudice to a large section of the people of the United States cannot be so impartial that he should be appointed a judge of a United States court.

This is not solely the view of the American Federation of Labor. The New York State Federation of Labor also adopted a resolution of very much the same character in August 1938:

Resolved, That this the seventy-fifth annual convention of the New York State Federation of Labor, expresses its indignation that the National Labor Relations Act, in operation, has been perverted so as to have results for real American labor which run directly counter to the high purpose of the legislation; and be it further

Resolved, That this convention of the New York State Federation of Labor roundly condemns the present administration of the National Labor Relations Board and proclaims itself throughout in harmony with the attitude of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor on this subject.

Judge Padway, the counsel for the American Federation of Labor, also expressed very strongly his view, after a long experience with the Board in many cases, that they were completely biased and prejudiced.

Judge Padway said this at page 726 of our hearings:

I present the foregoing to this committee to establish one outstanding fact. That is, that the American Federation of Labor and its affiliates have no confidence in the Board as presently constituted, have no confidence in many of its agencies and personnel, and no longer respect the administration of the act by this Board. Whatever the reasons are, that situation being a fact, it seems to me that this Board cannot function effectively.

The Board and apparently the personnel of the Board throughout have been extremely friendly to the general views of Communist organizations and Communist front organizations in the United States. I merely cite the findings of the House committee. I shall refer at some length to the final report of the special committee of the House of Representatives of the Seventy-sixth Congress which was rendered on December 28, just 3 days ago, which, sums up probably more effectively than I can do, the case against the National Labor Relations Board, and shows beyond anything I can do the complete bias and prejudice that has inspired the members of the Board, including Mr. Madden. With regard to communism, for instance, their conclusion is:

Examples from the record are presented to show how members and employees of the Board were profoundly influenced by the doctrines and teachings of a leftist philosophy which the committee believes incompatible with a truly democratic system of government. Fraternizing with Communist sympathizers, attending meetings of societies behind whose innocuous names lurks the Communist incubus, accepting suggestions and instructions from Communists and near-Communists—all these and many other instances of improper associations and activities have convinced the committee that many of the employees of the Board are unfit for the task of fair and impartial administration of the act. Amid such a luxuriant growth of alien philosophies no democratic process would long have a chance of survival.

The committee also sums up the cases they have examined regarding the personnel records of the various members of the Board and its staff—

Part IV is devoted to a searching analysis of personnel records of various members of the Board and its staff. Grouped under functional headings, these reveal most amazing propensities for discrimination in theory and in practice. Ofttimes, these representatives of a public agency convict themselves by their own utterances. They have impressed the committee with the fixed determination of subordinates to follow the lead of certain Board members in adopting a policy of favoring one nationally organized labor group over the other.

Summarizing the hearings and the cases which I have to cite, they show, in the first place, a distinct prejudice against the American Federation of Labor, a prejudice against every independent union, no matter how bona fide, a prejudice against every employer, and the Communist sympathies I have described. These things are shown by court decisions reviewing their own decisions, by their own decisions, by their actions with reference to their personnel, by the acts of their personnel approved by the retention of that personnel, by the views of Mr. Madden himself on free speech, and some other circumstances, and by the extraordinarily unfair procedure and remedies adopted by the Board.

First, I will refer briefly to the matters relating directly to Mr. Madden simply to show that he is a part of all the action of the National Labor Relations Board. The House committee refers first to the case of the appointment of Abraham L. Wirin, as senior officer attorney of the Board at a salary of $3,800 per annum.

Wirin——

Says the committee——

a native of Russia, had served as counsel for the American Civil Liberties Union from 1933 to 1935, where, to use his own words, he was engaged in "defense of workers, for the most part 'radical' and communistic." Further light is thrown on Wirin's character and political predilections by the following excerpt from his letter of application dated August 24, 1935:

"And now that I am being frank and in a confessional mood, let me say that I thought that a couple of years with the Board might give me that prestige which I think I need in being counsel for the Civil Liberties Union. I thought if vigilantes knew that I had been a Government official their irresistible passion to kidnap, tar, or feather me in strike situations might be somewhat resisted."

Despite such frankness, or perhaps because of it, Wirin was appointed to the position which he was seeking on October 1, 1935. His appointment did not meet with approval on the west coast, where he was well known for his radical activities. Protests were numerous, vigorous, and immediate.

I read one from former Senator McAdoo, of California, who said:

I have had so many protests against the appointment of Mr. Wirin concerning which I was not extended the courtesy of being consulted, that I shall have to file them with the Labor Relations Board. The appointment is a great blunder, politically and otherwise.

Mr. Madden stanchly and continuously defended Wirin.

Mr. Wirin was loaned at one time to a committee of the Senate, the La Follette Civil Liberties Committee. His actions on that committee were so grossly outrageous that he was discharged by the committee. In a letter addressed to Wirin himself, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] said:

You are forthwith discharged as a member of the staff of this committee for a flagrant violation of the written staff instructions. * * *

This action on your part was a direct violation of the foregoing instructions and of the policy of this committee and constitutes an inexcusable abuse of your office as a member of the staff of this committee. Such conduct on the part of a staff member cannot and will not be tolerated by the committee.

There is no record that the Board ever censured Mr. Wirin. It took him back; he went back to work for the Board. Finally he voluntarily resigned, and Chairman Madden wrote him a letter in which he said:

We have enjoyed having you on our staff during this critical period.

Mr. Madden certainly is responsible for Mr. Wirin's appointment in spite of the fact that he knew all about him, that he knew of his Communist and radical activities on the west coast, that objection was made by former Senator McAdoo, and that he was discharged by a committee of the United States Senate itself.

Mr. Madden also has supported Mr. David J. Saposs throughout his career as a member of the Division of Economic Research of the Board. Mr. Saposs' testimony and the testimony of others before the House committee very clearly showed that he was strongly sympathetic, at least, with the Communist philosophy. There is a dispute as to whether books that he wrote were really intended by him to advocate the principles that he mentions, but certainly they sounded as if he was advocating them.

A few quotations from Dr. Saposs may be interesting. He said this in an essay which he wrote, presenting his own views and philosophy:

A specter is haunting the world—the specter of fascism. The foregoing observation is more than a mere paraphrasing of the historic and prophetic opening sentence of the Communist manifesto, written by those profound social diagnosticians, Karl Marx and Friedrich Engels. * * * Unless such a movement [of middle class and workers] is brought into being, capitalism will go marching on, with its poverty, misery, and economic insecurity. The time is ripe; have the middle class and workers the will to rise to the occasion?

Documentary evidence introduced into the record of the House committee disclosed that Saposs acted unofficially as "liaison officer" between those who desired introductions to persons prominent in radical circles abroad and those persons themselves. He gave them letters of introduction to all the radicals in Europe.

Dr. Saposs at one time—showing the general attitude of the Board and its employees—called a meeting of the trial examiners. He was head of the Board's Division of Economic Research. It must be remembered that the trial examiners sit as judges in these cases. They are not the prosecutors; they are the judges. Dr. Saposs called a meeting of all of the trial examiners. Testifying as to the remarks delivered by Saposs before the trial examiners, one witness said:

The remarks of Dr. Saposs were nothing in the world but a plain and open invitation to sabotage every American conception of justice and fair play, and I challenge anybody to truthfully testify to the contrary.

It appears that the burden of Saposs's address was on the subject of "what should be gotten into the record at a Labor Board hearing, aside from direct evidence, to show by inference that employers are fostering company-dominated unions." In other words, Saposs was advising the trial examiners—advising these judges who are sent out by the National Labor Relations Board—how they should manipulate the record so that they might have in the record evidence which would result in a decision against the employer. He was advising the trial examiners, whose exercise of the judicial function requires the strictest impartiality, to assist in developing case records for the Board in such a way as to bolster up allegations in the complaints.

There is no doubt that Mr. Madden supported Dr. Saposs, supported his appointment, and supported him throughout. After the House had deliberately cut off the appropriation for the Division of Economic Research and Dr. Saposs's salary, so that he and his Division would be abolished, Mr. Madden even went to the point of transferring Dr. Saposs to another bureau, sidestepping the decision of the House, and putting him back on the pay roll as the head of the same bureau with a different name. So Mr. Madden certainly is responsible for Dr. Saposs—responsible for the appointment of a man who certainly has the most extreme Communist leanings, and who regarded the so-called judicial functions of the Board as simply a tool against the employers of the United States.

There is another case tending to show, I think, the Communist leanings of the Board, the New York Times case. In that case the Board ordered the reinstatement of some New York Times employees. The case is interesting because it shows how the Board operates throughout. The complaint was filed in November 1937, nearly 3 years before the ultimate decision of the Board. The complaint was amended four times before it was issued in December 1938. In January 1939 the complaint and charge were amended to include the alleged discriminatory discharge of one Grace Porter, a confidential secretary, who had been dismissed in January 1936. It was 3 years after Grace Porter was discharged from the Times before she was included in the Board's complaint. Three years after a man discharged his confidential secretary the Board comes in and says, "You are engaging in an unfair labor practice because you discharged this woman on account of union activities."

The Board found the employer guilty of a violation of section 8 (3), and reinstated Miss Grace Porter with back pay for 3 years. If that does not offend our whole sense of justice, I do not know what can do so. The Board does not even complain for 3 years, and finally it orders a man to pay somebody who was not working full pay for 3 years.

The Times Co.'s defense was that it discharged this woman because it found out that she was a Communist, and her employer said, "I did not want a confidential secretary of mine to be a Communist, or have Communist leanings."

Dr. Leiserson dissented in this case. This was a recent decision; and he said this of the Board's decision, the decision of Mr. Madden and Mr. Smith:

> She was employed at the time at wages higher than she received on the Times.

That is, she was employed at higher wages when the Board finally reinstated her.

> Her employer suspected her of having some connection with a Communist unit on the Times. I am of the opinion that the National Labor Relations Act does not prevent an employer from discharging a confidential secretary whom he does not want to keep because he suspects her of communistic connections.

Dr. Leiserson, in a confidential memorandum addressed to the other members of the Board and to the associate counsel general in charge of the Review Division, amplified his position in this way. He said:

> Porter was a private secretary, and her employer suspected her of working with the Communist unit that was operating in the New York Times. She lied when he questioned her about this. The trial examiner erroneously excluded the offer of Mr. Pringle to corroborate his wife's testimony that she talked to him about her suspicion of communism in connection with Porter. The draft plays down the communism.

Dr. Leiserson further said:

> The reasoning and argumentation in this part of the draft—

That means the draft opinion that the Board was considering, which had been prepared for them—> is farfetched and plainly designed to build up a weak case.

So this New York Times case shows the following:

First, a long period of delay. It certainly is unfair to an employer, 3 years after he has discharged an employee, to come in and for the first time make a complaint, and then require a man to reinstate an employee and pay her 3 years' back salary. It just is contrary to any conception of American justice. He did not even know the Board was complaining of his discharge of Grace Porter until 3 years after he had discharged her, and then he had to go back and pay her for 3 years' services.

Second, characterization of the case as weak by the Board's attorney before the hearing. The attorney himself told the Board the case was weak.

Third, exclusion of an offer of testimony corroborating the charge of communism in connection with Porter by the trial examiner.

There cannot be any doubt about Mr. Madden's responsibility for the attitude of the Board in that case.

Mr. Madden was very largely in charge of what might be called the blacklisting policy of the Board, their effort to use a charge by the National Labor Relations Board against a concern to prevent its getting any Government contract of any kind. That is clear, because Mr. Madden himself wrote the Procurement Division of the Treasury on September 2, 1936, a letter to this effect:

> This is to advise you that Weiss & Klau Co., of New York City, manufacturer of window shades, has been charged by its employees with a violation of the National Labor Relations Act.
> The preliminary investigation made by our agents in that region has shown a sufficient probability that these charges are well founded, so that we have issued a complaint against this company and have scheduled a hearing. We cannot tell just when a formal decision will be made by the Board in this case, but we want to advise you of the present status of the case, in the hope that your department will find itself able to cooperate with our work to the extent of not giving the benefit of Government contracts to persons and companies who violate other Federal laws.

If Mr. Madden was a judicially minded person, would he write a division of the Treasury and say, "We have filed a charge against this concern? We say that it has conducted unfair labor practices, or we are alleging that, but the Board itself will take some time before it can decide the case. We want you to take away any contracts from this company. We want you to be our agent to force the company to come around and say, 'Without trying the case, without presenting our defense, without insisting on a hearing, we are going to agree to what you allege because we want a Government contract.'"

The proposal would be bad enough if it were based on a finding of guilty because I think it is fundamentally unsound for one department of the Government to say "If you violate a law we are going to punish you by having nothing to do with you in another department." As a matter of fact, that is not legal. But it is worse for Mr. Madden to say, "We have filed a charge; it is not proven yet, the case has not been tried, and we do not think we will try it for the present, but it should be taken by you as a reason why any Government contract should be refused."

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. Does the Senator contend that the Government has no right, as a prerequisite to granting a Government contract, a negotiated contract or any other kind of contract, to insist that the contractor shall obey the laws of the United States? Has not the Government the right to say, "We refuse to give a contract to any individual or corporation which deliberately violates the laws of the United States"?

Mr. TAFT. The courts have decided, and the Comptroller General of the United States has decided, that they cannot do that. The Comptroller General of the United States has rendered an opinion in which he has said that where the law provides for low bids the War Department must grant contracts to the lowest bidders, even if they have been violators of Federal law. They may put into the contract a provision to do this or that.

Mr. WAGNER. That is what I am talking about. The Comptroller General decided that there was no provision of law which deprived a particular contractor of his contract under a law providing for award to the lowest bidder. But the Senator does not mean to say that the Government has no right, as a condition precedent, or as a condition to obtaining a contract, to insist that a contractor shall not be a violator of its own law?

Mr. TAFT. No; I say the Government has a right, but the Congress has expressly declined to give that power to any board of the Government up to date. This very Senate last year struck out of the La Follette civil liberties bill such a provision. It was alleged that certain people had violated something prescribed in the law, and that they should be ineligible to get a Government contract for 3 years, but the Senate did not think that was a good policy.

Mr. WAGNER. I recall the incident. Does the Senator himself contend it is a sound policy to give a contract, which is in the nature of a favor from the Government, to one who willfully violates the laws of the Nation?

Mr. TAFT. Yes, I do; frankly. I think that to make every department of the Government a means of persecuting and putting pressure to bear on some man to act in a way he does not want to act in an unsound policy, because it puts in those various departments a power they should not have.

They cannot determine satisfactorily whether a certain man has really violated the law or not. It is not possible to have a dozen different bureaus determining whether a man has violated an act or not. A defendant is entitled, until he is convicted in a court, to the same treatment received by any other man who has not been convicted in a court. What I object to is putting into any law a provision which would permit the Treasury Department to determine whether a man is violating the law or is not violating the law, and use that as a club to make him do something which the Treasury Department or the National Labor Relations Board says he should be doing.

Mr. WAGNER. Let me ask another question, if I may. Suppose the courts have reviewed the facts and have found that the individual did deliberately violate the law. Would the Senator then still say that it was an unsound policy, under those circumstances, to deprive a man of the opportunity to get a favor from the Government?

Mr. TAFT. I think we might pass a law providing that as long as such a man continued the practice of which he had been found guilty he should not be treated with favor. But I think you should not mix up the question of a Government contract under the War Department with the question of the administration of the labor law. I do not think that is wise. Incidentally, that is one of the things which have slowed up the defense program, and will continue to slow it up.

If a man violates the wage-hour law, the law gives the Government plenty of means of going in and enforcing the law. The Government can punish him, can fine him, can issue all kinds of injunctions against him, can put him in jail. Why should we say as a matter of policy that, in addition to that, the Treasury Department could go out and determine whether a certain man had violated some law of the United States when he was after a contract?

Mr. WAGNER. We may differ on the other question; but the last question I asked the Senator was about a case where an individual seeking a Government favor in the way of a contract deliberately violated the law, and had been found by a court to be a violator. Under those circumstances would he still be entitled, although defying the laws of the United States, to favors at the hands of the United States in the way of contracts?

Mr. TAFT. Let me answer the Senator in this way. Let us suppose that a particular company can make airplanes faster and more efficiently than any other company in the United States. I would say, forget their violation of the law; leave their punishment to other departments, and for heaven's sake give them the contract to go ahead and make the airplanes faster than anyone else in the United States can make them. Other things being equal, I would say that the Government should naturally favor those who were not offending other departments of the Government, but if things are not equal, I would not give much weight to the question of whether they were violating some other law which could be enforced by its own proponents, and adequately enforced, with the penalties Congress has prescribed.

Mr. WAGNER. I cannot regard as insignificant a great right which the workers have had conferred upon them—the right to be free men. Under the National Labor Relations Act, since we are speaking about the labor act, there is no penalty provided apart from an order to cease and desist, and a requirement, if there have been unfair discharges, to pay the back salaries and to restore the individuals to their employment. There are no penalties provided in the statute at all.

Mr. TAFT. The Board issues an order to do certain things; and if the respondent does not do those things, he goes to jail. Does not the Senator from Nebraska agree to that interpretation?

Mr. BURKE. Will the Senator yield for one brief remark?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. It seems to me the Senator from New York is getting very far away from the issue raised by the Senator from Ohio. The Senator is offering this contention of Mr. Madden's in reference to the denial of contracts as evidence that Mr. Madden is not judicially minded. Mr. Madden and one associate on the Board never took the position which the Senator from New York now asks the Senator from Ohio whether he would consider sound. They never said to the Treasury Department, the Procurement Division, or any other division, "Wait until the courts have found this man guilty of some violation of law and then deny him a contract." They say, "As soon as we have filed a complaint against a man, you must deny him a contract," and even in some cases where they had admitted in their private memoranda they thought it was a weak case against a man, they wanted him denied the right to serve the Government through a defense contract.

I say that if any man on the National Labor Relations Board, or any other position, takes his stand on the ground—not arguing the other point now—that once the Labor Board has considered that there is a possible violation and has filed a complaint, even before they reach a decision, that of itself proves a man is guilty, I have no respect for that person's judicial temperament.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, the Senator is arguing about an entirely different question. As I recall, that question was not raised by the Senator. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does the Senator take the position that after an individual has been found guilty of a violation of the law by the Board, and the decision of the Board has been sustained by the Supreme Court, nevertheless, in spite of defying the laws of the United States, the individual is entitled to consideration from the Government when he seeks the favor of a contract?

Mr. BURKE. If the Senator will yield in order that I may answer the question, I should say it would depend to a great extent upon the nature of the complaint which was filed. If the complaint which was filed were that the New York Times had discharged a private secretary to one of the officials who leaned so far to the left that the official did not care to have her continue as his private secretary, and the right to discharge such person had been upheld—as it has been in the case to which reference has been made—it should not have anything to do with the granting of contracts. If there are industrialists so backward as to refuse to recognize labor's right of collective bargaining, and to enter into the spirit of the new idea in reference to the partnership between labor and management, and if that can be established as their attitude, I think Congress should then say, "We will not give any Government contract or any business at all to that kind of a person." I assume there still are a few such industrialists, but I say there are very few who share that view.

I think the Senator is entirely mistaken in saying that I misconstrue the position taken by the Senator from Ohio. As I understand, his position is that Mr. Madden showed his lack of judicial qualification by claiming the right to instruct and advise the Treasury and other departments of the Government that they should not have anything to do with a business concern against which Mr. Madden and his associates had filed some kind of a complaint.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the Senator is exactly correct. I read a letter from Mr. Madden to the Procurement Division of the Treasury, in which he said, in effect:

> We have issued a complaint against this company and have scheduled a hearing. We cannot tell how long it may be before the final decision is reached, but meantime, do not give them any Government contracts.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I had passed that point. I asked the Senator the question, when there had been a finding that the individual was violating the law, would the Senator contend that that fact should not deprive him of a favor from the Government? I think the rights of workers are quite as significant as the rights of employers. Their rights ought to be equal. I think if one is guilty of violation of the laws of the United States he is not entitled to any favor. I do not know how we could provide by law that with respect to one kind of violation we would not permit a violator to have a contract, but with respect to another violation we would. Either one violates the law or he does not. I do not see how we can differentiate between the offenses set forth in the legislation, although some administrative flexibility might be authorized for trivial offenses. I should like to hear a suggestion from the Senator as to that particular phase of my question.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I shall be glad to give my view on that question. I think that would be a matter for Congress to consider, and not for the Labor Board or any of the departments to determine. Congress in its wisdom might say that in considering the offenses listed in the Labor Act the offense set out, we will say, in section 8, subsection 3, is considered so serious that, as an additional penalty beyond whatever other penalties there may be in the act, or whatever penalties may be enforced by the court, no employer guilty of violating this section shall be permitted to have any contractual relations with the Federal Government.

While I am on my feet, I will say to the Senator that I disagree with him entirely in the view that the favor is all on one side in the matter of contracts with the Government. Of course, I realize that business and industry want contracts; but we have set up a Defense Commission, and are throwing the whole power of the Government into the effort to bring business and industry to the point where they will take contracts and run the risk of loss after the war is over. A contract is a two-sided arrangement; and I think it is very shortsighted to say that in order to make more effective the provisions of the Labor Relations Act we are going to deprive this generation and our children's children of the right to have adequate defense because we want to put additional teeth into a law which has already been used as a very effective club to hold industry in check.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I feel as strongly as any man in the country about the vigorous prosecution of our defense program. It is very, very important. I think one of the things with which we must all be gratified is the cooperation we now have between industry and labor. Strikes are very exceptional, and I may say that the record shows that in proportion to total population we have fewer disputes in this country today than in Great Britain.

What I am seeking is equal justice for all. I do not want either a labor organization or an employer to obtain any advantage. I still say that it is a favor, in a sense, to obtain any contracts under the defense program, and that anyone who is not ready to abide by the laws of the United States should not receive such favors. I think we can all accept that view. The only question is in the matter of the method. I am sure the Senator does not disagree with me on the fundamental proposition I assert.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the Senator from New York has raised questions which must be distinguished.

First, he is urging the general policy that we should impose additional penalties. My own feeling is against such a step. That is a legislative question, with which Mr. Madden has nothing to do. I am opposed to it because I think the punishment should fit the crime, to get back to Gilbert and Sullivan. [Laughter.] If we assert that the fine should be $10,000 for a certain offense, why add a perfectly indefinite penalty by taking contracts away from the man? Such action would make the penalty far in excess of the $10,000 fine. I do not agree with that theory, but that has nothing to do with the present case. The question was debated last year, and the Senate decided not to put that additional penalty into the La Follette civil liberties bill. However, regardless of the policy, there is no law which permits it today. That is perfectly clear.

Mr. WAGNER. In my question I was trying to ascertain the attitude of the Senator on these matters. I am not urging anything which the Council of National Defense has not asserted as the principle which it has adopted in the prosecution of the defense program with reference to the relations between employer and employee. I am not asserting anything which the Council has not said is a sound policy for it to pursue. The same principle was adopted by the Labor Board, of which the late father of the Senator from Ohio was the distinguished chairman. That Board had asserted that principle as the one which ought to be followed in the prosecution of our defense program in the last war, and it was very definitely followed. A violator of the principle received no favors whatever.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BURKE. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if he favors the expressed and published position taken by Mr. Sidney Hillman in reference to the Ford contract, that defense contracts should be denied the Ford Co. because there is pending before the Board and in the courts a charge against the Ford Co. that it was guilty of violation of the act?

Mr. WAGNER. I have not read in detail the statements made with reference to that controversy; but I can say that I do know, as a matter of fact, that one of the cases brought against Mr. Ford in which the Labor Board found Mr. Ford guilty of unfair labor practices went to the circuit court of appeals. The circuit court of appeals, after a review, held Mr. Ford guilty of violating the law, and the order was entered as a result of that decision. Therefore, we have a court finding Mr. Ford guilty.

Mr. TAFT. And very recently the National Defense Advisory Commission gave Mr. Ford a contract in spite of that decision.

Mr. WAGNER. I am not going to argue one way or the other on a contract with all the facts of which I am not familiar, but I do know that Mr. Ford has been found guilty by the circuit court of appeals of violating the National Labor Relations Act.

Mr. BURKE. The matter is before the Supreme Court of the United States now, I understand, and the circuit court of appeals denied the Labor Board's contention in the most serious part of the case, the one involving the right of free speech, I believe. However, the point I was making was that the Senator from New York said he stood with the Defense Commission in its attitude on this matter, but I think the evidence shows that the Senator's position as now stated may be in accord with that of Mr. Sidney Hillman but certainly he is not in accord with the Defense Commission in this case, because they have gone ahead and given a contract.

Mr. TAFT. Not only that, but the last word in that controversy was the Attorney General's testimony before the House committee regarding his own opinion which was supposed to have supported Mr. Hillman's views, but he says:

> I do not say what has been read into it, that the effect was to prohibit the award of contracts. If the national-defense contracting authorities decide to deal with men who are in violation of the act, that isn't affected by this decision.

That decision was that the decision of the N. L. R. B. should be considered binding on other departments of the Government. Then the National Defense Commission did let a contract. So, I presume, that the authorities are on my side on the question of policy and against that of the Senator from New York. However, the point I was making was entirely different on the question of policy, as to whether, in addition to the penalties prescribed in the act, we want to impose a broad, indefinite, additional penalty for all sorts of other things. The Labor Board issues an order against Mr. Ford, as I understand, and, if he does not comply with it, he is fined or goes to jail. The penalty is in the act, and whether it is desired to add other penalties is a question for Congress to determine. But my point is that Mr. Madden had deliberately asked other departments of the Government to refuse contracts with companies if the Board had filed a charge against such companies, although there had been no hearing whatever. The Board could have had a hearing right away, as it had hearings fast enough when it wanted to, but in this case it was postponing a hearing and no one could tell when the hearing might be held.

Then, there is another charge against Mr. Madden, and that is that there was no law authorizing such blacklisting procedure—for that is what it is; it is a kind of boycott procedure, the creation of a blacklist of firms with which no department of the Government shall deal. Knowing there was no such law, he himself said that these blacklisting activities of the Board had been purely voluntary, and had been in no way authorized by any Federal statute. He admitted that, in fact. I have already stated that the attempts to enact statutes for that purpose have been unsuccessful.

But, undeterred by the mere failing of the Congress to legislate on this matter, the Board supplied this deficiency by usurping the legislative function. It is significant that Madden did not plead ignorance or lack of power to impose such an unusual penalty, but stated in his testimony that he was doubtful at the time that these steps were undertaken whether a governmental agency had the power to resort to such practices.

But, nevertheless, he went ahead and did it.

In addition, the Board went after the Army and Navy. They did not meet with much success in the War Department because in that case, in 1936, the Assistant Secretary of War, Mr. Louis Johnson, refused to go ahead on the request of the Board. Mr. Johnson said:

In view of the foregoing, the War Department is of opinion that it lacks authority to withhold contracts from the corporations in question for the reasons indicated and is unable to suggest any other means of cooperative action believed to be within its lawful authority to take.

As a matter of fact, in that case the Board dropped the case they were complaining about to the War Department; they did not file any proceeding in the circuit court of appeals to enforce their opinion; they simply dropped it and never tried to enforce the charge. Instead of that they have been trying to make the War Department "pull the fat out of the fire" for them. They wanted the War Department to enforce the orders they were making, although they were not willing to go to court to enforce those orders in accordance with the actual terms of the act because apparently they did not have sufficient evidence. They were not deterred by being turned down by the War Department and the Comptroller General, and, on May 1, 1937, General Counsel Fahy addressed a memorandum to the Board reading:

Do you suppose something could be done under the Navy contracts? I am looking into this.

The Navy Department took the same view as the War Department. I say that a board that usurps authority, which tries to take Government contracts away from firms when the laws of the United States do not permit it to do so—that a man particularly who tries to take Government contracts away from anybody against whom only a charge is filed by the Labor Board shows his lack of judicial quality. He shows intense prejudice against the people against whom the Board has filed charges, even though nothing has been proved and he does not know what the outcome of the trial is going to be.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. I understood the Senator to say a little while ago—I was rather confused by his statement that a criminal penalty was provided under the Labor Relations Act.

Mr. TAFT. That is my impression.

Mr. WAGNER. No.

Mr. TAFT. After there is issued an order to cease and desist?

Mr. WAGNER. No. There is absolutely no other penalty, except, as I stated, that reinstatement can be ordered on a proper showing.

Mr. TAFT. I do not claim to be an expert on that procedural question, but my impression was that the Board could issue an order to cease and desist; that it could then go to the circuit court of appeals and have that order affirmed; and if the circuit court of appeals issued an order to cease and desist, a man who violated that order would be in contempt of the court and would go to jail.

Mr. WAGNER. That is the exercise of an inherent power of the court.

Mr. TAFT. The point is that a man can be punished by being sent to jail, and there is no necessity for additional punishment by taking away from him Government contracts.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, as the Senator knows, in spite of many things that have been said rather loosely, a Labor Board order does not become effective until the court approves and enforces it. Of course, it is entirely in the discretion of the court. Then, if there is a violation of any order the court issues, the court has the inherent power, and has had it from the beginning of time, to punish for contempt any acts in violation of its orders. That is inherent. But we have not given the Board that power.

Mr. TAFT. If the Senator from New York thinks that the penalties prescribed by the Labor Act are inadequate, then the way to make the penalties adequate is to prescribe them by law. It is not for the Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board to prescribe new penalties which are not provided by law and which the Comptroller General says are contrary to law.

Mr. WAGNER. I have not suggested any amendments to the law which would increase the penalties now provided; I have been resisting amendments which have been proposed, and many of which have been accepted by the other House which would be destructive of rights granted under the law. That has been my attitude.

Mr. TAFT. I think, however, it is perfectly clear, regardless of differences on policies, that the Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board has been trying to blacklist firms against whom no charge has been proved; nothing had been even found by the Board, and certainly nothing had been found by the courts. I say that is the kind of action that no man with a judicial mind would take.

I now come to the question of the lobbying activities of Mr. Madden. From the time Mr. Madden has been on the Board he, in common with all the other members of the Board, has been steadily lobbying Congress, in violation of the statutes of the United States. The House committee went into the matter rather fully, and their report states as follows:

Ex-Chairman Madden himself participated in these lobbying activities; he stated that on several occasions he had asked prominent union officials to testify in opposition to amendments to the act being considered by the Senate Committee on Education and Labor. A conference of Board Members Madden and Edwin S. Smith with various subordinate employees of the Board was described in a Board memorandum as a meeting to discuss appropriate witnesses for the hearing before the Senate committee.

During a discussion with the Board's regional directors, ex-Chairman Madden suggested that letters being sent to congressional representatives by union officials should be spaced over a period of time, the obvious purpose being to persuade Members of Congress to the belief that these expressions of opinion were spontaneous rather than inspired by the Board. Madden added that it would save the regional directors "a lot of last-minute solicitation."

Mr. Madden said, in effect, "I should like to have a lot of letters sent to Congressmen protesting against amendments to the National Labor Relations Act; and you want to go out and see that union fellows have those letters spaced from time to time, so that they will look as if they were spontaneous and do not all come in in a flood that looks like an inspired propaganda." Not only was Mr. Madden lobbying before Congress in trying to bring influence to bear on Members of Congress, but he was also trying to conceal from the Members of Congress the manner in which he was conducting that solicitation of letters.

Allen Rosenberg, a subordinate Board employee, testified that the Senate Committee on Education and Labor had authorized the Board to call expert witnesses to testify concerning the proposed amendments. When a certain Dr. Thyson volunteered to testify, however, he was not deemed a suitable witness, for he favored amending the act to provide for a five-man board. The invitation to appear as an expert witness was so handled by the Board as to preclude the offer of any testimony in opposition to the act.

In other words, we authorized the Board to go out and get expert witnesses, and they went out and got only the expert witnesses who would testify to what the Board wanted them to testify. That is a definition of "research" and "expert" which any really conscientious expert would deny.

One prospective witness was willing to be "coached" along the lines that "you" (ex-Chairman Madden) "may think desirable."

In other words, Madden was conducting the hearing and producing the witnesses before our committee against amendments to the National Labor Relations Act.

The methods pursued by the Board in obtaining witnesses to testify before the Senate committee are exemplified by the contents of communications between Nathan Witt, ex-secretary of the Board, and a regional director. I might say that Mr. Witt, the secretary, was supported throughout by Mr. Madden. After Mr. Leiserson came in, he tried to get rid of Mr. Witt; and Madden and Smith stood together against any modification of Mr. Witt's status. This regional director advised the secretary's assistants that an attorney who had represented both A. F. of L. and C. I. O. unions would be happy to testify "in the event his business calls him to Washington in the course of the hearings on the amendments." Witt's contemplated reply again indicates the lack of any scruples as to the ways and means employed. He writes back to the regional director:

It has occurred to me that Mr. Combs, the attorney, might at the present time have cases awaiting oral argument before the Board. Will you ascertain if such is the case; and if so, we believe that it would be possible to schedule oral argument during the period in which he might be expected to testify before the committee.

In other words, here they are saying to a contestant, a lawyer who is appearing before their own Board in various cases in oral argument, "When you come on to do that, won't you just testify before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor?" Obviously a man testifying in that way would be most anxious to please the National Labor Relations Board in order that he might obtain a favorable decision from the Board. That kind of lobbying is hardly fair treatment of the Senate of the United States or the Committee on Education and Labor.

Witt also suggested to Krivonos, one of his "goon squad," one of his special investigators, then on the west coast, that he ask several prominent movie actors, actresses, directors, and writers to appear before the Senate committee to record their opposition to all amendments to the act. The Board put about 8 or 10 attorneys on that hearing, and they spent their whole time during all the time we were in session—about 4 months—in preparing the case, not only preparing the testimony of Board witnesses but in bringing other people from all over the United States to testify before our committee, witnesses who were supposed to be coming of their own accord to tell us what they really thought about the act and what ought to be done about the act.

United States Code, title 18, section 201, makes the direct or indirect use of any part of a congressional appropriation for activities seeking to influence the actions of a Member of Congress to favor or oppose any legislation or appropriation of Congress a criminal offense, punishable by mandatory removal from office, and providing also criminal penalties. In spite of a complaint by the House committee to the Attorney General, that complaint has been entirely ignored by the Attorney General.

Mr. Madden himself takes a peculiar view of the right of free speech under the Constitution of the United States; and his views on that subject perhaps will throw some light on the general attitude that he has. We were discussing the question of how far an employer may go. May an employer say anything if there is a labor dispute? May he express his individual views? Mr. Madden's position practically is that any expression of opinion having any relation to the case might be coercion and be declared an unfair labor practice, and the man might be penalized or, if he had a contract with an A. F. of L. union, the Board might annul the contract and turn the union over to the C. I. O.

This is Mr. Madden testifying before our committee:

I am willing to say this: Suppose you have a print shop or a newspaper publishing shop in which there has been a union, a pressmen's union or a typographical union, which has been recognized by the employer for 25 years, and has had contracts with him over that period of time. There has not been any attempt on the part of the employer to interfere with the union, but this particular year the union is making demands for increased wages. I should say that that employer speaking to employees whom he knew familiarly could perfectly well say, "I think your union is making exorbitant demands; I think you are acting like a lot of highway robbers."

In those circumstances I do not think that that expression by the employer would have the slightest effect upon the existence of that union, and therefore it would not come within the provisions of the statute which say that an employer may not interfere with, restrain, or coerce.

But Mr. Madden says that if the union is a new union and you say that to them, that is coercion. He says it is coercion to use the same expression in a situation in which the union is new and timid. Why on earth a man should not be able to say to a union, if he wants to, "I think the demands you are making are exorbitant and you are acting like a lot of highway robbers" I do not know. It seems to me freedom of speech demands that you shall be free to tell fellows what you think of them if you want to. There is not in those words, so far as I can see, the slightest evidence of coercion or threat or any other action against that particular union.

I said to Mr. Madden:

Then the result of that would be that the Board would find that you could call an A. F. of L. union anything, but you cannot call a C. I. O. union anything. That would be the result of the statement that you have just made.

Mr. MADDEN. If it does have that result, Senator, it is because of the facts of the living world and not because of any particular provision in the law.

Mr. Madden goes on:

Let me take another illustration. Take this time a new union. The employer says, "I think the leaders of this union are a lot of Communists and 'reds.'" That may be his opinion, but the effect of his expression of that opinion to a set of working people who are just feeling a way—feeling their way in this union business—would almost certainly be coercive. I think that under other circumstances that the expression probably would not be coercive at all.

In other words, Mr. Madden says that an employer may not say to his men, "The leaders of this union who are trying to organize the plant are Communists;" and he goes on to say, "You must not say that, even if they are Communists; even though it is a fact." Mr. Madden says, "No; the National Labor Relations Act says that a man may not use those words. He may not tell his men the truth." Mr. Madden says that if an employer goes to his men and says, "The leaders of this union are Communists," and they are Communists, it is an unfair labor practice, and he is liable to the penalties of the act, and if he happens to be favoring one union the other union gets all the breaks in the decision of the Board.

It seems to me that shows a fundamental lack of appreciation of the Constitution of the United States and the fundamental principles of free speech and freedom of action, a lack which has characterized all the actions of the Labor Board. I do not think they have the slightest regard for the Constitution of the United States in any respect, and certainly that shows a direct attitude by Mr. Madden which is contrary to all my conceptions, at least, of what the Constitution is and what freedom of speech may amount to.

The Board in a number of cases has gone out, as I have said, in the course of its crusading spirit, and deliberately stimulated litigation. They have not been satisfied to wait, as the Board should wait, until someone makes a complaint, until there are some men who want to organize and their employer in some way interferes with that organization. The Board in many cases has gone out and deliberately stimulated industrial strife.

Contrary to the general opinion expressed by the Senator from New York, the table I have shows that the National Labor Relations Act does not by any means reduce the number of strikes. In fact, it has almost steadily increased them. I have here a table which I ask permission to put into the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TABLE 1.—Strikes in the United States, 1881 to 1905 and 1914 to 1939

Mr. TAFT. The table shows the number of strikes in this country from 1881 to 1939. Roughly speaking, just to show what the table demonstrates, beginning with 1922 there were 1,100; in 1923 there were 1,500; in 1924 there were 1,200; in 1925 there were 1,300; in 1926 there were a thousand. Then the number dropped to 700; the next year to 600; 900 in 1929; 637 in 1930; 810 in 1931; 841 in 1932; in 1933, 1,695; in 1934, 1,856; in 1935, when the present Board was appointed, there were 2,014; in 1936, 2,172; in 1937, 4,740. I may say that the era of strikes in 1937, in my opinion, was one of the immensely important factors in bringing about the depression of 1937. It was the flood of sit-down strikes which caused the hesitation of all employers to go ahead, which I believe had a substantial effect in cutting down the orders for capital goods which resulted in the depression of 1937.

In 1938 the number dropped to 2,700; in 1939 it was 2,600; and I think I have seen, although I do not vouch for it, that in 1940 the number was slightly more than in 1939. But in any event, in 1938, 1939, and 1940 the number was over twice what it was during the period from 1922 to 1925 following the World War.

To a large extent litigation has been promoted by the action of the National Labor Relations Board, and I wish to cite a few particular cases in which there was a deliberate solicitation of business contrary to the whole purpose, the whole idea, of the National Labor Relations Act. The extent to which Mr. Madden participated in that I think will show a complete misconception of his duties as a member of the National Labor Relations Board. Certainly at no point has there been any judicial consideration by any member of the Board of the cases before it.

Mr. Madden says frankly that they should not do what the record shows they did. In one place he testified as follows:

> We certainly should not go out and drum up business, Senator.

He was addressing the able Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]—

> We proceed only upon charges filed by people who have, or think they have, a grievance. What we are doing, I hope, is to intelligently and diligently take care of the cases that are brought to us.

But in the Inland Steel case they went out and deliberately stimulated the filing of a complaint in order to raise the question of whether or not the act required the signing of a contract when agreement was reached, or whether it did not do that. Mr. Witt, the secretary, suggested that the C. I. O. union should ask for exclusive bargaining representation instead of merely bargaining representation for its own members. That is what the union wanted to do. But Mr. Witt said, "You go out and ask for exclusive bargaining representation, because that will enable us to raise another question we want to raise."

> This would open the way toward further negotiations leading to demands for a written agreement and the possibilities of a test case. The C. I. O. was reasonably certain that the Inland Steel Co. would refuse this request, in view of a prior refusal, presumably based on the absence in the statute of any requirement of a written agreement. The theory of this procedure, as apparently expressed by Witt in a memorandum to Fahy, general counsel to the Board, was to entrap the company into an inadvertent violation of the act, which would serve as an excuse for the Board to intervene. On the refusal of the company to negotiate with a view to concluding a written labor contract, the C. I. O. union would then be in a position to file a charge under section 8 (5).

The whole case was planned and managed out of the office of the National Labor Relations Board with Mr. Madden's full approval, as will appear later.

Mr. Witt's memorandum stated:

> "* * * Thus the case is proceeding along the lines indicated in my memorandum of June 3. Mr. Dorfman will be ready to issue a complaint immediately upon charge filed and will await word from Washington as to the date of hearing. This will depend largely on the readiness of Dr. Saposs—chief of the Board's Division of Economic Research—to present evidence on the question of a signed agreement."

In other words, the whole case would be prepared in the Board office before any charge had been filed at all by the C. I. O. union.

In the Berkshire Knitting Mills case, the Board took a more active part in stirring up labor strife than they had in any other case up to that time. The Secretary of the Board wrote a memorandum to the regional director of the Philadelphia office, saying this:

> The Board is interested in finding out whether the situation at the Berkshire Knitting Mills has revealed anything which would be a possible basis for a charge of unfair labor practice.

There had been a strike, but no charge filed—

> Will you send us a report on the issues which caused the strike, and a statement of whether any unfair labor practices were involved.

The next day the Philadelphia regional director replied that, in response to Wolf's memorandum, the officers of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers had conferred with him and that the president of that union and several of his fellow union officers did not believe at that time, December 31, 1936, that any unfair labor practice had been committed by the Berkshire Co. The reply read in part:

> They [the union officials] stated that while some of the officials of the union thought facts might warrant intervention by the Board, it was the opinion of President Rieve [American Federation of Hosiery Workers] and of themselves that there was no unfair labor practice involved upon which they could base a charge of violation of the National Labor Relations Act.

Here is the Board saying to this union, "Can you not find something to file a charge on? We want to come in and proceed against this company." The union said, "Oh, no; we do not know of any." But that did not satisfy them. Nor did they feel it was wise to press a charge of refusal to meet for the purpose of collective bargaining, since the company would undoubtedly raise the point that they did not represent a majority of the workers.

So here is the minority being fomented by the Board to go ahead and file a charge, although they were not willing to try to prove that they had a majority of the workers. The charges were filed finally under pressure of the Board.

It is important to note that, although the charges were filed in January 1937, the complaint was not authorized until September 13, 1937, and was not issued until November 6, 1937. The reasons given for the failure to issue this complaint until some 9½ months after the filing of the charges are readily understandable upon perusal of the various weekly reports received from the Philadelphia regional office. For instance, the one dated February 17, 1937, stated:

"Present status of case: Held in abeyance at request of union, pending possibility of general strike."

But they did not go ahead with the charge because there was a possibility of a general strike, and they did not want to interfere with it.

The weekly report of February 24, 1937, reads:

I also went to Reading and conferred with union officials, and talked to John Edelman, of the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, who stated that I might quote him as speaking officially when he said that the union requested the Board to hold the charge which it had filed against the company in abeyance for the present. There is a strong possibility of a general strike developing in Reading over the situation in the Berkshire Mills, and the union would like to wait on that for a week or two.

The purpose of the National Labor Relations Act was to reduce labor strikes and to decrease industrial disputes and disturbances; yet the Board was deliberately aiding and abetting the promotion of industrial strife by persuading a union to file a charge which it did not want to file, and then holding off the hearing at the request of the union, because apparently it did not have a case, and also because it was thought that there was a possibility of a general strike developing, and the Board wanted the union to have the opportunity to go ahead with the general strike.

That sort of procedure is common throughout the whole action of the National Labor Relations Board. I myself know of a case in Canton, Ohio. In Canton is located the Hoover Carpet Sweeper Co. Mr. Hoover has always been very kind to everybody in the town. He has always dealt with his employees through a company union. An attempt was made by the C. I. O. to organize the employees, and it failed for the very good reason that the men did not want an outside union because the management happened to be very popular, and such an outstanding example of beneficial work for its employees that nobody cared to change the situation which existed.

There was a hearing and the effort fell through. Finally I think the charge was dismissed, but the National Labor Relations Board thought something ought to be done about it. The Board did not like the idea of an independent union. Application was then filed by the independent union to be recognized as the bargaining agent, and the Board sent Mr. Krivonos, one of the "goon squad," out to Cleveland to the regional office. He told Mr. Miller that the Board wanted all petitions for independent unions put "in the ice box" and kept there. He stated that the policy of the Board was never to touch a petition for an independent union, but to let it wait. He said, in effect, "We will not undertake to recognize them, and maybe something will occur so that we shall not have to recognize them."

But Miller said, "There is no opposition. Nobody else is now claiming to represent the employees of the Hoover Carpet Sweeper Co."

Mr. Krivonos said, "Why don't you get the C. I. O. to file a charge? It does not make any difference what it is. Surely they can find some charge of unfair labor practice."

Miller said, "They are not interested. They say they cannot hope to organize the plant. The men do not want them there." Krivonos said, "Never mind. Call up the C. I. O. on the telephone."

So they called the union officials on the telephone and told them to file an unfair labor charge so that the petition of the independent union could be held in abeyance. That was done. The charge was filed. The attorney for the independent union came to see me about a year ago. I think that at that time his application had been held by the Board for more than 2 years, in the hope that in some way the Board could avoid granting a petition filed by an independent union. As I understand, recently the Board finally did grant the petition, but in the meantime the union was threatened with disintegration. The attorney told me that so long as the Board refused to recognize the independent union, the union naturally tended to fall apart. The men did not think it was a regular union, and they had in mind the possibility that the Board might come in and promote some kind of a C. I. O. union in the plant.

I cite that case as an example showing that the Board, with Mr. Madden's approval, has deliberately stimulated litigation under the National Labor Relations Act, and stirred up industrial strife, because apparently, instead of treating the matter in a judicial manner, the Board wanted to crusade and organize into some national union every employee in the United States, whether or not the employees in any particular location wanted to be organized.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. BURKE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TAFT. I yield first to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield for that purpose?

Mr. TAFT. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE in the chair). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Caraway	Johnson, Calif.	Sheppard
Ashurst	Chavez	Lee	Taft
Austin	Connally	Lucas	Thomas, Utah
Ball	Danaher	McCarran	Townsend
Barkley	Davis	Mead	Wagner
Bone	Frazier	Miller	Wallgren
Bunker	Gurney	Minton	Wheeler
Burke	Hale	Nye	White
Byrnes	Hayden	O'Mahoney	Wiley
Capper	Holman	Schwartz

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-nine Senators having answered to their names, there is not a quorum present. The clerk will call the names of the absent Senators.

The legislative clerk called the names of the absent Senators and Mr. BILBO, Mr. BULOW, Mr. GUFFEY, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. KING, Mr. NEELY, Mr. RUSSELL, and Mr. TRUMAN answered to their names when called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be instructed to request the presence of absent Senators so as to make a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. GILLETTE, Mr. GREEN, Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado, Mr. REYNOLDS, and Mr. VANDENBERG entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I have been citing cases to prove the completely unjudicial character of the proceedings of the National Labor Relations Board, in many cases concurred in and in general completely concurred in by Mr. Madden, the nominee for appointment to the Court of Claims.

I now refer to the case of the American Radiator Co., in which the Board also engaged in the deliberate solicitation of litigation. Instead of sitting back and simply listening to complaints that are made, the Board seems to have conceived its function as a matter of going out and stirring up labor strife, of stimulating litigation, of advising litigants how they could best make the records that the Board wanted, so that the Board might decide in their favor.

In the American Radiator case, the field representative of the Board, while investigating the charges of unfair labor practices made against the company, made this statement to several witnesses or prospective witnesses. He said:

Of course, you know that I am working for the C. I. O., and the C. I. O. will benefit you by back pay.

He was a field representative and employee of the Board.

In regard to an alleged lock-out by the company, one of the witnesses testified that this man came to him and asked him if he would not say it was a lock-out.

I told him I would not, because I didn't have any way to prove it. He said, "By God, you swear it, and I will prove it."

Several witnesses testified that the Board's representative had made these statements. The statements disturbed the Board's attorney so much that he called up Mr. Madden to know whether he ought to permit the witnesses to testify to these remarks by the Board's representative, and Mr. Madden advised him that he thought he had better let the testimony go in the record, and it did go in the record. Even though the Board, through Mr. Madden and through a later report by the review attorney, was familiar with the activities of this field representative, it did not do anything. It did not discipline him or call him down. It continued him in office, and it raised his salary from $3,800 a year to $4,000 a year within a few months thereafter. Certainly that is a sponsoring by Mr. Madden of the kind of solicitation of witnesses in which this man engaged.

I shall not cover the entire actions of the Board personnel; but the committee of the House came to this conclusion:

It is obvious to the committee that the Board had none of that impartiality, none of that sense of balance, which characterizes a sound and capable judicial or quasi-judicial body.

In other words, a committee of the House of Representatives has found my claim in this case to be correct. It has found that Mr. Madden is not a judge; that he has no sense of judicial propriety. The committee says of the Board:

Its readiness to accept settlement of a weak case is a strong indictment of its own policies—any decent administrative body would have acknowledged its error by dismissing a case it could not support in a court.

That is the case in which the intraoffice memorandum says that the Board's representatives said it was a weak case, and they were told in effect, "Well, get the best settlement that you can. Settle the case." Instead of finding out what the facts were and dismissing the case, the Board regarded themselves as an attorney against the company rather than as a quasi-judicial body.

In the case of the Donnelly Garment Co., the attorneys for the respondent proposed to put employees of the Donnelly Garment Co. on the witness stand, and offered to prove through their testimony that the Donnelly garment workers' union—that was the independent union—had not been dominated by the company. They offered to put on every employee, if you please, to prove that he wanted to join the independent union; that it was entirely a voluntary action on their part; that there had been no coercion. The Board refused to permit any such testimony.

It is interesting to read what the circuit court of appeals said in a similar case dealing with the same question—the case of the National Labor Relations Board against the Automotive Maintenance Machinery Co., decided on December 12 of this year. In that case 31 employees testified at the hearing, and all of them testified that they were members of the independent union, and that they wished the independent union to represent them. Inferentially, and sometimes directly, they said they did not want the C. I. O. to represent them. There was no other testimony from any other employee of the company.

The theory of the Board seemingly is—that the contest is not one wherein the employees are interested.

The court says—

What they want is not material so far as the Board is concerned.

It is a contest between the employer and the C. I. O. and the employees are merely the causi belli.

I am quoting from the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit.

An opposing theory is builded upon the premises that the National Labor Relations Act was enacted for the benefit of the employees and to improve the relationship between the employer and the employee. As we tried to point out in the case of Foote Bros. v. National Labor Relations Board (114 F. 2d 611), the act was passed to protect the employees, to give them the free and unrestricted right to organize, to bargain collectively, and to freely select the agent to represent them in collective bargaining. The Board's selection of a bargaining agent is quite as violative of the spirit of the act as the employer's domination of the employees when they are making their choice.

* * * * * * *

Nearly all the employees took the witness stand. Thirty-one out of thirty-one favored AMMCO. We do not go so far as to hold they could not be influenced. We merely hold their expressed wishes under oath, where full and free cross-examination was possible, may not be, as here, wholly ignored. Because of its so doing, we are convinced that the order of the Board should not be enforced.

I cite this case because it describes correctly the Board's attitude. Its attitude throughout has been that it does not make any difference what the employees want; if the C. I. O. or any other organizing unit comes in and says, "We want to organize these men," then the Board gets behind them and does everything it can to assist them, and in some cases actually stimulates the organization. In that respect I think the members of the Board have completely misunderstood or completely ignored their quasi-judicial obligations.

There is one recent case which certainly violates the ordinary man's idea of what the Board may do. The Board, in the Waumbec Mills case, reinstated, as they termed it, with back pay for 3 years, two men who never had been employees of the company. I personally do not understand how such a conclusion can be reached. I do not believe the ordinary individual or the ordinary Senator can see how an act which authorizes the Board to reinstate employees with back pay can be taken to include men who never were employees of the company.

The House committee says the Board established a new record for ingenuity by ordering the respondent company to hire men never before in its employ and requiring them to give these men back pay from the time of the refusal of employment to the date of their employment by virtue of the Board's offer.

Mr. Madden testified himself that he felt that under the remedies given in the act the Board could devise any kind of additional remedies in addition to what was already stated specifically in the act, such as reinstatement of employment, with or without back pay.

In the Fansteel case, which is one of the leading cases, the Board ordered a reinstatement, with back pay, of employees who had participated in a sit-down strike. The Board took the position that it did not make any difference whatsoever what an employee had done—whether he had violated the law or whether he had committed a felony, whether the employees had seized the plant in violation of the ordinary rights of any employer. The Board reinstated those employees. I think that very act is one in which no Senator would be involved. I think it is contrary to the ordinary concept of justice, and that is what the Supreme Court of the United States finally found it to be. They reversed the Board and ruled that they could not reinstate such employees with back pay.

While that case was before the Supreme Court, the Board attorneys agreed in another case that they would abide by the Court's decision in that case—another case of sit-down strike.

The Court's decision stated:

"At the argument counsel for the Board admitted that the case would be governed by the ultimate decision of Fansteel Metallurgical Corporation against National Labor Relations Board * * * then argued, but undecided, in the Supreme Court. In spite of this concession after the handing down of the opinion * * * counsel for the Board has filed a supplemental memorandum attempting to distinguish the case at bar.

"The futility of relying on differences rather than distinctions is possibly 'caviar to the general' but is certainly hornbook to the barrister. * * *"

It is to be borne in mind that the respondent was obliged to take this case into the circuit court and that court showed its full realization of the public-policy aspect involved, for its decision said:

"By the same token, we think the insistence upon this appeal is a disservice to the best interests of the 'labor movement' and so a disservice to the national life of which it is such a vital part."

I cite that case, which shows the Board's disposition, even when rebuked by the Supreme Court, even when reversed by the Supreme Court, to get away just as far as possible from the law as construed by the Supreme Court.

In the case of the Standard Lime & Stone Co. they attempted to distinguish also. They said:

In this case we will abide by the decision of the Supreme Court, we will abide by the rule that men actually found guilty could not be reinstated, but those who assisted those men we will reinstate.

The Court in reversing the Board in that case also said:

In explanation of its order directing the company to reinstate the eight men who had confessed participation in the conspiracy to blow up the power lines or the commission of assaults upon workers at the plant, the Board has this to say:

"With the exception of the eight men who pleaded guilty to the commission of a felony * * * we cannot concur in the respondent's contention that these individuals have disqualified themselves from reemployment. 'The Board's power to order the reinstatement of employees is equitable in nature, to be exercised in the light of all of the circumstances of the case. Here the respondent itself has violated the law of the land. Under all the circumstances and without condoning the illegal acts of the strikers, we feel that such acts should not be a bar to the reinstatement of any except the eight mentioned above."

We find nothing in the act to support this assertion of power on the part of the Board, and we perceive no equitable circumstance to justify its exercise in this case.

The case of the Edison Co. was also referred to by the House committee, a case which was brought to our attention very largely by the American Federation of Labor's attorneys, a case in which an American Federation of Labor union had organized practically all of the employees of the Edison Co. of New York. There were something like 30,000 employees, and something like 80 percent of them had been members of that union. The Board proceeded, in spite of that fact, to declare invalid the contracts which the company had with that particular union, on the ground that the employer had in some way favored that union against the C. I. O. union, which had a much smaller number of men.

As an example of the Board's general tendency to conduct its procedure against the employer, one quotation from the opinion of Chief Justice Hughes is interesting. In one case the examiner refused to permit the company to proceed with witnesses, although the witnesses were in court, and there was no reason why they should not proceed. Justice Hughes said:

We agree with the court of appeals that the refusal to receive the testimony was unreasonable and arbitrary. Assuming, as the Board contends, that it had a discretionary control over the conduct of the proceeding, we cannot but regard this action as an abuse of discretion.

In that case the Board refused arbitrarily to hear the testimony of the witnesses.

There are other cases in which the Board has refused subpenas to the employer. The Board made a rule which any lawyer would say was unfair, that the Board attorney, the prosecuting attorney, could produce any witness, could issue a subpena for anyone he wanted to get, but that the employer could not get a subpena, even though the case was out on the Pacific coast, without coming to Washington and getting a subpena from the Board itself to make someone appear before the trial examiner on the Pacific coast to testify. The result was, of course, that they had great difficulty in doing that, and in many cases the refusal of the Board to give the employer any fair opportunity to issue subpenas and get witnesses before the Board resulted in the employers finally abandoning the effort to get the witnesses, and in not having a fair opportunity to present their case. That was a rule of the Board and a practice of the Board, with which Mr. Madden must have been familiar, for which certainly he must be held responsible.

The main issue in the Fansteel case was the power of the Board to invalidate a contract with a union. After all, that was a contract made by a company with a union, just exactly what the act says it must do, the union having a majority of the employees, and the Board set aside the contract and opened the field for organization by the C. I. O.

Mr. Justice Hughes said, in criticizing the Board's action:

The act contemplates the making of contracts with labor organizations. That is the manifest objective in providing for collective bargaining. Under section 7 the employees of the companies are entitled to self-organization, to join labor organizations and to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing. The 80 percent of the employees who were members of the brotherhood and its locals, had that right. They had the right to choose the brotherhood as their representative for collective bargaining and to have contracts made as the result of that bargaining. Nothing that the employers had done deprived them of that right. Nor did the contracts make the brotherhood and its locals exclusive representatives for collective bargaining. * * * Moreover, the fundamental purpose of the act is to protect interstate and foreign commerce from interruptions and obstructions caused by industrial strife. This purpose appears to be served by these contracts in an important degree. Representng such a large percentage of the employees of the companies, and precluding strikes and providing for the arbitration of disputes, these agreements are highly protective to interstate and foreign commerce. They contain no terms which can be said to "affect commerce" in the sense of the act so as to justify their abrogation by the Board.

Yet, the Board declared that contract invalid. The opinion continued:

The disruption of these contracts, even pending proceedings to ascertain by an election the wishes of the majority of employees, would remove that salutary protection during the intervening period.

* * * * * * *

We conclude that the Board was without authority to require the petitioning companies to desist from giving effect to the brotherhood contracts.

We have many cases put before us by the American Federation of Labor in which the Board had similarly invalidated contracts, and I think in every case they were American Federation of Labor contracts. So far as I can remember, no C. I. O. contract was ever invalidated, but whenever the Board felt that the employer was favoring one union over the other, on very thin evidence or no evidence at all, the Board found some offense under the act on the part of the employer. It invalidated the contract, although a majority of the employees had made the contract and wanted the contract, and there was no evidence that they would not have made it regardless of the action of the employer. A board which deliberately sets aside contracts, which were the very purpose of the act, as stated by the Supreme Court, is certainly a board which must be so influenced by bias and prejudice that its members are not qualified to be judges of the United States courts.

I think the history of the Board with relation to the longshoremen's union on the Pacific coast and in the South is further typical evidence of the prejudice of the Board. Senators know, of course, what was held in the Pacific coast longshoremen's case. The Board—I believe in violation of the law—recognized the entire Pacific coast as a single unit for bargaining purposes, combining all the longshoremen on the Pacific coast, who were organized in several unions, among which were an independent union, an American Federation of Labor union, and a C. I. O. union under the control of Harry Bridges. The Board recognized the whole area as one unit, knowing well that the C. I. O. would have a majority if all the Pacific coast longshoremen were put in one boat, whereas in three of the ports the American Federation of Labor had a majority. Of course, the result has produced a constant stream of difficulty. In a port like Tacoma, where there is an A. F. of L. union, to say, "You fellows cannot represent yourselves in dealing with your employer. You must recognize the majority and be governed by some fellow down in San Francisco. You must let Harry Bridges run your affairs and represent you with the employers" has naturally been far from making labor peace, and has stirred up constant and increased contest and violence in the longshoremen's field.

Even then the Board was not satisfied with the situation. Mr. Edwin Smith is closely allied with Harry Bridges. Mr. Madden must have known it, and yet he has practically allied himself with Mr. Smith against Mr. Leiserson in all the activities of the Board since Mr. Leiserson was appointed. Mr. Smith tried more or less to conceal his connection with Harry Bridges, and to make it appear only casual. In that connection

I should like to read a portion of the House committee's report. Mr. Smith went to the Pacific coast, where he met Harry Bridges and a number of others, and then came back and posted a notice on the bulletin board to the following effect:

Mr. Edwin S. Smith has just returned from a trip to the Pacific coast, where he inquired into the labor situation, especially in the shipping industry, and talked to Harry Bridges; Lundberg, of the Maritime Federation; and other labor leaders, businessmen, and public officials. He has a very interesting story to tell about the situation, and you are invited to hear him tell it on Thursday, April 2, at 4:30 p. m. in the hearing room.

So Board Member Smith got together all the employees—including the judicial employees and the prosecuting employees—and then proceeded to make a speech, in which the testimony tends to show that he made the statement that—

Harry Bridges is a great labor leader.

I now quote from Joseph Ryan, president of the other labor union, writing to the President of the United States, so that Mr. Madden certainly had notice of it. Mr. Ryan said:

Board Member Smith has made the statement that Harry Bridges is a great labor leader, which is, of course, his prerogative to believe; but I feel it was childish of him to call a meeting of his entire staff, including stenographers and telephone operators, to impress upon them that Bridges is the type of labor leader our country needs.

Smith said he saw Bridges at only a few places, and when attention was called to the fact that he had attended a meeting with him in Baltimore, he said that that fact had slipped his mind. He said:

The Baltimore incident, so-called, with Mr. Bridges, referred to yesterday by Mr. Emerson in his testimony, did slip my mind at the time.

As a matter of fact, Smith arranged for the Baltimore meeting with Bridges through the regional director of the Board in that city. This took place on December 17, 1936, after a mass strike meeting held in the Fifth Regiment Armory, where Bridges was the principal speaker. Smith and Nathan Witt, secretary of the Board, were on the platform at this strike meeting. They sat on the platform with Mr. Bridges while he made his speech urging the merits of the C. I. O. union. Later that night they conferred with Harry Bridges and the Baltimore regional director in the private law office of Regional Attorney Jacob Blum.

Bridges went back to the Pacific coast, and Mr. Smith conducted a very friendly correspondence with him, showing that he was tied up with him in trying to organize the union. I have no doubt that the exceptional decision of the Board providing an industry-wide unit for bargaining was inspired by the desire to give Bridges control of the longshoremen on the Pacific coast, as against any American Federation of Labor union.

To show the terms on which Mr. Smith and Mr. Bridges were, Mr. Smith received a letter from Bridges, from the Pacific coast, saying:

We are engaged in trying to force the shipowners to officially execute our agreement now that we have the Board's decision. It is too bad you had to sidestep the question of ownership of the contract as that is the point our employers are hanging their hats on.

Bridges addressed another letter to Smith in 1938 about Hawaii, in which he said:

At the same time, because of the employers' Hawaiian control over the whole situation in the islands, it needs a strong man and one who is not susceptible or easily swayed by the arguments, intimidations, etc., and I hope you will do what you can to see that somebody of the type of Mr. Eagen or Mr. Edises can be immediately selected for Hawaii.

Such a man was selected, and Mr. Smith replied:

I agree with you as to the importance of having the right sort of man in Hawaii, and the Board has this very much in mind. * * * If you ever get to Washington, I should be glad to talk these matters over with you.

The direct tie-up between the Board and the C. I. O. became very apparent when the Board intervened in the longshoremen's situation in the Southeast. The testimony of Mr. Googe, of the American Federation of Labor, shows that in the Southeast the American Federation of Labor first organized the longshoremen in New Orleans, Mobile, and along the Atlantic coast. They had several strikes, and they made substantial headway in the progress of that case. They obtained control of the situation after a strike in which Mr. McGrady, of the Labor Department, was the arbitrator. Mr. McGrady conducted the elections in that case. The C. I. O. was not in the picture at all, and the American Federation of Labor unions won overwhelmingly. They then went on and obtained several wage increases. Finally, in 1938, they demanded a 15-percent increase, and after a short strike they finally settled on a 10-percent increase. That dissatisfied a few of the men. According to the testimony before us, the next thing that happened was that the Labor Board permitted the C. I. O., apparently without any members to speak of in New Orleans, to file a special petition in Washington for recognition and for an election. Although the men were under contract with the A. F. of L. Longshoremen's Union, the Board permitted the petition to be filed—the whole thing was really conducted in Washington. First they sent the petition down and asked for a report from the regional director as to whether the C. I. O. had sufficient members to justify an election at all. He reported adversely. Nevertheless they were not satisfied with that and sent a special investigator to New Orleans to ascertain whether he could not find some case for the C. I. O. He could not find it. He came back, however, and reported that an election ought to be held.

So the next proceeding was that the Board ordered an election, although incidentally there was practically no evidence of even a foothold for the C. I. O. and although the A. F. of L. at the time had a contract with the employers at New Orleans.

Then, Mr. Bridges himself arrived in New Orleans with a large staff, and called a mass meeting. The longshoremen there are easily influenced, and, as the situation was fluid, it was hoped that the C. I. O. might be able to succeed.

Mr. Bridges held a mass meeting. The Board sent down a man named Lawrence Hunt to conduct an election. They would not let their own local representative in New Orleans conduct the election but sent another one down there. Mr. Googe testified:

A couple of nights before the election, Mr. Bridges being in town with his staff from the Pacific coast, held a mass meeting. This Mr. Hunt attended the mass meeting, sat upon the platform, addressed the Bridges mass meeting, and said that he was there to see that they got a square deal and a fair election, which technically may or may not have been all right; I don't know about technicalities because I am not a lawyer, but I know the psychological effect of having a special attorney to conduct the elections attending the Bridges mass meeting in New Orleans, sitting on the platform and making statements from the platform, had a deuce of a psychological effect.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you hold any mass meetings?

Mr. GOOGE. Yes, sir; but we did not have anybody from the Labor Board speaking.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you invite him to come?

Mr. GOOGE. He never came around us, Senator.

The CHAIRMAN. You knew that he was there?

Mr. GOOGE. Yes; I knew he was there, but frankly I would have been afraid that he would have made a speech for the C. I. O. if we had had him at our mass meeting.

There was an election held, and the A. F. of L. won by about 4 to 1. In other words, there never was any basis for the C. I. O. attempt to steal the longshoremen's union of the Southeast. That was not fair. It was a Bridges attempt to steal the longshoremen's union of the Southeast, and it was fomented and advanced by the National Labor Relations Board, of which Mr. Madden is a member. I cannot conceive of any Government body doing what the National Labor Relations Board has done in these cases. I think it is fair to say that they do represent the greatest perversion of justice that we have seen in the United States at any time.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Ohio a few moments ago was discussing the Fansteel case, which I believe arose in my State; and, incidentally, in discussing that case he also discussed a regulation relative to the issuance of subpenas in behalf of the Board affecting employer and employee. The Senator did not dwell very long upon that point or upon the regulation which had been made, but as I understood there was a distinct difference in the regulation laid down as to the subpenas to be issued in behalf of the employer and those to be issued in behalf of the employee. Will the Senator, for my own information, state the substance of that regulation?

Mr. TAFT. If the Senator will wait a moment I will see if I can locate it. The substance of the regulation I know, but I want to find a case referring to it. The substance of the regulation was that the trial examiner could issue any subpena requested by the Board attorney, whereas the trial examiner could not issue a subpena for the employer, but the employer was required to come to Washington and get a subpena issued by the Board itself. The Board took the position that it had discretion to issue the subpena or not, which is true, as in the case of a court, which might say to a party to an action, "You are trying to duplicate evidence or you are wasting time," or something of that sort. But the mere fact that he had to come to Washington is what made it so difficult and handicapped the employers in their cases. The Board itself finally recognized that it was unfair, and after the hearings before the Senate committee I think they changed that regulation.

Mr. LUCAS. In the beginning, if I understand the Senator correctly, they did have a regulation involving that type of discrimination?

Mr. TAFT. Not only in the beginning but for 3 or 4 years, from 1935 to 1939, as I understand.

Mr. LUCAS. Was that regulation approved by the Chairman of the Board?

Mr. TAFT. It was the order of the entire Board.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE. There was one case with which I am familiar in which the evidence showed that an attorney for the Board carried in his pocket blank subpenas and gave them to the representatives of the complaining union, which happened to be a C. I. O. union in that case. After talking to a witness, if they thought the witness would help them, the attorneys of the complaining union, or the representatives of the union, would fill in the name of the complaining witness, whereas in the same case the employer would be required to send to Washington a statement of the material facts which he expected to prove by each witness, and in the particular case the employers did not have their subpenas granted until the day after the hearing had closed; so they did not turn out to be of any great value.

Mr. TAFT. I come now to the Board's prejudice against independent unions. There is not any question, I will say, that the independent unions are largely company dominated, though, of course, it is perfectly possible to have an independent union which is not dominated by the company. Certainly if there is such a union the Board should recognize it. The report of the House committee on this subject is definite. It says:

> In regard to independent unions, the National Labor Relations Board has consistently pursued a policy aimed at the extermination of these nationally unaffiliated organizations. Hundreds of complaints have been issued charging companies with domination of independent unions under section 8 (2) of the act, and, in great part, they have been sustained by the Board. Perhaps the explanation for this lies in the attitude of Board employees—an example of which, taken from the opinion of the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals in the A. E. Staley Co. case, is set out:
> "Disser (Board field examiner) informed petitioner (the company) that in his opinion no independent labor organization could exist without some form of company support, and that in every instance where the Board has proceeded against an independent organization the Board had never yet failed to find sufficient evidence with which to destroy the organization."

Disser's statement simply is not true. The Board wanted to rule out all independent unions, but the kind of evidence they found is often of a very shadowy character; and there are many places, particularly in the case of smaller companies in small towns, where the men—I have personally talked with the men—do not want somebody to come in from the outside, where their relations have been friendly, and where they want their own independent union to represent them.

Another comment from the regional director of the Detroit Regional Office in February 1938 reads in this way:

> So, now, to get the old "company-union club" polished up and go to work.

A third such comment from the regional director at Cleveland in 1937 says:

> In the last 2 weeks we have noticed an alarming growth of independent labor groups.

The report of the House committee says:

> This hostile feeling toward independent unions was by no means confined to the Board's field offices. A former regional director testified that he had been instructed by Krivonos, special investigator attached to the secretary's office, to file petitions of independent unions for certification as bargaining representative "in the ice box" and forget them.

That was the general attitude of the Board.

I said that in many cases there really was no evidence. In the case of the International Shoe Co., the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals said that there was not even a scintilla of evidence to support the disestablishment of an independent union. It said:

> Counsel for the Board at the argument in this court frankly confessed the difficult task he had in justifying the findings by the evidence. It was at once apparent that the foundation for the findings [of fact] seemed shadowy and insubstantial. Counsel urged upon the court that it was necessary in this case to assemble all the facts, no one of which in itself was of much significance, and then to view the conglomerate in the light thrown on it by background.

Of course, the court reversed the Board in that case; but, in general, petitions for certification as representative are not subject to review by the courts, and consequently there is no appeal from the decision of the Board or its refusal to certify the particular representative. One of the amendments which we were considering, the so-called Smith amendment, provided that in such a case there might be an appeal to the courts on questions of certification.

There is a good deal of evidence in regard to the bias of various employees of the Board. In nearly every case Mr. Madden refused to dismiss them, although he knew how prejudiced they were. In other words, he gave support to their bias.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I should like to ask the Senator a question in which a good many of us are interested. Is it likely that we are to have a night session?

Mr. TAFT. I can only tell the Senator about how long I shall take; I think probably not more than 20 or 25 minutes longer.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TAFT. Perhaps the question of the Senator from Alabama should be addressed to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if I may answer the question, I have been informally informed that there probably will be no other address on the subject, on either side, after the Senator from Ohio shall have concluded; and I hope we may get a vote on the nomination at that time.

Mr. TAFT. I should like to read to the Senator one or two instances of the kind of person the National Labor Relations Board employed. One of them was a Mr. Herbert J. Vogt. That gentleman was particularly active in the State of Iowa; and his position and bias are so clear that it is hardly necessary to read his own statements in various memoranda.

On September 27, 1938, for instance, Mr. Vogt wrote as follows:

> At present I am still bouncing around in the State of Iowa trying to raise all the hell that possibly can be raised, to the limits of our power, and taking care of it the best I can.

He was a field examiner for the National Labor Relations Board. I may say that the fact that he succeeded in "raising all the hell" he could is proved by a letter written by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING] to Chairman Madden, in which he complained directly to Madden about the activities of this gentleman and his prejudices. He said:

> You will recall considerable correspondence which I had with you earlier as to Examiner Herbert J. Vogt and criticisms concerning his work in Iowa.
>
> This letter is to protest his return to Iowa.

He was sent back there.

> I assumed he has been discharged, as he should be, but, in any event, I must insist that someone else be sent into Iowa.
> May this matter have your earliest attention upon your return to Washington Wednesday?

That was October 10, 1938. I do not know whether Mr. Vogt remained after that or not, but, like the other members of the National Labor Relations Board, he attended C. I. O. mass meetings. He delivered an address to the C. I. O. the night before an election was to be held by the National Labor Relations Board in which he stated that a certain agreement had been abrogated by the company. He discussed the case and took a position against the company.

Part of the language used by attorneys in writing to Wiener, the regional director at Minneapolis, is rather significant. His own attorneys wrote to the regional director as follows:

> I had not supposed that the National Labor Relations Board or its officers or employees would demonstrate this much zeal in the outcome of any election, and I wish to believe it was personal with Mr. Vogt rather than with your office.

Even more remarkable is the fact that 10 days later Wiener very urgently recommended a salary increase for Vogt, using the following language in support of this request:

> Vogt has definitely made himself a part of the organized labor movement in the State of Iowa.

That is Mr. Wiener, one of the regional directors, recommending Mr. Vogt.

The able Senator from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] also wrote Mr. Madden a letter protesting about Mr. Vogt's activities. He said:

> I have been considerably disturbed at information that comes to my desk from Iowa and which is arousing much antagonism to the work of your Board in the administration of the present Labor Act. * * * Last evening a C. I. O. organization held a public meeting. This meeting was addressed by one Herbert Vogt, who informed the gathering that he was a representative of the National Labor Relations Board, * * * that he was taking an active part in the effort to secure organization for the C. I. O. The town is very much disturbed. They cannot understand why a representative of the Federal Government should be aiding one particular organization in its work.

Finally—there are various other rather interesting letters from and to Mr. Vogt—there is one from the leader of the present C. I. O. union in Iowa:

> However, I am going to try to settle this matter with you peacefully; therefore you will find enclosed an invitation to attend an entertainment and oyster supper to be held at the city hall in Estherville on December 6, a celebration of our victory in the Gamble Robinson case.
> Because this victory was made possible by your untiring efforts, the boys and myself feel that it is only fitting and proper that you attend this affair in order to help us celebrate it.

The record shows that in a relatively short space of time there were more litigations, more cases, more labor trouble in Iowa when Mr. Vogt was there than there ever had been before.

In a letter from Regional Director Wiener—Vogt's regional director—to Chairman Madden, it was stated that of the Iowa cases, 21.2 percent were closed by dismissal and 12.2 percent went to formal hearing. Wiener then said:

> These figures are being quoted to show you that Mr. Vogt has done an excellent job and has become part and parcel of the labor movement in the State of Iowa.

Vogt remained an employee of the Board until September 1940, for 2 years after the C. I. O. meeting and after the letter from the able Senator from Iowa; and then, due to personal differences with Wiener that resulted in charges of insubordination, he was discharged. The termination of Vogt's services was not due to his work as field examiner but was due to personal differences he had with his superior officer. Had not these differences occurred, Vogt would still be there.

Here was a man who showed every possible prejudice, whose activities were called to the attention of Madden himself as being prejudiced and completely in favor of one side of this controversy before the Board, and yet Madden does not dismiss him; he does not discipline him; he does not call him down. He lets the employee go on doing his work, "raising hell" in Iowa for the next 2 years, until he gets into a fight with a regional director, and then he is dismissed. That certainly does not show an impartial attitude on the part of Mr. Madden on the question of any desire that matters connected with the administration of the National Labor Relations Act be handled fairly, or with any kind of judicial nonpartisanship whatever.

Another man, named Maurice Howard, was a field examiner of the Board. The attention of Chairman Madden was called to Mr. Howard. Mr. Howard was interviewed by one of the Board's employees, who wrote to the Board:

> I had quite a long talk with Howard, and he is very frank in his attitude that the Board's chief value is in actively helping labor organize, rather than just to protect their right to organize. He doesn't think the Board is doing enough for labor at the present time and believes hearings should be held even when the Board obviously has no jurisdiction, if the holding of such hearings will help labor organization.
> He was unwilling to see anything done about the boilermakers' claim for representation in the Long View Fibre case, because he thought any such action on the part of the Board would hurt the C. I. O. and help the A. F. of L.

In spite of the report from the then secretary, nothing was done about Howard's activities for over 4 months. Then Chairman Madden did draft a letter reprimanding Mr. Howard, but largely because Smith objected he toned it down and did not make the reprimand very strong.

Howard was transferred to Los Angeles and then received an increase in pay. He remained the Board's employee for almost 3 years after his activities had been called to Madden's attention by the employees of the Board itself, who thought that Howard at least went too far in his bias and prejudice.

Probably the central feature of the Board was the Secretary's office, with his "goon" squad. I have referred already to Mr. Krivonos' activities in Ohio. The interesting thing about the secretary's office was that as soon as Mr. Leiserson was appointed he objected violently to the prejudices shown by the Secretary's office and objected violently to what he called his amateur detectives. He wanted to make over the personnel; and that was the only way in which the situation could possibly be cured. In that effort he met with the unyielding opposition of Chairman Madden, who lined up with Mr. Smith against Mr. Leiserson's efforts to clean up the situation.

Mr. Leiserson repeatedly wrote letters to Madden and Smith about the secretary's office, complaining of the character of the work, of its prejudice, and of its activities. He referred to "the usual irregularities in procedure characteristic of the secretary's office."

In answer to a request from Madden as to what the matter was, Dr. Leiserson said:

> I think it is time we looked around for a secretary who understands the administrative duties of the job and sticks to them instead of trying to stir up work for the Board.

Mr. Leiserson said further:

> They didn't know the facts in the cases, and their conversation showed that they would not understand the significance of the facts if they did know them.

This is the office on which the Board really relied for its main judgments and its main policy.

Dr. Leiserson said to the other two members of the Board:

> I think you make the mistake of acting on incomplete information or misinformation supplied by the Secretary's office. That is what balls up the cases.

Leiserson repeatedly protested against the retention of the secretary and of his employees. He stated that Mr. Witt's manner of handling certain cases made it impossible for him to have confidence in Mr. Witt's ability to perform his duties impartially as between various parties who brought cases before the Board. Madden kept putting off and putting off, and finally, 6 months after Leiserson's appointment, Leiserson wrote this to the Board:

> My position is that I will not sign any decision I consider improperly handled by the Secretary's office. I have asked for changes in personnel in this office because I do not consider the Secretary and Krivonos competent and reliable. Those who insist on keeping these men in their jobs must assume responsibility for their work. I will not share it.

Of course, everyone saw that as soon as Mr. Millis was appointed, on his mere appointment, without further action, the Secretary of the Board and a number of other employees of the Board proceeded to resign, because they knew that Leiserson and Millis, the new majority of the Board, would not stand for the situation which existed there, or the obvious prejudice those officers had had.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield for that purpose?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Caraway	Johnson, Calif.	Schwartz
Ashurst	Chavez	Johnson, Colo.	Sheppard
Austin	Clark, Mo.	King	Taft
Ball	Connally	Lee	Thomas, Utah
Bankhead	Danaher	Lucas	Townsend
Barkley	Davis	McCarran	Truman
Bilbo	Frazier	Mead	Vandenberg
Bone	Gillette	Miller	Van Nuys
Bulow	Green	Minton	Wagner
Bunker	Guffey	Neely	Wallgren
Burke	Gurney	Nye	Wheeler
Byrd	Hale	O'Mahoney	White
Byrnes	Hayden	Reynolds	Wiley
Capper	Holman	Russell

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wish only to refer to one additional case and then to sum up the argument I have made.

The last of the series of cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States was the Republic Steel case, which was decided on November 12, 1940. In that case the Supreme Court of the United States again reversed the Board, because it had attempted to give back pay not only to the men who were entitled to reinstatement but also to the W. P. A. for the wages paid the men during the period they had been out of work. The Supreme Court of the United States held that the Board was usurping authority, and that it had gone far beyond any authority given in the act. Mr. Chief Justice Hughes said:

> To go further and to require the employer to pay to governments what they have paid to employees for services rendered to them is an exaction neither to make the employees whole nor to assure that they can bargain collectively with the employer through representatives of their own choice. We find no warrant in the policies of the act for such an exaction.
> In truth, the reasons assigned by the Board for the requirement in question—reasons which relate to the nature and purpose of work-relief projects and to the practice and aims of the Work Projects Administration—indicate that its order is not directed to the appropriate effectuating of the policies of the National Labor Relations Act, but to the effectuating of a distinct and broader policy with respect to unemployment. The Board has made its requirement in an apparent effort to provide adjustments between private employment and public-work relief, and to carry out supposed policies in relation to the latter. That is not the function of the Board.

I read that only because it sums up the general conclusion that throughout this situation the Board has gone far beyond the purposes of the act. It has usurped all kinds of power to proceed to carry out its ideas of what the economic situation in the United States should be.

To summarize what I have tried to show, in my opinion the record shows without question that Mr. Madden has no judicial qualifications whatsoever, and that throughout his entire term as a member of the National Labor Relations Board he has avoided in every way any possibility of showing any judicial characteristics. He has conceived of his position as one of crusading against employers and in favor of national labor organizations, particularly in favor of the C. I. O. At no point in that entire proceeding has he been interested in a reasonable, fair procedure. In the little things, such as the issuance of subpenas and the exclusion of evidence, the Board has ruled against the employer in every case, and has subjected his case to difficulties which the petitioner never has had.

In every possible way Mr. Madden and the Board have been prejudiced against the American Federation of Labor and against independent unions. They have repeatedly approved and increased salaries of employees whose prejudice was well known to them, regardless of what the record itself may have shown.

There is hardly an employer in the United States who does not feel today that the Board has exhibited a complete lack of judicial temperament, and that it is biased and prejudiced against employers as well as against the American Federation of Labor and the independent union.

I do not say that Mr. Madden should not have been appointed to some other position. I do not think his record for administration on the National Labor Relations Board as shown by Mr. Leiserson's criticism of the Board's salaried officers is anything to be proud of, and yet I certainly would have no objection to his appointment to an administrative capacity; but when it comes to appointing a judge of the United States Court of Claims, a life position with a salary of $12,000 a year, more than he was receiving as chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, then I say that the Senate itself has a duty to intervene and prevent an appointment which was obviously made not because anybody wanted Mr. Madden for judge of the Court of Claims—indeed I think he himself has said that he does not want to be a judge of the Court of Claims—but simply to satisfy people who were dissatisfied by the failure to reappoint him as chairman of the National Labor Relations Board. The courts of the United States ought not to be used as a means of trying to work out political situations; they should not be used as a means of kicking a man upstairs to get him out of a position where he has been so prejudiced and created so much opposition that his reappointment would meet with general disapproval.

I think our function under the Constitution is to confirm the appointment of men as judges only if they have the qualifications which we would like to see and which are necessary in any judge of the United States.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator may have referred to it, but I have not heard him discuss the activities of Mr. Madden prior to his going on the National Labor Relations Board, his legal practice and experience and qualifications.

Mr. TAFT. I said in the beginning that Mr. Madden has never practiced law, but he has a very good record as a professor of law at various law schools. He went directly from law school to teach in the University of Oklahoma. He taught also in the law school of the University of Pittsburgh, and was dean of the West Virginia University Law School.

Mr. CONNALLY. May I ask the Senator in the case of law professors who never have practiced if any of their students should happen to get a case in the court where would they go for instruction as to what to do?

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator mean for law graduates?

Mr. CONNALLY. I am talking about a professor who has never tried a case and who has never practiced, but has many students with whom he is dealing. Suppose one of them should get a case later on in life, what would he do about it?

Mr. TAFT. If the teachers taught him as our law teachers taught us, he would not pay much attention to what the teachers taught him, but he would examine the decisions of the courts on the particular point and try to find out what the law really was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the confirmation of the nomination of Joseph Warren Madden to be judge of the United States Court of Claims?

Mr. TAFT. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I do not desire to consume any time of the Senate except to request permission to put in the RECORD matters from the record with reference to the disposition of cases before the Labor Relations Board. I ask unanimous consent that the compilation which I send to the desk may be printed in the RECORD at this point as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CONFIRMATION OF J. WARREN MADDEN AS JUDGE OF COURT OF CLAIMS

I. LEGAL BACKGROUND

Mr. Madden was born in Illinois; graduated from Northern Illinois State Normal School, and received A. B. and J. D. degrees from University of Chicago. He has won an honored place among the country's outstanding legal scholars.

Teacher of law: He has served as a professor of law at the following schools:

University of Oklahoma (1914–16).

Ohio State University (1917–21).

West Virginia University (1921–27), where he also served as dean of the college of law.

University of Pittsburgh (1927–35).

He has also served as law professor for brief, leave, or summer periods at:

Stanford University (1930–31; 1933).

University of Chicago (1925–28).

Cornell University (1930).

Practiced law: Rockford, Ill. (1916–17); Columbus, Ohio, (1917–21).

Author: Cases on Persons and Domestic Relations (1928); Treatise on Law of Domestic Relations (1931); Cases on Rights in Land (1934, with H. A. Bigelow); Introduction to Real Property (1934, with H. A. Bigelow). These works are recognized as foremost in their field.

American Law Institute: Since 1934, he has served as an adviser on the American Law Institute Restatement of Property and Torts. In that capacity he has greatly aided in the development of legal doctrines which are most directly involved in litigation before the Court of Claims.

Legal organizations: Mr. Madden is a member of the American Law Institute, the Pennsylvania and American Bar Associations, and of the bar of the United States Supreme Court.

Public service: While giving most of his time to law teaching, he has actively devoted himself to community, State, and national problems wherever his special training and knowledge would be of service. In 1920 Mr. Madden served as a special assistant in the office of the United States Attorney General. In 1925 he assisted the West Virginia commission on revision and codification in revising property statutes. He served as chairman of the Hill District Community Council, Pittsburgh, from 1933 to 1936; member of the board of Pittsburgh Federation of Social Agencies from 1933 to 1936, and member of board of directors of Pittsburgh Housing Association. In the field of industrial relations he was appointed to membership on the Governor's commission on special policing in industry, which rendered a notable report on the problem of company police; and also served as arbitrator in a serious Pittsburgh street railway dispute.

In August 1935 he was appointed Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, where he served a full 5-year term.

Under Mr. Madden's guiding hand during this exceedingly difficult period, the Labor Act has won a permanent place in American life. His brilliant argument before the Supreme Court in the Jones & Laughlin case contributed greatly to the final victory. The soundness of his legal judgment in interpreting the law is confirmed by the best available test—a record of approval by our highest Court, surpassing that of any other administrative body in United States history, and even surpassing that of the lower Federal courts.

In the teeth of bitter criticism by antilabor elements in and out of Congress, the Board persevered in holding that bona fide collective bargaining required that agreements once reached shall be reduced to writing. This position has now been upheld by five different circuit courts of appeals and will undoubtedly be approved by the Supreme Court. Such written collective-bargaining agreements have become the prevailing pattern of employer-employee dealing in American industry. They are the essential foundation of industrial peace in our defense industries.

Every fair-minded person who has known Mr. Madden will agree with Senator ASHURST that he is "a gentleman of capability, experience, courage, and high character." (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, November 29, 1940.) Without his dogged determination, integrity, and devotion to the true principles of the act, it could never have survived the bitter opposition directed at it in every forum. One may disagree with Mr. Madden's view in some isolated case or about some individual subordinate. But at this time it is only fair to pay him tribute for the service he has rendered in these 5 trying years—in establishing on a permanent footing what has been aptly described as the greatest advance in American democracy since woman suffrage.

The nomination to the Court of Claims represents for Mr. Madden a richly deserved promotion. Not a single person appeared in opposition at the public hearing held by the Judiciary Committee, and not a single member of that committee has been recorded in opposition. Mr. Madden will bring to this position not only his long experience in government, his admirable personal traits and judicial temperament, but also his acknowledged scholarship, in the fields of property and torts, so important to the work of that court.

On the entire record, I am completely in accord with the statement wired me by William Draper Lewis, director of the American Law Institute—that as a result of years of personal contact with Mr. Madden, "there is no man better fitted for the judicial office for which he has been nominated."

II. N. L. R. B. 5-YEAR RECORD (SEPTEMBER 1935 TO SEPTEMBER 1940)

Broadside criticism has been directed toward the N. L. R. B. on the basis of a comparatively few isolated cases or individual personnel. A proper evaluation of the work under Mr. Madden can be made only by examining the full record.

Cases handled: 29,806 cases (includes charges of unfair labor practices and petitions for elections) have been filed with the Board since its inception. These cases involved 6,417,545 workers.

Cases closed: 90 percent of all cases filed have been closed by Board action. Closed cases were disposed of as follows: 48 percent by agreement of parties, involving 2,063,433 workers; 17 percent by dismissal by Board or regional offices; 27 percent by withdrawal of charges or petitions; 8 percent by compliance with decisions or trial examiners' reports, certifications, issuance of cease and desist orders, transfers, dismissals of petitions or complaints, etc.

Thus 92 percent of cases closed were disposed of without formal hearings. Only about 3 percent of all charges of unfair labor practices have resulted in final cease-and-desist orders against employers.

Strike cases

Two thousand one hundred and sixty-one strikes were settled, and 869 immediately threatened strikes were averted through N. L. R. B. action. Practically all of the 26,724 cases closed involved a tendency toward industrial strife which was eliminated through prompt and satisfactory action by the Board.

Workers reinstated

Two hundred and eighty thousand one hundred and sixty-eight workers were reinstated after strikes or lockouts and 21,163 workers were reinstated after discriminatory discharges.

Elections

Three thousand four hundred and ninety-two elections were held, in which 1,261,130 valid votes were cast. Almost 10,000 petitions for elections or certifications have been filed, joined in by about 3,000,000 employees. Employers have filed petitions in 83 cases.

About 90 percent of those eligible have cast ballots in N. L. R. B. elections; in the recent General Motors election, the proportion voting exceeded 85 percent. By contrast, only about 62 percent of potential voters cast ballots in the 1940 Presidential election—70 percent in non-poll-tax States and only 21 percent in poll-tax States.

Litigation

No other administrative agency has equaled the Labor Board's record of approval by the courts. In the first 15 years of the Federal Trade Commission, with 22 matters coming before the Supreme Court, the Commission's contention was upheld in 5 cases, modified in 1 case, and wholly reversed in 16 cases. In the first 15 years of the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Commission's contention was upheld by the Supreme Court in 1 case, modified in 1 case, and wholly reversed in 10 cases.

By contrast, in the 25 cases decided by the Supreme Court involving the Labor Act during Mr. Madden's tenure as Chairman, the Board's position was fully upheld in 20 cases, modified in 3 cases and wholly reversed in only 2 cases. In 16 additional cases, the Supreme Court, by denying writs of certiorari, left in force decisions of circuit courts enforcing N. L. R. B. orders. In the circuit courts of appeals, 102 N. L. R. B. final orders have been enforced in toto or with modification, and only 23 final orders have been set aside in toto. Consent-enforcement decrees have been entered in 300 cases. In more than 100 suits filed in district courts to enjoin N. L. R. B. proceedings, the Board was ultimately successful in every case.

In this mass of litigation, the N. L. R. B. has ultimately been held to have exceeded its interstate commerce jurisdiction only once.

Increase in union membership

Under the protection of the act membership in labor organizations has increased more rapidly than in any similar period in our history. Total union membership has increased from 3,600,000 workers in 1935 to almost 9,000,000 in 1940.

Increase in collective agreements

The increasing acceptance of the practice of collective bargaining is evidenced by the recent tremendous increases in the number and coverage of agreements between employers and trade-unions, especially since 1937. For example:

Steel industry: 670 agreements outstanding in 1940, as compared with practically none prior to 1937;

Automobile industry: Over 1,100 agreements outstanding in 1940, as compared with almost complete open-shop conditions prior to 1937;

Electrical equipment industry: 400 agreements now outstanding (300 with International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, affiliated with A. F. of L.), in an industry largely untouched by union organization prior to 1933;

Machinery and allied trades: 5,000 agreements outstanding, reported by the International Association of Machinists, affiliated with the A. F. of L., as compared with 1,500 in 1937;

Newspaper publishing industry: 940 agreements with various crafts are now outstanding, as compared with 582 in 1937;

In the year 1939–40, 600 written agreements were directly brought about by National Labor Relations Board action.

Civil liberties

The act has made civil liberties a reality to millions of wage earners, now enjoying unhampered for the first time their constitutional rights of free assembly, speech, press, ballot, and privacy. Among other notable achievements in this field, the National Labor Relations Board has brought about a rebirth of civil liberties in Harlan County, transformed many company towns into free, self-respecting communities; and courageously disclosed labor-spy activity in its early cases, thus laying the groundwork for the La Follette committee investigation.

Reduction in labor strife

General decline: Although union membership, employment, and production have been on the increase, every year since the act was upheld by the Supreme Court has seen a decline in number of strikes—from 4,740 in 1937 to about 2,200 in 1940—a drop of over 50 percent. Time lost in strife has dropped from 28.4 million man-days in 1937 to about 6.3 million in 1940—a drop of over 75 percent. Less working time was lost in 1940 than in any year in the last decade. In proportion to total population, this country has had fewer strikes in 1940 than Great Britain.

Sit-down strikes declined from a peak of 170 in the single month of March 1937 to 6 in the entire year 1939.

Interstate industries: Industrial strife has tended to decline faster in industries wholly or partly subject to the act than in intrastate industries.

Duration of strikes: The average working time lost per striker since the act was upheld has been lower than in the 10-year period preceding, thus showing the effectiveness of existing public and private machinery for prompt settlement of differences.

"Organization" disputes: In 1938 and 1939 only about 15 percent of striking workers were concerned with recognition and discrimination issues, as against 51 percent in 1937, 42 percent in 1936, 50 percent in 1934, 40 percent in 1933, and an average of 30 percent in the period 1928 to 1932, inclusive.

N. L. R. B. cases: Since the first Supreme Court decisions upholding the act in 1937 a high and increasing proportion of workers have taken their "organization" disputes to the N. L. R. B. rather than fight them out on the picket line. Indications of increasing compliance with the act are (1) number of new cases filed in 1939–40 dropped 700 below 1938–39; (2) the proportion of election cases filed has doubled since the first year of the act's operation.

Upon this record, if the basic principles of the law remain unimpaired and it is supported by adequate appropriations for its operation, we may look forward confidently to the complete elimination of the wasteful, bitter, and often bloody struggles over the fundamental right to organize and bargain collectively. This is what the act was designed to do.

C. I. O.-A. F. of L. issues

Handling of cases (fiscal year 1939–40):

Received 2,933 A. F. of L. cases—or 732 more than C. I. O.

Closed 3,284 A. F. of L. cases—or 403 more than C. I. O.

Settled by informal action 1,487 A. F. of L. cases—or 452 more than C. I. O.

Received 1,800 A. F. of L. charges and 1,443 C. I. O. charges. Closed 2,019 A. F. of L. cases and 1,877 C. I. O. cases.

Received 1,133 A. F. of L. petitions and 758 C. I. O. petitions. It closed 1,265 A. F. of L. cases and 1,004 C. I. O. cases.

Reinstated 5,000 A. F. of L. workers after discrimination; 4,500 C. I. O. workers and 500 unaffiliated workers.

Elections: A. F. of L. appeared on ballots 734 times and won 386 elections; C. I. O. appeared on ballots 692 times and won 407 elections.

Collusive contracts: The N. L. R. B. has been widely charged with exceeding its authority in setting aside contracts obtained by a labor organization as a result of employer interference or favor. The Supreme Court has just unanimously upheld the Board's position in this respect. (N. L. R. B. against Serrick Corporation, decided November 12, 1940.)

Bargaining unit: The majority report of the Smith committee, just released, declares: "In connection with disputes over the appropriate unit, the former chairman of the Board has quite consistently subscribed to the use of a formula giving craft-union employees an opportunity to determine whether they desire to be represented by a craft union or whether they desire to be included in a large unit embracing employers generally. He subscribed to the so-called 'Globe doctrine'." Other members of the Board have not agreed to the application of this doctrine where the craft had had no prior history of successful collective bargaining in the plant (E. S. Smith), or where there was outstanding an exclusive bargaining contract with an industrial union (Leiserson). Madden has repeatedly dissented where a Board majority declined to apply the Globe doctrine (e. g. American Can Co.).

In other words, charges that N. L. R. B. decisions in this difficult field indicate bias against craft unions, cannot possibly be directed at Mr. Madden.

III. GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS AND THE FORD CASE

Defense Commission policy: On September 6 the Defense Commission unanimously adopted and published a statement of policy governing the letting of defense contracts, including the following:

"All work carried on as part of the defense program shall comply with Federal statutory provisions affecting labor wherever such provisions are applicable. This applies to the Walsh-Healey Act, Fair Labor Standards Act, the National Labor Relations Act, etc" (H. Doc. 950).

Ford Motor Corporation: The Ford Motor Corporation received on November 6 a contract for 3,000 airplane motors costing $122,000,000; and was also awarded on November 27 a $2,000,000 contract for combat cars. Both contracts were awarded without competitive bidding. The first contract is justified on the ground of imperative need for Ford's facilities; the second apparently cannot be so justified.

The Ford Co has been found guilty of violations of the Labor Act in six separate rulings by the N. L. R. B., concerning plants at Dearborn, Dallas, Buffalo, Somerville (Mass.), St. Louis, Long Beach (Calif.). Hearings have been held and decisions are pending in three additional cases, concerning plants in Richmond (Calif.), Chicago, and Kansas City.

The N. L. R. B. decision in the Dearborn case has been upheld by the Circuit Court of Appeals (except as to the issuance of leaflets by Ford). Ford is appealing to the Supreme Court. The Circuit Court decision upholds the N. L. R. B. in finding that Ford had discharged 24 men for union activity, viciously and brutally assaulted union representatives peacefully attempting to distribute union literature, and assaulted union organizers driving past the plant.

The findings in the above case were made in 1937. In a more recent decision, issued August 8, 1940, the Board found on the basis of overwhelming evidence that in its Dallas, Tex., plant, the Ford Co. had engaged in labor espionage, organized a strong-arm squad that terrorized and assaulted union members and organizers, discharged two men for union activity, and compelled employees to contribute to an anti-union campaign by the company's agents. The Board has found that this program of systematic terror was approved by the main office of the corporation in Dearborn. The Board's findings were supported by uncontradicted testimony of company agents and victims of the acts of violence.

The issue in the Ford case is not whether a corporation should be barred from Government contracts because of a mere technical or minor violation of law. The question is whether a corporation with a labor policy so outrageous and un-American should be given the benefit of Government contracts and whether employees so treated can be relied upon by the country at large to produce armaments essential for the national defense.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the pending nomination? On that question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. STEWART]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay." I am unable to obtain a transfer and therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER]. I am advised that if he were present he would vote as I have already voted. Therefore I will let my vote stand.

Mr. BANKHEAD (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and will let my vote stand.

Mr. MINTON. I announce the necessary absence from the Senate of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY], the Senators from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO and Mr. HARRISON], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BROWN], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BULOW], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. DONAHEY], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senators from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER and Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HERRING], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HOLT], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HUGHES], the Senators from Oklahoma [Mr. LEE and Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MALONEY], the Senators from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR and Mr. STEWART], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senators from Maryland [Mr. RADCLIFFE and Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMATHERS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH].

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD].

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

I am advised that my colleague, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], would vote "yea" if present.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] is absent on account of illness.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 14, as follows:

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, may the result be again announced?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are 36 yeas and 14 nays. Therefore, the Senate advises and consents to the nomination of Mr. Madden.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the President be notified, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the President will be notified.

POSTMASTER—JOHN LESTER GREENE

During the delivery of Mr. TAFT's speech,

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. TAFT. Certainly.

Mr. HAYDEN. By direction of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, I report favorably the nomination of John Lester Greene to be postmaster at Broken Arrow, Okla. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be confirmed and the President notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEE in the chair). Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John Lester Greene to be postmaster at Broken Arrow, Okla.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed, and the President will be notified.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11:30 o'clock a. m. tomorrow, to meet in the regular Senate Chamber.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, January 3, 1941, at 11:30 o'clock a. m.

Edward P. Warner to be a member of the Civil Aeronautics Board in the Department of Commerce.

POSTMASTER

John Lester Greene, Broken Arrow, Okla.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 2, 1941

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art above all things—all tumults, all conflicts, all life, and supreme from everlasting to everlasting—hear us while we pray; let the musings of the eternal mind murmur around us. In our relation to our country, our homes, the good, the bad, the rich, and the poor, we pray that the sweetness and the tenderness of the Christian spirit may assert itself. Oh, let our souls bring from the fields of valiant faith the living sheaves of God. Blessed Father, may the hungry have bread, the homeless shelter, and our people everywhere comfort; help us all to follow the heavenly music of our Master's message. Our loved ones near and far, ever keep them beneath the shadow of Thy wing. We rejoice that Thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations. Before the mountains were brought forth or ever Thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from the beginning of time, Thou art God. Let Thy work appear unto Thy servants and Thy glory unto their children. When our course runs out at the ebb of the world that we love so dearly, may we have a welcome to our Father's arms, through Him who became the manger Babe but now is glorified forever as the world's Saviour. In our dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, December 30, 1940, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 7965. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Ramsey;

H. R. 10712. An act to permit the relinquishment or modification of certain restrictions upon the use of lands along the Natchez Trace Parkway in the village of French Camp, Miss.; and

H. J. Res. 623. Joint resolution to extend the date for filing a report by the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Thomas Jefferson.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the special orders of the day and the disposition of the legislative program today I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes on the proposal of the Federal Reserve Board.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AGAINST FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD PROPOSALS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the Federal Reserve Board, through Mr. Eccles, has made some very startling proposals. They are startling, coming from a Board that has caused this country so much misery and misfortune in the past. As one Member of Congress, I expect to oppose what Mr. Eccles has proposed to this Congress. We gave him power one time and he abused that power, and the Board on a number of occasions has abused its power. In 1936 and 1937 they doubled the reserve requirements of banks and thereby plowed under about $3,000,0000,000, and put this country into a tailspin from which we have not fully recovered.

I think instead of giving them more power we should abolish that Board and establish a new agency that will be an agency of the Congress to deal with these matters. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman a question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RANKIN. But the gentleman has asked unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks, and I reserved the right to object. Let me ask the gentleman from Texas if it is not a fact also that the Federal Reserve Board, in 1920, right after the close of the World War, arbitrarily raised the rediscount rates and compelled the calling of loans that threw this country into a panic and broke practically every farmer in America?

Mr. PATMAN. I think the gentleman is correct in his statement.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield? Is it not a fact that one of the serious objections raised against the Federal Reserve Board is that they will not recognize soap wrappers as good money? [Laughter.]

Mr. RANKIN. I will say to the gentleman from Georgia that it is owing to whose soap was wrapped in it. They do not seem to recognize anything except the interest of a certain group of bankers.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

RESIGNATION FROM HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resignation:

DECEMBER 31, 1940.

Hon. SAM RAYBURN,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I have today transmitted a letter of resignation as a Representative in the Congress of the United States from the Eleventh District of Missouri to the Governor of Missouri, my resignation to become effective as of January 1, 1941, as upon that day I am taking the oath of office and qualifying as circuit attorney for the city of St. Louis.

Respectfully yours,

THOS. C. HENNINGS, Jr.

SIGNATURE TO ENROLLED BILLS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the adjournment of the House the Clerk may be authorized to receive messages from the Senate and that the Speaker be authorized to sign any enrolled bills passed by the two Houses and found duly enrolled.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

HOUSE CHAMBER

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that the temporary repairs to the Capitol have been completed and that the opening session of the Seventy-seventh Congress will be held in the Chamber of the House of Representatives at the Capitol at noon on Friday, January 3, 1941.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and any other special orders I may be permitted to address the House for 8 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of the special orders already made I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the President's speech and to include therein a very favorable appraisal, an editorial from the New York Times.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON WILD LIFE CONSERVATION

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight tonight to file a report on behalf of the Select Committee on Wild Life Conservation pursuant to House Resolution 65.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. ROBERTSON. It is a unanimous report.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. There are no minority views?

Mr. ROBERTSON. It was revised today. I could not, therefore, file the report until today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein the text of a bill which I shall introduce tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House today for 8 minutes after the other special orders.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House today for 10 minutes at the conclusion of the other special orders.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein one resolution from the State Hotel Men of California and two resolutions from the California State Firemen's Association.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a speech delivered by Hon. Joe Hutcheson, Jr., United States circuit judge of Texas, at Stratford, Va., October 12, the anniversary of the death of General Lee. With the accompanying notes and quotations, it will exceed by one page the two pages allowed under the rule. I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding this I may extend it.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Speaker, if every local union in the country would take the attitude toward national defense that was taken by the members of Local Union 1864, S. W. O. C., of Berwick, Pa., in my congressional district, there would be no cessations of work on materials necessary for national defense. I quote from an article which appeared in the Berwick Enterprise:

WALK-OUT ENDS AS UNION VOTES TO RETURN TO WORK—RESPOND TO PRESIDENT'S PLEA OF NO CESSATION AND MEN BACK TODAY—SOLICITORS AT GATES

Members of Local Union 1864, S. W. O. C., voted to return to work today in response to the plea of the President of the United States that there be no cessations of work on national-defense contracts.

Feeling that it is their patriotic duty to cooperate with the national-defense program, the union members also voted to make up for the loss of the day's production by either working on a Saturday at straight time, or else working extra hours each evening at straight time until the time is made up, whichever the company desires.

A resolution adopted at the union meeting last night at West Side Park pointed out that the union feels that the stoppage of work yesterday was justifiable in the light of the incidents which provoked it, and that it was only because of the national emergency that the union took immediate steps to resume production and make up for any losses.

The members of the union are employed by the American Car & Foundry Co., which is engaged in building tractors.

I congratulate the members of Local 1864 on their good sense and patriotism.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a short newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 6 minutes today after the other special orders.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD, and include an editorial from the current issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COLE] may have an indefinite leave of absence on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCORMACK). The gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 647

Resolved, That the thanks of the House are presented to the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, Speaker of the House of Representatives, for the able, impartial, and dignified manner in which he has presided over its deliberations and performed the arduous duties of the Chair.

[Applause, the Members rising.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues of the Seventy-sixth Congress, it is a distinct pleasure for me to offer this resolution on this occasion, which I believe we all will agree is the final session of this Congress. [Applause.] It is a pleasure to offer the resolution because it signifies my honest appraisal of a warm personal friend and one who has endeared himself to every Member of this House.

As majority leader the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] acquitted himself as a great American and as an able leader of a great party. He won the affection and respect of everyone, and we were all happy to see him elevated to the high position of Speaker. In the performance of the duties of the great office of Speaker he has given evidence of what we expected. He was able, impartial, and just, fully measuring up to the many brilliant Speakers who have preceded him. I am happy to pay through this resolution this tribute to a great American and a great parliamentarian.

I also wish to express at this time my appreciation of my good friend the gentleman from Massachusetts, who has lately been elected majority leader of the House. I have been privileged to enjoy his friendship for a good many years and I know the Democratic Party has honored itself in electing him to that high position.

If I may, I want also to express my appreciation to my own good friends on the Republican side of the aisle, who have so loyally supported me in my endeavors during the last 2 years. I am profoundly gratified and appreciative for their loyalty and splendid cooperation. [Applause.]

I wish to thank also those on the majority side for their many indications of approval and respect shown me. We all come to Congress actuated by but a single purpose, and that is to promote the welfare of the common country. We may differ as to how that objective may be achieved, but I believe all will agree with me we are all honest in our convictions and our purposes. That is what makes it possible for us to have such a splendid comradeship in the House. It is through honest differences of opinion and debate we reach the best conclusions. This is Americanism functioning in the American way. This must be continued if the people are to rule.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCCORMACK). The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER. May I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] and all of my colleagues. Tomorrow I hope to have the opportunity of making a statement to the House of Representatives and the new Congress.

To those who are leaving us I want to say that you carry with you into private life our friendship and our high regard. Many of you we hope and expect to see back here some time in the future.

CHOCTAW INDIANS OF THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 3524) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of the Choctaw Indians of the State of Mississippi and its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PITTENGER].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Minnesota explain the bill?

Mr. PITTENGER. Mr. Speaker, this is a jurisdictional bill which was reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SCHAFER] made a favorable report on this bill by direction of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ROGERS] is interested in the bill. If he is here, I shall yield to him at this time for an explanation if he so desires.

This bill was framed to meet certain veto objections to another bill and, as I understand, it has the unanimous report of the Committee on Indian Affairs. The bill confers jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to consider various Indian claims against the Government.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. These are claims that Congress has turned down in previous years?

Mr. PITTENGER. No; I do not think they have ever been presented to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How old are these claims?

Mr. PITTENGER. I cannot say how old they are. They grew out of treaties and the failure of the United States Government to live up to its treaty obligations. There was only one objection to this bill when it was presented some 2 weeks ago and at that time it was not altogether an objection as I understand the situation. The request was made that it go over until another date.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. This permits the Indians to go to court and have their claims heard?

Mr. PITTENGER. That is correct. It does not involve an appropriation of money but simply permits the Indians to go into court, and if they have a legitimate claim under their treaties and dealings with the Government they will have a chance to establish that claim.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How much money is involved?

Mr. PITTENGER. I do not believe I can state that. I do not think anyone knows.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I received a letter from the Department of Justice in reference to this bill and in its present form, as reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, it is highly objectionable because it takes away from the Government the power to defend itself in the Court of Claims; therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

AGRICULTURE AND THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, as the Representative of an agricultural State, and one who was sent to the Congress by the toiling farmers and the small businessmen of his district, I rise to voice my opposition to the most dangerous suggestions that have just been made by the representatives of the Federal Reserve System—a proposal to take from the Congress and the President of the United States and vest in the hands of a banker's fascisti the constitutional prerogative of controlling our monetary system.

The Constitution says that the Congress shall have the power to "coin money and regulate the value thereof"; yet, spread all over the front pages of the metropolitan press this morning, we find a suggestion by these bankers, these representatives of the vested interests, that the Congress and the administration surrender their prerogatives, their control over the finances of the Nation, and turn them over to these selfish interests, thereby establishing a financial fascisti in this country as dangerous, in my opinion, as any fascisti that exists in any other section of the world, so far as the toiling farmers of this country are concerned.

In 1920 the Federal Reserve System, under Gov. W. P. G. Harding, after collusion with certain big financial interests, and in the midst of crop time, when wheat, cotton, and corn were in the field, arbitrarily raised the rediscount rate and called loans all over the Nation, driving the prices of wheat, corn, cotton, hogs, lumber, and other raw materials far below the cost of production. It brought on one of the greatest depressions in all the history of the Nation and ruined farmers in every section of the country, and especially in the South and West.

In 1929, when the Hoover panic came on, they attempted to save a few big financial institutions, but let the farmers of the Nation go to ruin.

What they want to do now is free certain investments and guarantee that they will be paid for out of the blood and sweat of the American people. What they want to do is to stabilize the farmers of the country in their present misery. Agricultural prices are all out of line with the prices of things the farmer has to buy, with the result that the farmers of this Nation are losing their homes in every State in the Union. They are selling wheat and cotton at the same price or below the price at which they were sold during the Taft administration, when the farmers of the West, joining with the farmers of the South, revolted and changed the administration. The large banking institutions and the large insurance companies own more farms today than in all the history of the country, and more farmers are going into bankruptcy because of the low prices of the things they have to sell.

I read to the Congress just the other day a statement showing that our program of limiting farm production has increased production of cotton in Brazil. Where they made less than 100,000 bales of cotton in the State of Sao Paulo, Brazil, in 1932, in 1939 they made 1,260,000 bales, which is more than the State of Mississippi will make this year, and remember that Mississippi is the second largest cotton-growing State in the Union.

It makes me sympathize with the farmers from the West and the Midwest who are complaining that their meat market is being transferred to Argentina when I see this condition prevailing throughout the length and breadth of the land.

If we agree to this proposal and take from ourselves and from the President this power of control over our financial system what can we hope for? Shall we continue to borrow from the rich to give to the unemployed poor, to pile up a national debt for our children and our children's children to pay interest on for the next thousand years? Does any intelligent man think that we can ever balance the Federal Budget on the present price levels? Are we to gather the gold of the world and bury it in the ground in Kentucky, denature it, if you please, and refuse to issue money against it, and then turn it over to this banking fascisti, while the farmers and small businessmen of the Nation are ground into the dust of depression and their hopes for recovery destroyed? I, for one, do not propose to remain silent while such a proposition is being advocated.

I was one of the men who introduced the bill to give the President the right to reduce the gold content of the dollar and to give him the right to issue $3,000,000,000 in currency. My only regret is that he has not exercised it. If he had issued that $3,000,000,000 in 1933, in my opinion we would have averted a great deal of the troubles through which we have passed.

The small farmer, the man who tries to own his own home, the man who is maintaining this Government, the man whose son volunteered first, is losing his home because he is compelled to sell his crops below the cost of production and to leave home and seek employment in some other enterprise in order that he may be able to meet his daily needs.

What are we coming to? What will the Republic be worth when you destroy these people who produce the raw materials that feed and clothe the world? What is the world fighting about today? Living space, soil, territory, raw materials of every kind of which we can produce an abundance.

If we follow this dangerous policy that is outlined by the Federal Reserve System, we will finish the strangulation of the toiling farmers of America. I for one do not propose to sit idly by and see them get by without a protest. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD, and include therein a resolution of inquiry regarding Nazi and Communist activities in the other American republics.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] is recognized for 8 minutes.

THE UNITED STATES AND THE EUROPEAN WAR

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, aside from any question of where the sympathies of the American people lie in the present World War, and aside from any question of the extent to which the American people are willing to go in aiding Great Britain, Greece, and China in the wars, and aside from any question of whether or not the opposition of an overwhelming percentage of the American people against our becoming involved in the war has been changed by propaganda into a willingness to go part way into the conflict, it remains a grave and important fact that the American people, who will have to do the fighting and the dying and the paying in any war in which we are concerned, ought to be told frankly and candidly just whither we are bound, what steps are being taken to get us there, and what the military, economic, political, and sociological results will be.

Therefore, it is aside from all of these considerations, and solely in the interest of giving the people a chance to look squarely at facts which are having and will continue to have a grave bearing upon their welfare, if not their lives, that I am making this statement today.

The administration's proposal to make the United States "an arsenal" for Great Britain, Greece, and China is a proposal to take the United States into the war further and further, step by step, on the lease-lend plan without the consent of the Congress or of the people.

Of course the United States is in the war now—and has been for many months. We were taken into the war by Presidential action without the knowledge or consent of either the Congress or the people. That fact is not now denied by those who would deal frankly with this question.

The latest proposal to "lend" or "lease" equipment and munitions of war, food, clothing, and other necessities to Great Britain and her allies, and to China, is a proposal to give all these supplies and equipment to the belligerents on one side of the conflict. The shallow pretense that the billions piled upon billions of dollars' worth of equipment and supplies will be returned "in kind" after the war is so absurd as to be an insult to American intelligence. Not a dime or a dollar's worth of equipment or supplies "in kind" will ever come back to us after the war, and no one knows that any better than the President and his advisers.

Now that the neutrality statutes have been summarily kicked aside and the United States is in the war, actually if not actively and aggressively, the administration proposal is for us to act as the world's banker for war. That also means that after the war is ended we will be called upon to act as the world's banker for rehabilitation and recovery. That we will be propagandized to feed the world and to provide the money for rebuilding it after the war is over is just as certain as it is that we are being taken actively into the war now against the overwhelming opposition of the American people.

Our national debt will rise to uncounted billions not now even foreseeable or imaginable.

All of these are facts of today. Regardless of whether or not we agree or disagree with the policy behind them, it certainly is true that the American people ought to face squarely the facts and the fruits of the administration's policy so the Nation may know whither we are being led, what we are getting into, and what we must look forward to in the future.

The propagandists for war currently insist that our contribution will be dollars and not men. A little while ago these same propagandists were vehemently insisting that if we would only manufacture and sell planes and other munitions and implements of war to Britain and France there would be neither need nor demand on the part of Britain and her Allies for money or credits.

It is a fact which cannot be denied by any honest and intelligent person that England cannot be the victor in this war, Germany and Italy cannot be defeated, and the subjugated countries released from the oppressions of these dictators without a huge army fighting its way through the subjugated countries and into Germany. England does not have this manpower, and it is perfectly certain that when we are in the war far enough the demand will come for an American expeditionary force of several million American boys to be sent across to do the fighting. The Navy will, of course, go in first.

Whether all of these moves are or are not proper ones, it is dishonest, un-American, and utterly dangerous to the security of this Nation to try to fool the American people into this war. The necessity now is for a united nation to put forward every possible effort to build up a defense and to send aid to Britain, Greece, and China, since we are now fully and irretrievably embarked on that course. Common sense ought to show the members of the administration and the Congress, as well as the leaders of thought in every section of the country that if the American people are fooled into this war, if they are blindfolded and led step by step into it, we will not be in the war as a united nation but as a divided nation—and that would be fatal in any event.

The American people are entitled to the truth about what is being done. Some of us in Congress are still determined that they shall have those facts, insofar as it remains in our power to reveal them.

Of course, since the President's radio address of Sunday evening, December 29, any citizen, Member of Congress or otherwise, who dares to call for facts, logic, and reason instead of agreeing with whatever policy the administration desires to pursue may expect to be branded either as a "fifth columnist" or "an unwitting aide of the dictators." An attempt has been made to foreclose free and fair discussion of this question of going into war. There are some Members of Congress, however, who do not intend to be terrorized or intimidated by the prospect of the abuse which will come to them for endeavoring to pursue at least a frank and open course in this question of the Nation going to war. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to include, following my remarks, a short article by Mr. John T. Flynn, the eminent economist and writer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The article referred to follows:

NEW YORK, December 30.—A strange report comes from Washington. It has a direct bearing on the proposal to lend merchant ships and warships to Britain.

The report is that Britain has not been able to get enough men to form crews for the destroyers—the 50 destroyers—we have already traded to Britain. Several of these destroyers, we are told, have not yet been put into service because of the lack of crews.

This is due to the fact that England has not been able to train men fast enough to make up for the immense losses that have been sustained by the Navy and the merchant marine as the result of sinkings. Whether this report is true or not remains to be seen. We can only say it comes from a source friendly to England.

If this be true, then what will be the first consequence of lending large numbers of merchant ships and naval vessels to England? There seems little doubt that the next demand will be for men to handle them.

Thus every step we take seems to lead inevitably to the very brink of war. First, lend money to Britain. This cannot be done very well because a loan of money would be grotesque. So, following the logic of the slogan that "This is our war," we find a way around that. Therefore we say lend Britain, not money, but planes, ships, naval vessels, arms. But having gone this far, we are confronted with the proposition that these will be no good to Britain unless we can furnish the skilled men also to handle them. Will we just lend them? And will we say this is not going to war?

At least Congress should, before it takes any step along this fatal road, investigate what it is doing.

Is it a fact that any part of the destroyer fleet already sent to Britain is tied up for lack of men? Is it a fact Britain has not the skilled men to handle such ships and war vessels as we may "lend" to her? And if this is a fact, how will she use these vessels without our loan of men as well as the ships and planes?

This is so vital, so grave a step Congress must ask for unmistakable evidence, not merely the assurance of some interested propagandist. It must have facts, for it is playing with the lives and the democracy of the American people.

The truth is that the "Get into the war" groups were getting bolder every day in this country until William Allen White brought them up with a jerk with his statement. And the basis on which the war groups want us in the war is this very one of men—men in Europe when the time comes, men now where they are most needed in the skilled positions. The other reason, of course, is to create a war dictatorship to speed production.

We have set fire to a little patch of trees in the forest. It will be only a little while before the whole forest will be on fire.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to speak for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce to my Democratic colleagues that the caucus called for this afternoon at 4 o'clock will be held in the Chamber of the House of Representatives in the Capitol.

THE UNITED STATES AND THE EUROPEAN WAR

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I dislike to find myself in opposition to views expressed by my long-time and devoted friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] who has just addressed the House, but there are two sides to the picture which he has been exhibiting to you, and both are hideous. We have reached the point where the road forks and must take either one branch or the other and, as sensible men, we know that both lead to a state of misery and distress, but as upstanding Americans, we must make our choice.

I grant you that pursuing the course outlined by the President may probably lead us to war, and that war would virtually bankrupt the Nation and possibly mean our coming out in some form of totalitarian state, but I get comfort out of the thought that in the building of a great Army we are creating a stabilizing influence that will bring us through as a free people, and that we will survive as a democracy.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for an additional 3 minutes provided he will yield for a question or two.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the Chair should not entertain that request unless it is satisfactory to the gentlemen who have permission to address the House, but the Chair will put the request if it is satisfactory to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LEWIS], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH]. Is there objection to the request on the part of any of these gentlemen?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the gentleman from Georgia is recognized for 3 additional minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to transgress upon the time already allotted to these gentlemen; but if they have no serious objection, I would like to proceed for at least a few more minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. In just a moment, please.

I gladly concede that the so-called fireside message of the President may be subject to fair criticism because it was, in effect, a Presidential declaration of a will to war if war be the consequence of continued aid to England, but I understood the message as it was spoken in the only language I know; and if I had any criticism to make at all of what he said, it would be that, possibly, it amounted to some encroachment upon the prerogatives of the Congress and that it failed to tell the whole story. The President could have said a great deal more, and all of which I would have approved. I am not criticizing his message. We have committed ourselves to the proposition of extending all possible aid to England short of war, and yet I realize, and I think I know, that going further in this direction means our active participation in war.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. And I know, too, that it will not be a limited affair so far as we are concerned, but that it will be a total war not only as to England but as to the United States as well.

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. What has occurred since election to have brought out the remarks made by the President in his bedside talk, or, I mean, fireside talk, Sunday?

Mr. COX. Nothing; unless it be an aroused sentiment that is spreading throughout this entire country. I think the President's message reflects the will, the wish, and the determination of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman think that by our getting into the war we will more securely perpetuate democracy in this country?

Mr. COX. Well, I am not going to say that we will, but it may result—and I have the hope to believe it will result—in saving the British Empire, and in saving the British Empire we save ourselves.

Mr. KNUTSON. Has the gentleman given any thought to the danger that if we get into the war——

Mr. COX. Of course, I have.

Mr. KNUTSON. That we will have totalitarianism in this country?

Mr. COX. Of course, I have given thought to it and the thought has given me great distress. I am not overlooking the fact of what it means to our people to become involved in this war. I know, as I have said, it possibly means bankruptcy and it may mean the loss of our form of government, but I do not think so.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the gentleman more concerned with the preservation of democracy or the preservation of the British Empire which he just mentioned a moment ago?

Mr. COX. The gentleman knows that I often differ from the President, but I think the President is here trying to save America and he believes that in saving England he makes America secure. That is what I believe.

Mr. KNUTSON. How can we save ourselves by bleeding ourselves white, such as the war will entail?

Mr. COX. We can save ourselves by helping curb the influence which, left unbridled, will enslave our people economically. We want to live a free people and are willing to war for that right.

Mr. PATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 1 additional minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX. I yield to the gentlewoman.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I know in the last session of Congress the gentleman from Georgia was very anxious to have us given full and complete advice as to how we stood regarding national defense. He was not successful. We felt speed, more speed, was needed for our Nation's defense. I tried, as did others, to have that information given to us. I introduced a number of resolutions of inquiry for that express purpose. I know the gentleman in the next session of Congress will insist that we be given full information.

Mr. COX. I think the President should, of course, work in close cooperation with the Congress.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Regarding what is going on in Europe, also the Near East and the Far East and in the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. COX. I think there should be a single mind and a single thought on this whole subject.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. COX. With pleasure.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, in making that statement the gentleman recognizes, and I am sure the gentlewoman from Massachusetts recognizes, that there are some things that are not compatible with public interest to make public.

Mr. COX. Why, of course, I do.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has again expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, the trouble with the fireside chat and the thing that bothers real Americans is this: Is it a cloak to cover up the deficiencies of our production of defense supplies? Is it a cloak to cover up the deficiencies which are delaying the construction of cantonments for months and months? That is the thing that bothers real patriotic Americans. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LEWIS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE PANAMA CANAL

Mr. LEWIS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, on December 21, 1940, I returned from a trip to the Panama Canal Zone, where I spent 4 days. I am sure that all of us recognize that the Panama Canal is the life line of the Nation, not only in a commercial sense but in a military and naval sense as well. With a one-ocean navy and the imminent possibility of having to face naval enemies in two oceans, the Panama Canal affords us the only means of quickly shifting our naval forces from one ocean to another to meet whichever threat is most imminent. It is therefore in a military and naval sense an absolutely vital link in our national defense.

I had previously visited the Canal before Congress had appropriated the hundreds of millions of dollars that have since been authorized or appropriated for its defense, and because I realize that the Canal is such a vital link in our chain of national defense I was anxious to see what progress has been made in its protection. I found the Canal Zone a beehive of activity, with barracks for troops being erected in many parts of the zone and defense works of many kinds in process of construction. I had hoped to see the work of defense much further advanced than it is. It will be months yet before the protective works are completed. Fortresses already existing mount 14-inch and 16-inch guns at both entrances to the Canal, and these in time of war would doubtless be supplemented by mine fields and other defense works, so that an attack by surface ships upon the Canal is practically out of the question.

The rugged terrain on both sides of the Canal for hundreds of miles, covered as it is with tropical jungles and practically completely devoid of highways, or even trails, makes a successful attack from the land almost impossible. The danger to the Canal, therefore, in my opinion, and in the opinion of the military authorities on the grounds with whom I talked, will come from an air attack which will seek to block the Canal by either destroying the locks or the dams that hold back the waters of Gatun Lake or Miraflores Lake, or both. The planes making such an attack could come from an airplane carrier protected by warships and lying several hundred miles at sea in either ocean, or the planes could come from land bases such as the island of Martinique, where a hundred American-made bombers destined for France were taken after the collapse of France last spring. The existence of those bombers at the island of Martinique consitutes a serious potential threat to the safety of the Canal.

There are also in certain Central American and South American countries landing fields for airplanes already constructed, and while no known force of bombing planes is located on any of these fields it might be possible for a potential enemy to transport planes to such fields by means of some of the commerce raiders that are now known to be at sea. It might also be possible for enemy agents to transform existing commercial airplanes into bombers for an attack upon the Canal.

Existing means for defense against an attack from the air consist first of antiaircraft batteries placed at strategic intervals throughout the Canal Zone. These batteries, however, for the most part consist of guns not of the most modern and effective type. Every battery of antiaircraft guns in the Canal Zone should consist of the very latest and best types of antiaircraft guns available. That change should be made immediately.

The other means of defense against bombing from the air is, of course, pursuit planes for the purpose of destroying or driving off an attacking fleet of bombers. In this means of defense the Canal is almost wholly lacking. It is true that there is a force of pursuit and fighter planes in the Canal Zone, but these planes are not of the latest type and their effectivenes against the latest type bombers is very doubtful. Their speed is not the speed of the latest type, and speed in the air as well as armament seems to be the determining factor of air battles. If there is one place in our whole system of national defense where we should have an overwhelming force of the most modern pursuit and fighter planes it is the Canal Zone. Congress should see to it that this vital defect in the defense of the Canal is remedied at once.

In this connection it should be stated that the fortified area around the Canal is entirely too restricted. The Canal Zone consists of a strip of land running across the Isthmus of Panama approximately 10 miles in width. For the successful operation of the Canal in peacetime that width is entirely adequate, but for the adequate protection of the Canal against attacks from the air by modern bombers that now fly at a speed of 350 miles per hour a 10-mile-wide zone is nothing. The United States should proceed immediately to acquire from the Government of Panama the right to fortify strategic points for a distance of at least 300 miles on each side of the Canal. Until this is done it cannot be said that we have adequate protection for the Canal against raids from the air. The acquisition of strategic areas for fortification in the Republic of Panama will, of course, have to be worked out with the authorities of that Republic, but it should be done immediately.

Perhaps the most serious and imminent danger to the Canal, however, is from sabotage. The Canal Zone is, of course, the crossroads of the Western Hemisphere. Upon the Canal converge all steamship lines from east to west. The ships of every nation use the Canal for transit between the oceans. At one time I counted from the air over the Canal 12 ocean steamers anchored off the Pacific end of the Canal awaiting transit and within a few minutes I was able to count an almost equal number anchored off the Atlantic end of the Canal awaiting transit in the other direction. Because it is a crossroads of the western world the population of the Canal Zone is made up of people of practically every race and nationality. In such a polyglot population it is very easy for spies and saboteurs to conceal their identities. It is not too much to say that the Canal Zone and the Panamanian territory adjacent thereto is a hotbed of international spying and intrigue and potential saboteurs. Precautions have naturally been taken by the American authorities charged with the protection of the Canal against possible acts of sabotage. High woven-wire fences surmounted by barbed wire enclose all such vital areas as the locks and dams. Constant guard is maintained both day and night in all such areas. At one time the slopes of Gatun Dam were used as a public golf links. No such use is now permitted. I was informed that only those having official business inside the forbidden areas are permitted to enter, and yet while I was there an exception was made in behalf of certain civilian unofficial guests and they were permitted to see the most secret points of certain vital areas. Doubtless no harm was done by this one exception to the general rule, as I am sure that these unofficial guests were and are loyal, patriotic, and discreet, but the disturbing thing in this instance to me was that there would be any relaxation, especially in times like these, of this most salutary precaution for the protection of the Canal. The disturbing thing is that if the precaution was relaxed in this instance it might as readily be relaxed for some other plausible but unofficial reason advanced by some clever person bent upon sabotage.

It is, of course, a credit to the Canal authorities that when it was learned by them that this exception had been made there was more or less consternation among them and on subsequent days there was no other relaxation of the rule.

Of all the dangers threatening the Canal, the military authorities in charge fear sabotage the most, and, of course, no precaution against sabotage should be omitted and no relaxation of those precautions should be permitted under any circumstances so long as the present critical situation exists in the world.

I should not close this report to Congress on what I learned at Panama without telling you of a most unfortunate situation that exists with respect to the Government of Panama. The present President of Panama is anti-American and a pro-Nazi in his sympathies. Although he has been in office but a few months he has initiated and procured the adoption of a new constitution along Nazi or Fascist lines. This constitution was approved by a vote of the people of Panama on Sunday, December 15, the day I left Cristobal. I saw the process by which this change was brought about. The polling places were tables placed on the open sidewalks. The voters formed long lines awaiting their turns to vote. There was no secrecy about the ballot. As the voter approached the table, at which the election officers appointed by the President were seated, he was asked whether he wanted to vote for or against the adoption of the constitution. A red ballot was for the adoption of the new constitution and a blue ballot against it. He made his choice known to the Government officials and was given then the ballot which he asked for. Naturally, under such a procedure, threats of reprisals against those who opposed the change in the constitution had tremendous effect and the constitution was overwhelmingly adopted.

The Panama-American, the newspaper published at the city of Panama by Hernando Arias, a former President of the Republic of Panama and a brother of the present President, carried the story while I was in Panama of the appointment by the President of a certain Dr. Brunner from Vienna, Austria, as an adviser in city planning for the Republic of Panama. The story also stated that Dr. Brunner was a member of the Nazi Party of Germany, and in addition to being an expert on city planning he was also an expert aerial photographer. It was further stated that Dr. Brunner had said in an interview that one of the first steps he expected to take in laying out a plan for the cities of Panama was to make an aerial map of the areas under discussion. The areas in question are the cities of Colon, at the Atlantic end of the Canal, which is immediately contiguous to the American city of Cristobal, built within the Canal Zone and only about 4 miles distant from the Gatun locks on the Canal, and the city of Panama, located on the Pacific side and immediately contiguous to the American city of Balboa in the Canal Zone and but 2 or 3 miles distant from the Miraflores locks on the Canal.

The evident purpose of the appointment of Dr. Brunner is to enable the Nazis to obtain aerial photographs of the Canal and the locks. The ostensible purpose of his appointment as a city planner is but the thinnest kind of camouflage for its real purpose. Anyone who has visited the Canal and who has seen the cities of Colon and Panama City can understand that there is no problem of city planning presented by either of these cities. Their populations are small, their areas for expansion are unlimited. There is no problem of crowding or of the necessity for making the most of a limited space.

The American military authorities are tremendously disturbed by the appointment of Dr. Brunner and what he proposes to do and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this Nazi spy must at all costs be prevented from making aerial photographs of the Panama Canal and its locks, or adjacent terrain. I sincerely trust that the officials of our Government who are entrusted with the safety of the Canal see to it that the contemplated action of Dr. Brunner shall not be taken.

I shall not be a Member of the Seventy-seventh Congress, but, Mr. Speaker, I sincerely trust that those of you who are will take whatever action is necessary to the end that this life line and vital link in our national defense shall be made impregnable. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 8 minutes.

SELFISHNESS OR WORSE—ARE WE SLACKERS?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, back of the war talk, behind the drive for aid to Britain, is a potent, powerful force which we seem to have ignored. It is secret, yet almost universal. All seem to have a little of it; some appear to be controlled by it. It can be described in one word—selfishness.

Workers in factories, in cantonments, on projects, and in those industries having to do with national defense, as a rule, are demanding higher wages. They are demanding pay and a half and double pay for overtime and holidays.

Unions are taking advantage of the situation to sell permits to work, which, of course, they have no right to do—a practice which is not only lawless but vicious, and which the legislative authorities seem to lack the courage to stop.

EVERYONE WANTS HIS

Industrialists and businessmen—everyone who has anything to sell—are looking for a higher price. You and I, consciously or unconsciously, perhaps, all too often are wiggling and twisting, wondering whether a real-estate speculation, a purchase of stock or bonds, or some other business transaction, carried on with the war as a background, may not return to us a profit over and above that which we ordinarily would be able to get.

This selfishness, which is characteristic of no particular group or class, which is common to all of us, has not been given the credit due it, nor has its full influence been recognized.

I have talked with farmers about the war, and far too often somewhere in the conversation, after the horrors of war and its cost and its uselessness have all been recognized, has come the question, What will the effect be on the price of farm products?

Many times businessmen seeking war orders, discussing this, that, or the other, have revealed a determination that, if money is to be spent, if profits are to be made, they intend to get their share of it.

SELFISHNESS OR SABOTAGE?

It is to be hoped that it is selfishness, or, to put it in more palatable form, a desire to improve one's condition—a laudable ambition—that is back of the present labor troubles, threats to strike, and strikes which are hindering our national-defense program.

If it is not selfishness or, as stated, a desire to better one's condition, the only other apparent cause is a desire to aid the enemy, who would prevent preparations for adequate national defense.

STRIKES HOLDING UP DELIVERY OF SHAFTING FOR NAVY

When last the House met your attention was called to the threatened strike at the Allis-Chalmers Co. plant at Milwaukee, which has under construction for the United States Navy $18,000,000 worth of turbine and shafting, and which was threatened with a strike by the C. I. O. if two A. F. of L. workers were restored to their jobs. Such a strike is an absurdity. The threat of a strike for such a reason is preposterous.

MASS PICKET LINE

Under date of December 31 we learned that at Fort Wayne, Ind., where the International Harvester Co. is working on defense orders, 3,300 employees are thrown out of work by a strike. We learned that a picket line of 2,000, including the wives of some of the strikers, has been established around the plant. Does anyone labor under the delusion that a picket line of 2,000 around a plant of that size is peaceful picketing?

THREATENED STRIKE AT FLINT, SCENE OF SIT-DOWN

Under date of January 1 and a Flint, Mich., date line we find a United Press dispatch stating that approximately 12,000 employees at Chevrolet plant No. 9, engaged in the production of motors for Army trucks, will vote next week as to whether they will go on strike.

The coming week the President will probably ask Congress for the appropriation of anywhere from one to three billion dollars for national-defense orders or for aid to Britain.

LESS MUNITIONS FOR SAME MONEY

Let us assume that $100 buys one rifle. If labor organizations so arrange it that pay and a half or double pay must be paid to the men manufacturing those rifles, it necessarily follows that $500 will not buy five rifles, but four and one-half or three and one-third or less, depending on the amount of time and a half and double time that the men work.

The extra cost to the taxpayer growing out of limited hours and time and a half and double time for overtime cannot be estimated. It runs into billions or more. It means, too, a material lessening in the quantity of matériel produced. It means, therefore, a curtailment of our defense program.

Likewise advances in the prices of material bring the same result. So, too, will the demand for excessive prices of the finished product.

WHETHER SABOTAGE OR SELFISHNESS, REMEDY NEEDED

The result is the same whether these various activities be caused by selfishness or by desire to aid our enemies or defeat our defense program.

Several remedies have been suggested. One is the outlawing of strikes. Another is the fixing of prices. Another is the drafting of industrial plants and workers.

DICTATORSHIP

It is quite certain that if our national existence is in danger there must be unity of effort. Throughout the past 8 years this administration, by teaching that employees and employers were necessarily enemies, has created a situation where drastic remedies appear to be necessary. The administration itself and through the Senate Civil Liberties Committee, the National Labor Relations Board, and various other governmental agencies, has created in the minds of businessmen and industrialists a suspicion that they will not be fairly treated. It has caused labor organizations and labor organizers to believe that the strong arm of the Government will be extended to aid them in their organizing drives, and that they will receive privileges over and above those available to other citizens.

The result is that now, in this time of at least apparent if not real emergency, we may find ourselves compelled to submit to dictatorial methods and measures.

If men are to be drafted for military service, there are many of us who can see no reason why men should not be drafted for industrial service; no reason why all should not be compelled by law to contribute the financial sinews of war for the common good.

RIGHT TO STRIKE

There are those who say the right to strike shall not be taken from labor. There are others who insist that industrial plants shall not be taken over by the Government. But again if men are to be taken from their homes, put into camps, and forced to face the enemy's guns, there would seem to be no reason why those who remain should not render service when and where and to the extent necessary for the preservation of our Government.

UNITY

We should all be riding in the same boat together and, if it can stem the tide and, by the efforts of all, reach a safe port, well and good. If, on the other hand, it is to be swept over the falls, then all should go down together.

DICTATORSHIP BY THE PEOPLE

Advocating a dictatorship, you say? If that be necessary. But let it be a dictatorship, not of the executive branch, not a dictatorship imposed by a President, for he has no such authority and he should be impeached if he tries to impose one—but of the people, through their representatives; a dictatorship for the people.

Let whatever measures are necessary for the preservation of our union originate and be made law by the people's representatives, the Congress of the United States.

CONGRESS LAYING DOWN ON THE JOB

Too long has Congress ignored the situation, refused to act. Certainly the destiny of our Nation does not rest in the hands of one man. If we refuse to deal with the situation in this coming Congress and to do it promptly and effectively; if we fail to enact and put into force the legislation necessary to give us adequate national preparedness, to meet danger from without and from within, then by our inaction we acknowledge our incompetency or our lack of courage, and we should resign our offices and let the people select representatives equal to the task which confronts the Nation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in the RECORD a radio speech by our colleague the gentlewoman from Ohio [Mrs. BOLTON].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under special order previously made, the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I thought today, when a number of special orders were asked for, that most of the Members who asked for those special orders were going to discuss the so-called report of the Federal Reserve Board, to which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] made reference. Since that has not taken place and since this is a matter which calls for most careful thought on the part of every Member of Congress, I do not propose to say most of the things I had asked for this time to say. I do want to say one or two things, however.

And first let me say that if the Federal Reserve Board were, as it ought to be, an agent of Congress controlling the monetary system of this Nation through a public institution and solely in the public interest, we could view this matter differently from what we can do at present. For at present the Board, though appointed by the President, runs an essentially private business. The 12 central Federal Reserve banks are owned completely by the private member banks of the System, and increases in the Board's powers therefore will always be likewise increases in the power of those privately owned banks until we do what should have been done in the first place, namely, make the 12 central Federal Reserve banks the property of the people of the United States.

Turning to the Board's recommendations, I certainly think we have got to consider the many problems connected with our present monetary system. There should be adequate means in someone's hands of preventing inflation. But from the standpoint of conditions at present, I believe strongly that the Board's proposition is premature. The price level at present is not yet back to 80 percent of the price level of 1926. We are very far from full employment as yet. I do not understand why we should get in such a panic every time there is danger of our getting full employment and restoring the price level for basic commodities, but do not correspondingly get excited when a deflation takes place which deprives real wealth of a great proportion of its value with reference to money and causes loss of employment and foreclosure of farms.

I think that one of our difficulties is that we are the victims of what Prof. Irving Fisher calls the "money illusion." We think that property rises and falls in value. We think, for example, that there is less nourishment in the crops you get off the farm in one period than in another, and so with other real wealth, when as a matter of fact, what happens is not that real wealth is worth more or less but that the volume of money is contracted or expanded, and thus each dollar changes in its value relative to real wealth. It is a strange thing that whenever real wealth is rising in value and the dollar declining in purchasing power there is general alarm and concern, whereas when the dollar is becoming dearer and real wealth declining in dollar value, we think a very salutary process is taking place and that somehow we are being punished for some mysterious past misdeeds.

The truth is, of course, that inflation and deflation are both evils to be avoided like the plague, but if one is worse than the other for the people generally and their industry it certainly is deflation.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Farm prices are about 50 percent of what they were in 1926. At that time cotton was 22 cents a pound; now it is around 10 cents or less. I think if the gentleman will investigate, he will find that the price of wheat at that time was $1.50 or $1.75 a bushel, whereas today it is probably down to 70 cents.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. That is true, and I am thankful to the gentleman from Mississippi for his contribution, for it strengthens the point I was trying to make.

I should like to warn that these proposals of the Board are illustrative of many, many things and food for much more thought than appears on the surface, and they will require the most careful study of every one of us. I do not propose to try to make an exhaustive speech, obviously, on so important a subject today. I do want to point out, however, that the Board's recommendations propose that the power of the President to issue $3,000,000,000 of money should be revoked. Why? Basically, because the Board knows, as does everyone else, that the putting of that money into circulation would increase reserves in the banks and thus increase the chance of bank credit inflation at some future time. For every single one of those banks has power to create credit on the basis of fractional cash reserves according to our present law.

As it is, therefore, there would be a multiple expansion, for so long as the fractional reserve system exists the banks themselves can exercise what should be the sovereign right of Congress to create money which the Constitution says belongs to Congress, and to it alone. So the Board wants to take this power from the President mainly, I think, because this money-creating power is exercised by the private banking system.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from California that this power in the hands of the President to issue $3,000,000,000 of currency is the greatest club that could be placed in the hands of the President to forestall such a panic as the Federal Reserve System brought about in 1920.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am inclined to believe that it may have operated that way.

To further illustrate my point and to show why the Board asks for power to increase reserve requirements, as well as for abolition of the President's authority, let me point out that the Board has asked that no more Treasury bonds be sold to banks, but that they be sold to individuals and corporations instead. Here again the reason is that if such Treasury bonds are sold to banks the banks create new money in the form of deposits to buy them with.

In this connection I read the last paragraph of an Associated Press article on the subject:

> Experts explained that when a bank buys a Treasury bond the Treasury spends the proceeds, the recipients deposit the money, and this tends to double the volume of bank deposits. However, if an individual or corporation buys the bond, he must first withdraw money from a bank to pay for the security, and this offsets the new deposits to be made by persons receiving Treasury cash.

That is just what I have been saying all these years, but the article is a little ambiguous, as most of these articles are. The point is that when a bank buys a Government bond it simultaneously creates a deposit with which to buy the bond, thus creating in each private bank in effect a little mint. Then the bond becomes security for the deposit and can, in fact, be used as collateral for an issue of Federal Reserve notes. The Board proposes that bonds be not sold to banks because it does not want an expansion of the money. It suggests sales to individuals and corporations. I would point out, however, that, although in such a case the individual or the nonfinancial corporation cannot, of course, create money to buy the bond with and must originally draw from a deposit or supply cash with which to make the purchase, nevertheless, as long as we permit Government bonds to be used as collateral for Federal Reserve notes and leave the fractional reserve system in effect, the purchaser of a bond can take it to a bank and borrow against the bond and the bank can make the loan out of a newly created deposit.

The only point I want to stress at the moment is that with various monetary powers existing in the Federal Reserve System, the President, the Secretary of the Treasury, and every private bank in this country you have a complex and jumbled pattern of attempted control over your monetary system that simply cannot work effectively. It seems to me that what the Board should propose, instead of withdrawal of this one power from the President, is a clear-cut establishment of a 100-percent safe, 100-percent workable, 100-percent controllable monetary system by establishing over a reasonable period of time dollar-for-dollar reserves behind demand deposits. It is, in my opinion, a very difficult thing for many of the smaller banks to be confronted from time to time with changes in reserve requirements. I am convinced they would be better off if we provided now the means of enabling and requiring all banks to establish 100-percent reserves. This could be done under present circumstances without any disturbing effect, for the volume of excess and required reserves, plus the Government bond holdings of the banks, are, in my opinion, very close to the total of their demand deposits. Certain things would have to be done, of course, to assist the banks in covering their deposits. It would simply mean that there would have to be sufficient cash to cover those demand deposits, but it could be done without harm. Earnest and careful consideration should be given to this 100 percent reserve proposition. And I should like to add that if the banks are permitted to count Government bonds as part of their reserves, and if gradually as the bonds mature they are redeemed or retired simply by replacing them with new cash for reserves, then, in effect, we will have provided for orderly and easy retirement of a great portion of the public debt. Nor could the slightest inflation take place when the new money was created to retire the bonds for the cash would simply replace the bonds as part of legal reserves.

If we have finally come to the place where we really desire to solve this problem, then, in my judgment, what we have got to come to is the setting up of an agency, one agency under the direct control of the Congress of the United States, to exercise in an orderly fashion and according to definite congressional mandate the central economic function of maintaining a dollar of stable purchasing power in the United States. If we would view the whole problem from this standpoint, then, for the first time, it seems to me we would get a better and clearer understanding of these most difficult matters that are so often brought to our attention, and we might arrive at a monetary system which would not only be completely dependable but would make possible continuous expansion of production without periodic inflation and deflation.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to conclude by saying that as far as the Board's recommendation regarding taxes is concerned, it seems to be clear that we will have to have higher taxes, that they should be raised gradually, that they should be raised until the Budget is ultimately balanced, and I am in fundamental agreement with that. However, I would stress that the all-important matter from that standpoint is an increase in the production of wealth and an increase of employment in order to bring about a situation where we are operating our economy on the basis of full production of wealth, because unless we do that first the tax revenues will not be forthcoming. So I come back to where I started from and say I do not believe that any deflationary influences should be put into effect, at least not until such time as we have every man at work and every factory working at full capacity.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] is recognized for 6 minutes.

WELFARE OF NATION

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, a happy New Year to all. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, when the majority leader makes the motion that the House do now adjourn and the Speaker's gavel falls, that will be the end of the Seventy-sixth Congress. That will be the first time in history that a Congress has adjourned because it outlived its time, or because it died for lack of more time. It has run the length of days allotted by law. In the year 1940, a continuous session of 366 days.

We ought to consider whether the Congress that adjourns today and dies tomorrow at 12 o'clock noon a natural death, a Congress that has not adjourned sine die, has been a good Congress. Are you satisfied with all the things you did during the Seventy-sixth Congress, This is a question that ought to be considered very seriously by every Member of the House so that he will not do something during the Seventy-seventh Congress that he was dissatisfied with during the Seventy-sixth. A good time to make a New Year's resolution.

When I came in here today a couple of Members of the House, and I do not know whether they did this seriously or in jest, asked me the question whether I was going to ask the House, Where are you going to get the money? So far as I am concerned, I did not make any New Year's resolution that I would not ask that question during the next session of the Congress. I believe it is a serious question and one which needs the earnest consideration of good statesmen and the very greatest consideration should be given to that particular question by every Member of the House of Representatives, not simply as a monetary proposition, but from the standpoint of the welfare and the good of America. To me it is an essential question, a difficult question to answer. However, a most important question.

Mr. Speaker, when I think of the exorbitant expenditures of the last session, not only for the routine operation of the Government, but the expenditures that have been requested for national defense, it causes me to shudder and ask myself whether we have done the right thing for the perpetuation of American ideals, the perpetuation of the form of government which we enjoy, and for the perpetuation of the good that may accrue to our children and our children's children for all time.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Just for a question.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman asked, Where are you going to get the money? Where would the gentleman suggest we get the money? I would like him to discuss that matter.

Mr. RICH. That is a question I can answer very quickly for the most part. I would say, economize in the expenditure of Government funds. I will take the floor at some time in the future to explain that more fully. I have done so in the past many, many times on the floor of the House. I will continue to do so for 2 more years, the Lord being my helper. I asked for this time today not because I want to take a few minutes during the closing hours of this session of Congress, but because I have in my heart and in my mind the great benefit that it means to this country to do just that.

We have talked a lot during the past 2 or 3 years—that is American neutrality and keep America out of war. The very first question that will be brought up during the first session of the Seventy-seventh Congress will be national defense. What for? For the protection of whom? Why, the American people. I am interested in the protection of the American people because I believe in America, and I believe in the American form of government more than I believe in any other people on the face of the earth. I want to do everything I can to preserve our ideals. But when we talk about neutrality, and then hear the fireside chat which we heard on Sunday, a day given over to religious worship, and when I think that the President of the United States chose that time to talk about what is essential for our benefit to protect this country in case of war, in my opinion that was an ill-chosen time.

Then we heard the request for aid to Great Britain on Sunday night. What kind of aid? Was it for food, clothing, and things to make the people happy and contented? No; sorry to say, it was for cannon, tanks, powder, dynamite, submarines, war vessels, TNT—anything that will kill, murder, shoot, annihilate. Where is our good-neighbor policy? Where is the Golden Rule—"Do unto others as ye would that men should do unto you"—exemplified in war? War is hell as it is conducted in Europe today. Hell on earth for those people engaged in it. I quite agree with Senator WHEELER, of Montana, that we should offer all aid and assistance to try to settle the differences if it can be done by arbitration, by peaceful methods, by kindness, before we commit acts of war that will bring trouble, that will bring hardships, anguish, and destruction to our American Government and desperation to our American people. God grant that we be kept from such hell on earth as the aerial warfare now being conducted in Europe.

Let us try, first, to stop the war. Do not try to get into war. Do not let war prosperity fool us into thinking it is good for American business, American jobs. It is anything but that, as time will only reveal. Do not let it fool you into thinking it will cover up the errors of the past 10 years and that they will be forgotten. To get into war will wreck America forever and set up a dictatorship absolute. Stop un-American activities by placing any person who would destroy our Government that may be in our midst in concentration camps, and do it at once. Do not procrastinate.

When I heard the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], a few moments ago, make the statement that, in effect, the President's fireside chat, and I quote, "was a Presidential declaration of war," I say that we are confronted at the present time with a serious situation. I say we do not want any Presidential declaration of war. You should not permit it. You have been elected by your people to do your duty to them and to this country sincerely and fearlessly. You should not be persuaded by anybody but your own conscience and by the constituents you represent. I have many constituents in my district who say, "Loan, lend, spend, and do everything you can to help somebody else," but I say my first obligation, my first duty, and my first principle is to protect and defend America and have our own defenses prepared before we give anything away to some foreign country.

Mr. Speaker, now that we are about to adjourn, this Congress ought to reflect on what it did during the past 2 years and resolve that those things it does in the future will be for the benefit of our country, our people, and our flag. God save America! Give us peace, happiness, and love for all mankind. Guide our every act and deed for the good of all is my prayer. I now adjourn this Congress, so far as I am concerned, sine die.

[Here the gavel fell.]

MINORITY VIEWS OF HOUSE COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING THE LABOR BOARD AND WAGNER ACT

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the gentleman from Utah, Congressman MURDOCK, and myself the minority members of the House Committee Investigating the Labor Board and Wagner Act, I had intended to request special permission from this House to prepare and issue a detailed report after the close of this session. This was made necessary by the action of the majority in filing a voluminous report only 4 days ago. Of course, we are not in accord with all of the views expressed in the majority report. I understand, however, that under the rules we cannot be permitted to file our report after midnight tonight. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the minority members of this committee may have until midnight tonight to file our minority views, which must, because of these circumstances, be expressed in summary fashion. It is our intention, however, to make known in detail our conclusions with respect to the investigation of this committee, although this future report must necessarily lack formal status.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts? There is no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein an article I have written for a magazine.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

THE UNITED STATES AND THE EUROPEAN WAR

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time in order to reply very briefly to the statement made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] in his interpretation of the President's fireside chat. He said very frankly on the floor of the House that he interpreted it as a Presidential declaration of war. I listened to that fireside address, and I approve of it. I believe the President made one of the soundest and most forceful addresses he has ever made to the American people. I do not interpret any part of the President's radio speech as a declaration of war. Nothing he said in that address could possibly be construed as asking this country to go to war.

The President very properly served notice upon the dictator nations, upon the Axis Powers, that we would continue with our own American foreign policy regardless of threats from them. I interpret it to be sound American doctrine when he said that we would continue to aid Great Britain short of war, that we would provide more than we have in the past, that we would increase our production, and that we would give additional priority to Great Britain, all of which is short of war, short of war under our own law, under international law, and under the Constitution.

As the President well pointed out, Sweden and Soviet Russia have been supplying Germany with arms and ammunition during this war, and for years Germany has likewise been supplying belligerent nations with arms, ammunition, and airplanes—all of which is under and within well-recognized principles of international law.

If the gentleman from Georgia wants to raise the issue of war or peace, then let us raise it right now, but openly and aboveboard. Ninety percent of the American people are opposed to our entrance into a war unless we are attacked. On the other hand, 90 percent are in favor of aid to Great Britain short of war, but they are not in favor of aid to Great Britain when it means short cuts to war, or where it means short of peace.

In the next Congress there will be one great issue that will transcend all party lines—that will be greater than any political party or both parties combined—because it affects the security and destiny of America and the safety of its people. This issue will be, Shall we participate in this war or shall we stay out? If the Members of Congress represent their constituents, 90 percent of whom want us to stay out of war, they will not vote for war in the next Congress; but if we listen to the siren, warlike voices of the 10 percent and of the big international press of the East and those who are urging by every possible means, not measures short of war but short cuts to war, then we will be in the war in the next Congress. After all, we of Congress are the ones who must decide, with the advice of our constituents back home, whether or not we will be involved.

I agree, however, with the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] when he said, and properly so, that there is no such thing as a half-way war. If we are involved in war, it will be a total war—a war on all continents. Millions of American soldiers will be sent to the battlefields of China, Africa, and Europe. I know no other kind of war. If war is declared by Congress, then I expect to enlist. I hope to serve if war is declared, but God forbid that we become involved. I know no other way to fight or to wage war except to final victory. That means a total war, no matter what the expense, whether it is $200,000,000,000 or whether it takes a million lives. I predict that if we are involved in a war, it may mean that children yet unborn may be fighting in that war, and that the lives of millions of American soldiers will be sacrificed on many foreign battlefields—in Europe, in China, and in Africa.

So before we decide this issue of war or peace, I want to state that I believe that the speech of the President was sound American doctrine, asking for nothing more than aid to Britain short of war. But if he should ask the Congress for a modification of the Neutrality Act to permit our ships to go on the high seas into the war zones and to escort or convoy British ships, then everybody knows that would be virtually an act of war, as our ships will be torpedoed and we will then be in the war within a few months' time. However, the President made no such suggestion. I take this opportunity to contradict the interpretation made on the President's speech by the gentleman from Georgia, and I believe the next Congress will reflect the opinion of the American people and keep this country out of war. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members be granted until midnight tonight to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain remarks made at the celebration of Pan American Aviation Day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 7965. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Ramsey;

H. R. 10712. An act to permit the relinquishment or modification of certain restrictions upon the use of lands along the Natchez Trace Parkway in the village of French Camp, Miss.; and

H. J. Res. 623. Joint resolution to extend the date for filing a report by the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Thomas Jefferson.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President for his approval bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 7965. An act for the relief of Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Ramsey.

H. R. 10712. An act to permit the relinquishment or modification of certain restrictions upon the use of lands along the Natchez Trace Parkway in the village of French Camp, Miss.

H. J. Res. 623. Joint Resolution to extend the date for filing a report by the United States Commission for the Celebration of the Two Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of Thomas Jefferson.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 4085. An act for the relief of Max von der Porten and his wife Charlotte von der Porten;

S. 4227. An act for the relief of Herbert Zucker, Emma Zucker, Hanni Zucker, Dorrit Claire Zucker, and Martha Hirsch; and

S. 4415. An act to amend the act entitled "An act in relation to pandering, to define and prohibit the same, and to provide for the punishment thereof," approved June 25, 1910.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

APPROVAL OF HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SUBSEQUENT TO FINAL ADJOURNMENT

The President of the United States, subsequent to the final adjournment of the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, notified the Clerk of the House of Representatives that on the following dates he approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

December 30, 1940:

SENATE

FRIDAY, JANUARY 3, 1941

(Legislative day of Tuesday, November 19, 1940)

The Senate met in its Chamber at 11:30 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Vice President.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Creator of all things visible and invisible, who art without beginning or end of days: Into Thy holy keeping we commit ourselves this day as the sum of our endeavors in this momentous period of time is completed. Do Thou bless and strengthen all that hath been ably done; pardon whatever hath been left undone or done amiss and grant, as we stand upon the threshold of a new emprise, that we may learn wisdom from the past and find the comfort of Thy leading in the future.

As we review the past we find no uniformity in days, for Thou didst touch some of them with shadow, allowing others to pass all shimmering with laughter, till, like the sea wave chased by cloud or sun, they broke in foam to pass away in the music of a sigh along Time's beaten sand. So teach us, dear Lord, to number our days that we may ever apply our hearts unto wisdom. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day of Thursday, January 2, 1941, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

PETITION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the petition of George Rublee, Dean Acheson, and sundry other citizens of the United States, praying that full, prompt, and effective aid be extended by the United States to Great Britain and Allies in the present European conflict, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	Johnson, Colo.	Sheppard
Andrews	Davis	King	Smathers
Austin	Downey	La Follette	Stewart
Ball	Ellender	Lee	Taft

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] are necessarily absent.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

COMMITTEE SERVICE

On motion of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] be excused from further service as chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and that he be appointed chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to fill the existing vacancy.

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION—ROBERT WATT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, there is nothing in the legislative program demanding attention at the moment; but I desire to complete the confirmation of nominations pending. Therefore I ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, for the consideration of the only nomination on the Executive Calendar—that of Mr. Robert Watt, of Massachusetts, to be a member of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky? The Chair hears none. The nomination will be read.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert Watt to be a member of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, to serve for the duration of the term expiring July 16, 1941.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Watt.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. In the absence of any important business, I ask that the Senate stand in recess until 5 minutes before 12.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Thereupon (at 11 o'clock and 43 minutes a. m.) the Senate took a recess until 11:55 o'clock a. m., when it reassembled.

The third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress expired automatically, under constitutional limitation, when the hour of 12 o'clock arrived.

CONFIRMATION

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate January 3 (legislative day, November 19, 1940), 1941

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

Robert Watt to be a member of the Federal Board for Vocational Education.
